When morning came again I made a more thorough investigation of the cabin. In rear of the captain's stateroom I chanced upon a closet which had escaped me the day before, and here I made a great find. There was about $1,000 in French gold and notes, $1,200 in English goldpieces and exactly $7,000 in goldpieces just struck off at the Australian mint. The money was in two tin boxes, but whether it belonged to the ship, her captain or to other people I could not determine. It was a big fortune to a poor sailor, and I remember that I acted very foolishly ever the find. I counted it over and over again, and when I at last realized that I was rich I rushed on deck, with a wild hope of seeing a mail ship at hand. But for the money I believe that the long days and nights which followed would have been rather contentful for me. Isolated as the situation was, I had plenty to eat and drink, there was nothing to break my sleep, the wreck might drive where she would, but there was no danger of her going down. The discovery of the money was followed by a hope of rescue, and this again by worry and anxiety. I wanted to go ashore to enjoy my wealth. I feared that when rescue did come I should be robbed. I conjured up a thousand senseless fears, and the upshot was anything but beneficial. I have spoken of the general situation in a careless way. As a matter of fact, being a navigator, I took observations regularly when the weather permitted and picked off the drift of the wreck on the chart. On the average the weather was fine, but there were days and nights when gale and sea tumbled the waterlogged craft about until only a miller could have lived through it. Instead of lifting her the waves ran over her, and at such times the decks were two feet under water and the cabin was flooded. The cargo was afloat with the water in the hold, and as the wreck rolled and pitched the timbers rubbed together and produced noises which would have frightened landmen into fits.

I kept an accurate reckoning, and I had been on the wreck just 49 days when I caught sight of my first sail. No doubt ships had passed and repassed me by day and night, but I could set no signal by day and from the first I slept all through the night. This sail was discovered early one morning, coming up from the south, and her course was such that she must see me. I had put the money into bags and the bags into bundles of clothing in view of a rescue, and therefore had nothing to do but wait. The stranger, which proved to be an English merchantman bound for India, but considerably off her course, was within four miles of me and had sent a signal to gladden my heart when a big whale suddenly broke water close to the wreck. He was followed half a minute later by a second, which attacked him with great fury. The monsters put up a terrific battle, lashing and biting each other and kicking up a sea like a gale of wind. They at first drew away from me, but after a few minutes made a circle which brought them back. What I had feared from the first came to pass after a quarter of an hour. Half blinded by pain and fury, or feeling itself overwhelmed and desirous of getting away, one of the whales suddenly whirled about and came for the wreck head on. He was fully 80 feet long, and he came like a moving mountain. I made sure of my hold as I saw him coming, but he struck the wreck on her port side with such force that I was thrown across the deck and into the sea beyond. I heard the crash of planks and timbers, was tossed about by the waves, rubbed against the whale as he rounded and reached the surface to find the wreck a hull no longer. It was simply a heap of floating debris. The strange ship drew nearer, lowered a boat, and I was picked up as I clung to a plank. The money was gone, all else but the timbers which composed the cargo had disappeared, and my adventure, surprising as it had begun, had ended in a manner strange enough to satisfy even the most imaginative novelist. I was carried to India by the rescuing ship, and I know that the French consul at Calcutta set inquiries on foot regarding the fate of the crew of the Marie. What they amounted to I never learned, but have always felt satisfied that all perished when their craft was dismantled. But for the fight between the whales I believe the brig could have been pumped out and sailed into port, but fortune is a jade who robs Jack Tar far oftener than she smiles upon him.

A Friendly Politeness.

Jinks—What! You don't mean to say you are engaged to the beautiful Miss de Pink?

Blinks—Yes, I do. Got engaged to her last night. This afternoon I am to bring her into town. She wants to go to an optician's I believe. New pair of glasses or something. She is nearsighted, you know.

Jinks—I say, old fellow, just slip round to that optician's and bribe him not to give her any better glasses than she has.—London Tit-Bits.

August 26th, 1898.

The father of Eugene Sue was a physician with exalted patients all over Europe, who sent him the choicest wines. The emperor of Austria, for instance, had contributed today, the king of Prussia rare hock, Queen Christine of Spain priceless alcañates, Prince Metternich genuine cachet d'or, and so on. The whole was kept in a large iron cupboard in the study of the learned physician, known as the Elzevir library. Eugene was then a college freshman, and, having procured a skeleton key to the closet, with his friends, Adolphe, Adam, Veron and others, proceeded every night to investigate the contents of the bottles. Not wishing to have their explorations prematurely stopped, they took the precaution to fill up the partially exhausted flasks with water and then to reseat them. When, for a long time afterward, the doctor brought forth samples of his precious stock for the delectation of guests worthy of it, and the company tasted it with a due sense of awe, it was privately felt that the celebrity of these great brands was all moonshine, that ordinary table d'hôte fare was preferable to them. But nobody dared to say so, and it was only after the death of his dreading parent that the novelist confessed the mortification.

The Photograph in Russia.

Edison's photograph has had a battle royal with Russian press censorship, says The Anglo-Russian. In the pavilion of the public gardens in Taganrog the machine was exhibited, and attracted large audiences. It played and sang, and laughed and spoke for some time undisturbed, until a police officer heard the machine reciting one of Kriloff's famous fables—viz., "Demian's Ukha" (soup or hospitality), but with some variations on the original text. The officer got suspicious, and not trusting to his memory, he ran at once and got Kriloff's book, and came again to listen to the photograph's version of the fable. To his horror he found the fable reproduced not at all as it was passed by the censorship more than half a century ago.

An alarm was raised at once, the higher local authorities communicated with, and the manager of the pavilion, Mr. Parafonovich, was called upon to explain the behavior of that speaking American beast. All the poor manager could do was to open the mysterious inside of the criminal machine and hand over to the authorities the indiscreet cylinder which threatened to tell the peaceful inhabitants so many undesirable things. But the arrest of the chief criminal was considered insufficient, as it could not have acted without a human accomplice. So, according to Taganrog Viesnik, the affair has taken its official course, and the innocent manager of the pavilion has lost in the meantime his generally good appetite and sound sleep, as he does not know in what punishment the official proceedings will result, and how long he will have to wait until his fate is decided.—Invention.

Yule Dough.

The first authentic record of Christmas pie or pudding is that of the Yule dough. This was a paste made in the form of a baby and presented by the bakers to their customers as a Christmas gift. In ancient Rome on the vigil of the nativity sweetmeats in the form of images were presented to the holy fathers, and it is probable that Yule dough had its origin in this custom. A belief was prevalent at one time that mince pie, which is composed of fruits and spices grown in the east, was a survival in memory of the offerings brought by the wise men to Bethlehem, when they came to worship the infant Saviour. The pie in later years came to be a wonderful compound of fruits, spices and meats, eggs and sugar, and inspired the poet Herrick to write:

Come, guard this night the Christmas pie
That the thief, though he or she be
With his flesh hooks don't come To touch it.

Plum pudding, now the universal pie of resistance in England, was originally "plumb porridge," and was served from a tureen at all the Christmas feasts.

The Building a Good Dog.

No member of the canine family has been more persistently maligned than the bulldog. Writers who have no intimate knowledge of the dog and his attributes have described him as stupidly ferocious, and illustrators have pictured him as a sort of semi-wild beast, till the general public has come to look upon him as dangerous.

"Give a dog a bad name," is an old saw, and perhaps a true one, but when it is applied to the bulldog it is manifestly unjust. Writers, too, have fallen into grave error in claiming that the bulldog is deficient not only in affection, but in intelligence.

Somebody, who is considered one of the greatest of canine scientists, claims that the bulldog's brain is relatively larger than that of the spaniel, which dog is generally considered to be the most intelligent of the canine race, while the bulldog's affection is never to be doubted.—Osting.

FANTASTIC VAGARY.

A PUBLIC MAN WHO CONSULTED THE OUIJA BOARDS.

This is One of the Grounds on Which It is Sought to Show That He Was Incapable of Making a Proper Will—The Estate Involved is a Large One.

The Oujia board, that curious little device which attracted so much attention and furnished so much amusement to many people a few years ago, has got into the courts. It is cited as evidence of a man's mental weakness and his incapacity to make a proper will. This man was Charles M. Pond, once State Treasurer of Connecticut, a Senator in the same State and a director of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. A suit is now under way in New York to break his will. It was instituted by his brother, Amos Phelps Pond.

Among the property which Charles M. Pond inherited from his father was the Prospect Hill farm, on the outskirts of the city of Hartford, and this, with about $450,000 worth of other realty, he willed to Hartford. The disputed farm or homestead which Hartford proposes to turn into a public park, is now valued at about $250,000.

The claim is made by the contestant that his brother had no right to devise away this tract, and counsel bring forward his father's will in substantiation of this position. "And it is my express desire that my said son, Charles M. Pond, will not alienate or sell my farm known as the 'Prospect Hill Farm,' but that the same may descend and be from time to time devised to my lineal descendants."

Among the testimony already introduced is that of Mrs. Frank C. Porter, sister of the Pond, which it is said showed the deceased brother to be an extraordinary and eccentric person.

In his public career Charles M. was known only as a man of rare judgment and brilliant parts, but it seems that for some time previous to his death his mind was clouded or weakened by disipation, and he displayed evidence of intellect that were entirely at variance with his character as the public and all but his intimates knew it.

According to Mrs. Porter's statement, some of the evidence that would be important and valuable as corroborative proof has been deliberately destroyed. The destroyed evidence consisted of works on Spiritism and the overall Oujia boards that were the property of Charles M. Pond, and were used by him. It is said that the dead man was a firm believer in Spiritism and was an easy dupe of mediums. Luther B. Marsh was not more thoroughly fooled by Miss De Bar than he was by the men and women who pretended to be able to materialize those who had passed to the shining above.

After the death of his wife, it is said, he was almost constantly under the influence of mediums. He had implicit confidence in the oracular qualities of the Oujia board which is a rudimentary sort of planchette. In the latter case the spirits are supposed to communicate with their friends in the flesh by means of writing in the former the spirits have not got so far in the three R's, and they spell out their communications.

A planchette is a small heart-shaped bit of wood, mounted on two tiny legs with casters, and having for the third leg a pencil. When the little table is placed on a sheet of paper and the hands are permitted to rest lightly upon it, the pencil moves, and some people pretend that the words made by the pencil are legible messages, and they go through the solemn formality of reading them.

Oujia has a three-legged, heart-shaped little table, too, which the hands rest upon, but over a smooth rectangular board, on which the alphabet and the numerals are stenciled so that they make the segment of a circle, and the words "yes" and "no" are stenciled in two of the corners. Messages are read by following the movements of the leg at the apex of the heart. It travels from letter to letter and spells out words, the nerves and muscles of the manipulators being made to do with the direction of its movements.

Charles M. Pond had several of these Oujia boards and he consulted them dozens of times a day. Through them he communicated with his dead wife. The story is told that often he would arise in the midst of a group of friends, excuse himself and hurry off to another room to ask Oujia certain questions.

These Oujia boards, with all of her brother's Spiritistic books, Mrs. Porter says, she burned. Her statement is that she went to the office of one of the executors of the will and in his absence obtained from his father, who drew up the will, permission to remove the books and boards from the house, which she did and made a bonfire of them.

This is only one of the strange proceedings of the executors, it is claimed. There is a great deal of secrecy about the proceedings and a whole lot of mystery, but the plaintiff feels confident that he will be able to show the mental insufficiency of his brother to make a will as well as to dispossess his own right to the disputed part of the netting clause in his father's will, which insists that the property shall not be devised away from the family.

The dissipated habits of Pond's brother have been pretty well established. He seems to have had a wild and terrible mania for morphine and administered it to everybody and everything on his place, even the dogs. The Oujia board weakness, though, appears to be the most fantastic of all his vagaries.

Tactics in the Band.

A colonel in the French army, who had a great eye for neatness, but not much of an ear for music, took occasion one day to compliment his bandmaster on the appearance of his men. Their uniforms are neat and the colonel, and their instruments are nicely polished and kept in order, but there is one improvement that I want to make upon.

What is it, colonel?

You must train your men, when they perform, to lift their fingers all at exactly the same time and at regular intervals on their instruments, as—one, two, one, two!

The Military College.

The Kingston Military College is a very expensive luxury to the people of Canada, and some of the things they have to pay for are very peculiar. An open place, $2.50; Prince of Wales hunting belt, $2.50; emigrant's knife, $1.00; trout rod, twelve feet long with three joints, $2.50; a lawn tennis bat, $2.71. The college cost is $20,000. No wonder there is a demand for the Kingston Military College.

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, AUGUST 26, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Ontario's Health Good

The monthly report of the provincial Board of Health sets forth that during July there was a considerable decrease in the number of deaths from tuberculosis. From other causes deaths were scarcelly 15, diphtheria 16, measles 10, whooping cough 12 and typhoid fever 23.

In Subject of Blagum

Yesterday afternoon a stout woman paraded down Water street, smoking a cigar. When people who passed by stared at her in surprise, she returned the gaze and gave those who were close enough to her a whiff of smoke. She was accompanied by a man who did not seem to object to her companion's eccentric conduct.

Members Received $250 Each

Though the legislature has adjourned only a very few of the members left yesterday afternoon, but many are stopping the week out. The province paid out to members more than $250,000 for this session. The members received $250 each, which is quite a bit more than the required $6 per day. The mileage rates amounted to about $25 per member.

Special Services

Special services in the Salvation Army barracks will be heard on Sunday and Monday, Aug. 29 and 30, it being the occasion of the Annual Harvest Festival. The sale of work on Monday night will be opened by the Rev. J. G. Foster. The soldiers are busy engaged in making and collecting articles for the sale. Friends are kindly asked to contribute anything suitable which will be thankfully received.

Municipal Office Report

Mr. Donald Galt, Inspector of Health Office, in his report just published, makes several interesting suggestions. The first is to restrict the general register to the registration of wills, letters of administration and powers of attorney. At present, deeds, mortgages, and all instruments are entered, confining subjects and interests. Also the registering of lands by local disposition should be changed. The files of the registers are inadequate, and out of proportion to the great amount of work necessitated in some cases. There has been a decrease in 1897 from 1896 of 111 instruments registered.

Davidson Won

About two hundred people were at the Nicholas Park last night to witness the match between Fred Davidson and Rufus Bradburn. Some delay was caused, owing to Bradburn being unable to secure suitable pace makers. These were, however, obtained from the crowd and Davidson would have fared better had there been none for they were worse than useless. Davidson led Bradburn by a wheel length for five laps, decidedly to the latter's, but Fred never lost the lead and finished by a good twenty feet ahead. A strong gale was blowing in the riders' race necessarily slow. The time given was 7:30 and the distance one mile and three quarters.

He Suspended Sentence

Hector Baker, who pleaded guilty to stealing two pairs of tarts from Mr. E. H. Hunter's grocery store and a twelve pound box of buns from Mr. D. Kerneghan's grocery, came up in Police Court yesterday morning for sentence. The magistrate addressed the prisoner, telling him his acts were not the result of impulse, but were done at different times and carried out with deliberation. After taking the goods he had said them. However, the magistrate said as he was a young man who could go out and do better, and as he had a young wife and child he had decided to give him an opportunity to live right. He allowed him to go on suspended sentence.

Sent to the Work

A sad case was heard in Police Court yesterday morning, when a girl, about 17 or 18 years of age, Rose Rosch, by name, was charged with being a street walker, etc. The girl did not appear to be any too bright mentally, and the story she told and witnesses told go to show that, while she has not a very high standard of morality or even a very clear conception of what is right and wrong, the boys or young men who associated with her were more entitled to the punishment than she was. The girl is one of several who have been in the habit of associating with a noisy gang of young men, but she says that she did not want to go with them, but they came with her. The would follow her to the street. The young men who take advantage of the girl's mental weakness may be looked after. The question the magistrate had to settle, however, was what would be done with the girl. Her life was going to be ruined if she was allowed to go on as she had been, and so he decided to send her to the Mercer Reformatory for two years less one day. She will be sent there and taught to do something that will enable her to earn a honest living. The girl's case was a sad one and if the law reaches the case of these disorderly boys and young men they will get a well-deserved punishment.

Mr. Harry Kearny, of Young's Point was in town yesterday.

ORILLIA WON

The Peterboroughs Put Up a Splendid Game but are Defeated by 5 Goals to 3

The Peterborough lacrosse team went to Orillia yesterday and played a match with the crack team of that place, suffering defeat by 5 goals to 3.

The game was witnessed by a very large crowd, and is pronounced the best exhibition of our national game yet seen in Orillia.

Although the Peterboroughs make no complaint of rough play on the part of the Orillia, still it is impossible to conceal the fact that they were pretty roughly used. Lynch, Hogarth and Johnson received severe injuries, and Jack McLeod got an ugly cut over the eye.

Our boys say they are well satisfied with the score and that they can easily overcome Orillia's lead on the home ground.

The score, if the Peterboroughs had received their just dues, would have been 7 to 5, as a game scored by Phelan was not allowed, owing to the umpire not observing in time the hole made in the net. When pointed out to him later he acknowledged that it was Peterborough's game but his decision was not reversed.

Orillia was determined to win by fair means or foul, and in proof of this it is only necessary to draw attention to the fact that three of Orillia's games were scored in scrimmages in front of the goal—the team combining and rushing the ball through.

Referee Hall of Markham, discharged the duties of his position in a highly satisfactory manner.

The teams were composed as follows: Orillia—Hendley, goal; O'Connor, point; Churchill, left defence; Dunn, 2nd; Thompson, 3rd; Boyd, centre; Curran, 3rd home; Wilkinson, 2nd; Armstrong, 1st; Grant, outside; Watson, inside; Yeats, field captain; Robb, umpire.

Peterborough—Dobson, goal; Lynch, point; Brown, rover; Gower, 1st defence; McLeod, 2nd; McDougall, 3rd; King, centre; Hogarth, 3rd home; McLeod, 2nd; Phelan, 1st; Lapsell, outside; Mooney, inside; Dolan, field captain; Reilly, umpire.

The games were scored as follows: 1st, Peterborough, 11-2 minutes; 2nd, Peterborough, 10 minutes; 3rd, Orillia, 2-12 minutes; 4th, Orillia, 5 minutes; 5th, Orillia, 1-4 minutes; 6th, Orillia, 1-4 minutes; 7th, Orillia, 13 minutes; 8th, Peterborough, 7-2 minutes; 9th, Orillia, 3 minutes; 10th, Peterborough, 3-12 minutes; 11th, Orillia, 4 minutes; 12th, Orillia, 5 minutes; 13th, Peterborough, 2-12 minutes.

The next match with Orillia will be played at the Island, Toronto, on Tuesday, Aug. 30th.

ACROSS THE RIVER

An Interesting Budget of News Items from Ashburnham

The new kindergarten room has been cleaned and painted and is now open for use on Thursday, Sept. 1, the same day is the rest of the school. Miss Agnes Williamson is directress, but the assistants have not yet been secured. It is probable two will be required and assistants must have a year's nursery standing and be 17 years of age. The kindergarten will be free to all Public School supporters in Ashburnham, but others will be charged fees. An age limit will also be fixed by the school board. The kindergarten pupils will attend in the forenoon only, and the junior first classes will attend in the afternoon only, and be taught by the kindergarten directress.

Miss Cooney will have charge of the senior first and the part second classes. Miss Erskine will have the second classes. Miss Dawson the third classes, and Mr. Mitchell the fourth classes. It is hoped that all pupils in all the classes will be present at the opening day, Sept. 1, as classes will be arranged and work will begin at once. There will be no delay to accommodate those who come late.

At the Ashburnham Public school picnic to Jubilee next Tuesday, Aug. 30, the writing prizes will be given to the winners. The writing has been judged by competent outside judges. As this is the last picnic of the holiday season, and as the rates are exceeding low, it is expected there will be a large crowd. The City of Peterborough will leave Peterboro at 8, calling at Ashburnham, and at all necessary points along the river. The profits will be used in purchasing a school flag. All who come will be made welcome.

It is expected there will be a large attendance at the prohibition society meeting in Victoria Park to-night by the new Town Hall next Monday evening, Aug. 29, under the auspices of Mark street R.L. of C.R. The general public are invited. Rev. S. J. Shorey, Rev. J. G. Potter, and others will address the meeting. Mark St. John will build a Lewin Society on Thursday evening, Sept. 1, at 8 P.M. Hopers, North Monaghan, in aid of the organ fund.

The church will be ready in ample time for the re-opening services in October, for which great preparations are being made.

BAND CONCERT

The Programme for To-night's Concert in Victoria Park

The following programme will be rendered in Victoria Park to-night by the 57th Batt. band, under the direction of Mr. C. Freeman:

March—Grandioso and the New Waltzes—The Old Love and the New.

Overture—Les deux Magnas, Bouillon Quadrille, Shanghai, Jackson, Mazarin, La Perle d'Orient, Allegretto, Zilpha, Ripley, Schottische, Beauty Bright, Hushed March, Egypte, Billings, God Save the Queen.

THE PUGS

Oliver Brown boxes a Detroit unknown ten rounds at Port Egan, Ont., on Friday night. Before it began a Jack-Telford is willing to meet Mahoney, the affable 150-pounder, in a preliminary to the Popp-Goldstein go.

Malachy Hogan, the Chicago referee has in his possession $10,000 to wager on (Orillia) against (M.C.).

There were 5000 spectators at the M. Brice-Downey fight on New York Monday night. Before it began a couple of detectives hauled a woman who was dressed in man's clothes, out of a show seat on the bleachers and took her to the station house. There she was identified as Mrs. Lena Burns.

A Coney Island hotelkeeper, who was trying to get $2 on Downey when he was in his possession $10,000 to wager on (Orillia) against (M.C.).

It is said that she saw the Bonner-Goff contest last week and was not detected. Further search for women was fruitless. It was noticed that the 25th round of the fight that Downey and McBride buried the hitbitter, smothered each other and shook hands.

After months of long-distance sparring by telegraph, telephone, through the mails and the newspapers, Hyime Goldstein, the Buffalo lightweight, and Jim Popp, the speedy lightweight champion of Canada, are now about matched for a 15-round contest at the Athletic Club of Toronto, on the night of Saturday, Sept. 3.

This is a match that Buffalo sport lovers were anxious to have brought to this city, for there is considerable curiosity here to see Popp perform, owing to his having boxed Frank Erne, the great Irish champion, last two contests in this city pushed him up several notches in public favor for he clearly outboxed Lemons and a great many of the members of the Olympic Club say that he gave Joe Young more than that stocky youngster could respond to.

His great boxing distance, but did not see the final half-dozen rounds of that contest, consequently I am bereft from an opinion as to the merits of the men. In Popp, Goldstein will meet the fastest and most skillful fighter that he has ever faced. This Popp is an amazing pugilist, and can hit a trifle harder. Hyime is as cautious as a cat, and is a very good boxer, but he has shown a disposition to be more aggressive than on former occasions.

As a result he played a cautious game, and as a result he played a cautious game, and as a result he played a cautious game.

LOCAL BREVITIES

Happenings in Town and District During the Past Twenty-four Hours

—Partridge and duck shooting opens on Sept. 1.

—Hastings cricket club visited Warkworth on Friday last and were defeated by a score of 97 runs to 43.

—A. J. Cooney was discharged on a charge of assault at the Police Court yesterday morning.

—The annual picnic of the Calcutt Brewing Co. will take place Sept. 7. This is one of the best that goes down the river.

—Mr. J. B. McWilliams is in Huntsville for a few days conducting the culbers' examinations under the Culbers' Act. He will return on Friday evening or Saturday.

—W. E. Gillespie, of Penetang, Ont., who is charged with attempting to defraud Thibodeau Bros., was admitted to bail at Montreal, himself in $4,500 and two sureties of the same amount. The bondsmen are John J. Lyn and I. Sonensky.

—An unfortunate dog, under the impression that an up-bound George street car would respect its rights, got on the track at the corner of George and Simcoe streets yesterday afternoon, and had both hind legs cut off. The dog was shot.

—The prosecution of Hamilton shoe dealers for daring to sell shoes after 7 p.m. goes merrily on. But Hamilton tobaccoists can sell cigarettes 7 p.m. and hotel keepers can sell liquor and restaurants can sell ice cream. Why draw the line at necessities and permit the sale of luxuries? Hamilton is behind the age.

—Mr. Harry Neil, manager of the Calcutt Brewery & Malting Co. bought the first of this year's barley from Geo. Robt. Oronotow. It is a good sample, being fine and bright and good weight. The Calcutt Brewing Co. owing to the large business done this summer, will begin malting on the 1st of September, so farmers that have threshed their barley will have a ready market for it at the brewery.

—Fergus Morris, sentenced by Magistrate J. K. of Windsor, North Hastings to two years in the penitentiary for bigamy, is to be released. His sentence seems to have been unjustly imposed, for Shortt's bigamy was committed unintentionally, and in the belief that his former wife was dead. At any rate, County Crown-Attorney Ayden has been looking into the circumstances of the case, with the result that Shortt will be detained in prison no longer.

RAILWAY NOTES

Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways

Paragraphs of Interest

—The C.P.R. employees and friends spent a pleasant day at Orangeville Wednesday. The Junction branch was met by the Owen Sound and Peawater, Strathville Junction and Elora branches and made up a crowd at Orangeville, which was headed by the band of the 48th Highlanders band and marched through the town to the park. The games were keenly contested and the picnic a success.

—Mr. C. H. Livingston, rule instructor with the New York Central R. Co. has been travelling about from point to point on the Grand Trunk system since March 4th last, instructing the men in the American Standard Rules which will come into effect in a few months. Mr. Livingston was here in June last, when he was assisted by Keely of Harris, and his present visit will be the last at which instruction will be imparted. Examinations will be held shortly to ascertain the men's proficiency in interpreting the signification of the new code of rules.

—There was a report current in Toronto yesterday that the Toronto railway rate war would be settled this week, and as a consequence there were a great many inquiries made at the various brokers' offices for information. Private messages were received from the other side which stated that everything pointed to an early settlement, and speculators were anxious to buy Canadian "Pacific" stock. Railway officials had not received any information respecting the settlement, and it is probable that the visit of W. E. Davis, general passenger agent of the G.T.R. to Chicago was true to the report that a settlement "would be reached this week."

—General servant wanted. Apply to Mrs. Geo. Stevens, Mark street, Ashburnham.

—The efficacy of NEW LIFE cure for Rheumatism and Sciatica, is settled beyond all doubt. Thousands of lives have already been saved by its use, and thousands more will be saved in future.

BLANCO ISSUES A PROCLAMATION AT HAVANNA

Cubans will Soon Repent—When They Encounter the Difficulties of Government They will Go to the Spaniards for Help

HAVANNA, Aug. 26.—General Blanco has issued the following proclamation to the people of Havana:

"We have been vanquished and, with-out consideration of our birthplace, will be tomorrow as strangers to this country and as emigrants to this portion of the earth, which, until today and probably a few weeks more, is part of our Spanish fatherland."

"As strangers and as the vanquished I counsel you, the people of Cuba, whose hearts are Spanish and who deeply feel the disgrace of their country, not to dispute any of the benefits which the triumph gives to the victors."

"It is our obligation now to be quiet, not to take any part in the different manifestations of a local political nature and even to decline participation in such affairs, even if the right of franchise be offered us."

"But you have on duty, which should be a duty of love, that is to undertake the task of reconstruction of all your interests, and it is your duty also to ask for, even appeal, if it becomes necessary from your position as the vanquished to the victors for a guarantee of your personal safety and the protection of your proper interests."

"If you do as I counsel you the United States will take care of your lives and your interests. My mission here is to be finished, as will the sovereignty of Spain, and anyone who feels that with honor to himself he may call himself a Spaniard will have to register his name at the Spanish consulate, which will be established in this city."

"I am convinced that there will be no further disputes between the Cubans and the Spaniards in this island, for it is my belief that as soon as the Cubans begin to govern here they will find out how useful the Spaniards are to them, and finally concede to them the place they deserve in the government of the island."

Your compatriot,
RAMON BLANCO

London, Aug. 26.—The Hong Kong correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "The retention of the prohibitive Spanish duties at Manila by the American authorities is causing concern among merchants here, who have asked United States Consul General Wildman to use his influence with General Merritt to secure a modification of them. American revenue will be lost for $200,000 a year, while at Manila alone the duty alone is $2,000,000. Flour pays 70 cents a sack."

"The object of the Spaniards in imposing prohibitive duty was to shut out foreign imports. If they are retained they will prevent the importation of all foreign goods into Manila. Merchants here in shipping goods to Manila, did so on the understanding that the Manila tariff would be in accord with the existing American customs laws."

THE SICK DECREASING.

Washington, Aug. 26.—Adjutant General Corbin this morning received from General Lawton, now in command at Santiago, reports of the health condition of the American troops for the 24th and 25th inst. Report for 24: Total number sick 801, total number of fever cases, 536; total number of new fever cases, 49; total number of fever cases returned to duty, 68; deaths 3.

The report for Aug. 25th: Total sick 567, total fever, 427; total new cases of fever, 39, total of fever cases returned to duty, 43; Deaths seven.

THE PEACE JUBILEE.

Chicago, Aug. 26.—President McKinley has accepted the invitation to attend the peace jubilee to be held in Chicago in October. He will possibly be accompanied by Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, and John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy.

THE PRAIRIE ASHORE.

New York, Aug. 26.—The United States steamer Prairie is reported to be ashore three miles east of Amagasaki, L.I. She has 400 troops aboard. All are reported as safe and well and assistance has been sent.

PASSENGER CORPSES.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 26.—The Spanish transport San Francisco, San Augustin and Colon left yesterday afternoon for Spain with 4500 Spaniards, including fifteen officers and their families and four private. Eight men died on the way to the ships. Their corpses were "checked off" as passengers. It appears that there have been many instances of this during the transportation company thus being enabled to collect the passage money, a thing readily managed under the easy

Pronounced Incurable by Doctors, but Made Strong and Well by Paine's Celery Compound

Wells & Richardson Co.

Gentlemen.—Having been given up to die some time ago by some of the best doctors of the United States, I came to Canada last autumn terribly ill, and had lost all hope, suffering agonies from inflammatory rheumatism, was wrongly urged to use Paine's Celery Compound. I gave it a trial as recommended, and the first bottle did me so much good I continued with the medicine until I had used seven bottles, when I found myself perfectly cured. I never felt better in all my life than at present.

I use every possible means to tell others of Paine's Celery Compound, and will always recommend it to those troubled with rheumatism.

Yours very truly,
WM. MORRISSETTE,
Riverton Mont. P.Q.

No other preparation has ever done so many people so much good as Paine's Celery Compound.

McCarthy's Riding

Quiet Canvas Carried on by Leighton McCarthy

HIS POLITICAL DODGERY

Dalton McCarthy's Following in North Simcoe was Largely Personal

Refusal to Call Himself Either Conservative or Liberal—He Cannot Wear His Uncle's Mantle (Filling)

Colingwood, Aug. 26.—The McCarthy convention to be held next week in Simcoe, is said to be a serious what course should be pursued in the representation of North Simcoe in the House of Commons. Old and wise heads put the matter thus and their reason for doing so is obvious, viz., to nominate Leighton G. McCarthy, who has been conducting a quiet canvass throughout the riding for two months, in anticipation of securing the candidature. Leighton McCarthy's dodge in refusing to call himself an Independent Conservative or Independent Liberal, by simply "Independent," presents the possibility that he is afraid of losing the Grit vote in the one case and McCarthyites in the other. He wants to make sure of the McCarthyites and Liberals and does not care then what the straight Conservatives do.

LEIGHTON NOT THE MAN.

Leighton McCarthy is not the man, however, that can don the mantle of the late Dalton McCarthy, whose following in North Simcoe was largely a personal one. He was a man in whom the people had confidence, and whose ability would be used in the right direction. The majority of his supporters did not vote for him because of any policy he represented, they simply relied on him as a man of integrity and earnestness and experience who would do what was right. Dalton McCarthy is dead, however, and where as the man that can take his place is believed that Dalton McCarthy himself spent time before his death had become dissatisfied with his representation of North Simcoe and intended to return to the Conservative party or quit politics altogether. If the Grit party fell in line with the right direction, the majority of his supporters would not vote for him because of any policy he represented, they simply relied on him as a man of integrity and earnestness and experience who would do what was right. GELATINE DESSERTS

Jellies of Many Kinds, Snow Pudding and Spanish Cream

There are few more acceptable desserts than clear, well-moulded jellies. These jellies are easily made with the assistance of the always-ready gelatine. When making jellies one should use the best quality of gelatine and be accurate in measuring the liquids for the amount of gelatine used, for when a jelly comes to be served and is in a semi-liquid condition or is as tough as rubber it is not a dish to be desired. The most acceptable jellies are made with the plain gelatine and flavors added to suit the taste.

A baked custard or sweetened and flavored cream are used with jellies. The cream may be whipped and poured around the mould of jelly. It requires less cream to serve jelly in this way. When you have no moulds for jelly, a pretty way of serving is to put the jelly in a square pan and cut it into squares. With a sharp knife, wet in cold water, cut the jelly into little square pieces and heap them upon a dish. With jelly, custard or cream may be used. The most acceptable jellies are made with fresh berries, sliced peaches, pineapple or cherries that have been in sugar and a little wine long enough to permeate.

The remains of a broken mould of jelly may be used again in an appealing manner by letting the jelly stand a short time in a warm room and then taking a wire spoon and turning the jelly vigorously until it is a light white mass and again turning it into moulds to be served. It will have the appearance of being an entirely different dessert. The remains of jelly, in which the flavors are well together may be utilized by beating them into one. When the jelly is partly broken, whipped cream may be added to make the amount desired to fill a mould.

Aspic jellies that have been used for garnishing dishes may be beaten in this manner and again moulded, thus gaining an entirely new appearance. The gelatine is first soaked in cold water or milk, as the case may be. Hot water draws out a strong, unpleasant taste, which all flavors will not always disguise. There are many simple desserts made from gelatine, and a few rules may be of benefit to some inexperienced housekeepers.

For gelatine pudding: Dissolve half a package of gelatine in one pint of milk. Beat the yolks of four eggs with eight tablespoons of powdered sugar. Put one pint of milk over the fire in a double boiler, add to this the milk and soaked gelatine. When the milk is scalding hot add the eggs and sugar, keep stirring until the eggs are cooked, take from the fire and add the whites of the eggs which have been beaten to a stiff froth. Flavor with vanilla or wine and turn the mixture into a mould to be served. Serve very cold with sugar and cream. Snow pudding: Soak half a box of gelatine in one cup of cold water. Beat four eggs with one cup of boiling water and two small cups of sugar and stir until dissolved. Add the juice from two large lemons. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth. When the gelatine mixture is cold and begins to thicken stir the eggs in, beating the mixture very hard and until it will just pour. The dish containing the mixture should stand in a pan of ice water and it will coagulate more quickly. Turn into a wet mould and stand in a cold place. When serving this pudding pour around the form a boiled custard flavored with vanilla.

Coffee blanc mange: Dissolve one box of gelatine in two cups of milk; pour over it one pint of strong coffee, boiling hot. Have one pint of milk over the fire in a double boiler, add to this the milk and soaked gelatine. When the milk is scalding hot add the eggs and sugar, keep stirring until the eggs are cooked, take from the fire and add the whites of the eggs which have been beaten to a stiff froth. Flavor with vanilla or wine and turn the mixture into a mould to be served. Serve very cold with sugar and cream.

Coffee also makes an excellent jelly. Soak one package of gelatine in one pint of cold water; let the water boil over one quart of boiling water, add one pint of granulated sugar, the same amount of very strong coffee, and one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth. When the gelatine mixture is cold and begins to thicken stir the eggs in, beating the mixture very hard and until it will just pour. The dish containing the mixture should stand in a pan of ice water and it will coagulate more quickly. Turn into a wet mould and stand in a cold place. When serving this pudding pour around the form a boiled custard flavored with vanilla.

For prune jelly, wash one quart of prunes and soak them until soft in water enough to little more than cover them. Cook the prunes in the same water until they are tender. With a silver knife remove the pits from each prune and lay the prunes in a wet mould. Have two ounces of gelatine soaking in a little cold water and turn the hot prune water over it, add the juice from the prunes and sweeten to taste. Stand over the fire long enough to have the sugar and gelatine entirely dissolved; then strain into the mould holding the prepared prunes. Stand away until perfectly cold, and then serve with whipped cream.

Another simple but good dessert is made with apples. Cook tart apples in a granite saucepan until tender, they strain them and slightly sweeten to taste. Have two ounces of gelatine soaking in a little cold water and turn the hot apple water over it, add the juice from the apples and sweeten to taste. Stand over the fire long enough to have the sugar and gelatine entirely dissolved; then strain into the mould holding the prepared prunes. Stand away until perfectly cold, and then serve with whipped cream.

A favorite dessert is called Spanish cream. For one quart of cold milk use half a box of gelatine; cover and let them stand together about an hour. Beat the but do not let the mixture boil. Heat the yolks of four eggs and add to them half a pound of fine sugar, turn the scalding milk over the eggs and sugar, stirring all the time. Return the mixture to the fire and stir until it is of the consistency of soft custard. Let the mixture become cold, stirring it occasionally as it cools. When it begins to thicken flavor with vanilla and lightly stir in the whites of the eggs that have been beaten to a stiff froth. Turn the mixture into a mould and put in a cold place. Make a soft custard and pour around the dessert when serving it.

Notes on Flying Machines.

"Once I placed an aerial motor on a pair of Fairbanks scales and set it going," said Thomas A. Edison, in The Scientific American. "It lightened the scales, but it didn't fly. Another time I rigged up an anti-vortex-like disk or shutter and connected it with a rapid piston in a perpendicular cylinder. These shutters would open and shut. If I could have got sufficient speed, say a mile a second, the inertia or resistance of the air would have been as great as steel, and the quick operation of these shutters would have driven the machine, but I couldn't get the speed. I believe that before the air ship men succeed they will have to do as I say with the buoyancy chamber."

The Weight No Criterion.

It is impossible to estimate the weight of the food required by a comparison with the weight of the animal. The dairy tests at Chicago demonstrated that steers did not affect the quantity of food consumed. Some of the Jerseys are more food than the short horns, although the latter were more larger in size.

Stomach Trouble

Stomach trouble is the common name applied to a derangement of the system which is keenly felt but vaguely understood. It may mean inability to retain food or to digest it. It may mean nausea, pain after eating, fullness, inordinate craving for food, or entire lack of appetite. Whatever it means, there's trouble, and it's with the stomach. If you have stomach trouble, you will be interested in this letter from a man who had it and was cured by

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For nine years I suffered from stomach trouble. I tried the aid of the best doctors of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and spent large sums of money, all in vain. One day while waiting a train in Bellaria, O., I picked up a paper with a notice of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I got one bottle to try it. It did me so much good that I purchased five more bottles. I took four of them and gained in flesh, my appetite improved, and now I can eat anything. My stomach is all right, thanks to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—CALVIN M. STEVENS, Uniontown, Pa.

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, AUGUST 27, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Band in the Park.—The 57th Hatt. Band, under the direction of Mr. A. Freeman, played a splendid programme in the Park last night. Several numbers were liberally applauded.

The Collis Towing Logs.—The steamer Eclipse left last night to tow logs on Rice Lake for the Rathbun Co. A recent storm dispersed the drive all over the lake and the Eclipse will collect the logs and tow them to Hastings.

Foresters' Excursion.—Court Lakeside, C.O.F., will run an excursion—on the arrival of morning train from Peterborough to Stony Lake point, per Sir. Sunbeam, on Wed. Aug. 31st. See posters for particulars. J. S. Foley, Recording Secretary, 31

A Wage Case.—A wage case was the only item on the programme for Police Court yesterday morning. Miss Rose McGillivray charged Dan and Albert Hopkins with non-payment of wages. The complaint was late in appearing and the case had been dismissed when she arrived.

Flour Take a Drop.—Owing to the reduction in the price of flour the bakers in town have reduced the price of bread to ten cents a loaf. The reduction came into effect yesterday and will meet with general approval. It might, however, just as consistently have been made months ago.

Crack Shots.—At the Ontario Rifle Association matches yesterday Pte. Geo. Fitzgerald, of the 57th, won a $3 prize with a score of 83 in the Tait-Bramsey match fired at 200, 500 and 600 yards. Pte. C. Curtis won a $2 prize in the El Padre Needles match with a possible of 25, five shots at 500 yards.

Request.—Those who purchase their groceries and fruit at the "Spot Cash" are requested to place their order on Saturday for what they require for four days because the street will be torn up Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in front of their place of business. Many special bargains at the "Spot Cash" on Saturday. 253 George st.

Fifteen Thousand Appl. a Week.—It is stated that fifteen thousand applications have been received by the Government at Ottawa for the medals to be awarded to those who served in the campaigns to repel the Fenian raids, and that those in the field only numbered 15,000, they must have been very long lived, as apparently not one of them has died in the meantime.

Excursion from "Robbins' Land."—The Str. City of Peterborough leaves at 6.30 this morning for Robbins' Land for the purpose of bringing up a large excursion from that place. She will arrive in port about 11 a.m. and it is expected that she will have on board over 400 excursionists. This means the expenditure of considerable money in town. The Peterborough Navigation Co., under Commodore Cochrane's energetic management, brings an immense amount of trade to town during the season.

Arrested for Vagrancy.—Havlock Standard.—Mr. H. Sharp, of Hastings, who has been in and around the village since Saturday last, in company with a young girl by the name of Margaret Brown, of Baltimore, was arrested on Wednesday noon on a charge of vagrancy, by Wm. Burns, who was sworn in as a special constable. Sharp was taken before Magistrate Mathison and Wiseman, and was remanded to Peterboro until the day of trial which has not been set. The girl has been taken charge of here and will remain for the trial.

Go to Toronto with the Larosse.—Team Tuesday, per Q.T.R. Ticket only $1.25, good to return the same evening at 8.30 or on any train up to Sept. 12th.

—The death of Wm. Coon, father of Messrs. Job and C. W. Coon, of Havlock, is announced. Mr. Coon died at the residence of his daughter in Mumford, N.Y., on Monday, 22nd inst., at the ripe old age of 76 years and 11 months.

—A party of American gentlemen who have been summering in the vicinity of Peterboro and Rice Lake, presented Capt. "Jack" Martin with a handsome Union Jack as a token of appreciation of the courtesies shown them by the "North Star's" popular proprietor.

—On Wednesday evening last a happy event was celebrated at the residence of Mr. Thomas Hockaday, Young's Pt., the occasion being the marriage of his daughter, Miss Lury, to Mr. William Wannamaker, of Lakefield.

—Havlock Standard.—The result of the two assault cases tried in old Havlock school house on the 18th inst., was disposed of by Crown Attorney Woods, of Peterboro, as follows: Griffin vs. Burgess, dismissed. Burgess vs. Griffin, verdict of $3 and costs for plaintiff.

—Dr. Greer and Mr. Geo. Ames are the delegates appointed by Court Channing to attend the annual meeting of the Supreme High Court of the Independent Order of Foresters, which is at present in session in Toronto.

—The stone crusher that has been built by the Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Co. for the town was given a preliminary test Thursday. In the presence of some of the councillors. Some rocks were fed into the big machine and it did its work very satisfactorily. A final test will be made in a day or two.

HASTINGS VS. MARMORA

Excitement Runs High. Hastings has 1000 in the Union Bank

When the Union Bank was held in Havlock last month, Hastings and Marmora lacrosse teams were invited to play for a cup. Mr. Wignmore, the captain of the Hastings team accepted, specifying that both teams should consist only of local players, and this arrangement was subsequently ratified over the phone. Both teams showed up. Hastings discovering that Marmora had four players from Mado, the Collins brothers, Dan Reed and Charlie Kirk, claimed the cup on the grounds that the arrangement agreed to had been violated. However, rather than disappoint the crowd they agreed to play an exhibition game, if Marmora would place on the field two local players instead of the Collins boys. They were willing to allow them to play Kirk in place of their own man "Pete" Shannon, because, unfortunately Shannon was absent at his brother-in-law's funeral. Marmora refused, and Hastings then offered to play if Kirk and one of the Collins boys were left off. Marmora insisted on the terms they originally put on the field. The game was played. Hastings, disappointed, gave a cup to Marmora, and the fun was started. Challenges were issued, and Hastings has deposited $100 in the Union Bank of that place, offering to play Marmora on any neutral ground. Marmora's challenge read for money or marble, and Hastings is after the former to the tune of $400, the amount for which they had challenged.

SPORTING NOTES

What is Going on in Local and District

Havlock Standard.—In another optimum will be found the Hastings lacrosse club acceptance of the Marmora challenge which appeared in our last issue. Hastings has deposited $100 as a guarantee of good faith, but conceivably Marmora is not as big a hurry as they were heretofore. Money talks, but Marmora is not talking that way.

It is to be hoped that the lacrosse club's excursion to Toronto on Tuesday next will meet with the liberal patronage it deserves. The inducements are unexcelled—the tickets are only $1.25, and the match will be a corker. The boys are putting up a game fight for the intermediate championship, and are deserving of every encouragement. Take a day off and cheer the boys on to victory.

UNDAUNTED NORWOOD.

doctor has branch offices at Havlock every Friday and Hastings every Tuesday. The doctor makes a specialty of all branches of his profession and guarantees satisfaction.

Norwood possesses three doctors in active practice, one of whom, in addition to his numerous services to the community as physician and surgeon, is also known as the popular Dr. Moffat. J. C. Moffat, M.D., C.M., graduated from Trinity College, Toronto, in 1880 and located at Smith's Falls for a short period. Leaving there he settled in Norwood in '88. Like all other druggists in small towns, besides keeping a full line of pure drugs, patent medicines and toilet requisites, the doctor has added a full line of stationery and school books. He acts as well as agent for the Dominion Express Company, C. P. R. Telegraph Company, and operates the Central "Phone station. The doctor gives personal attention to the preparations of prescriptions. He sells all the Toronto dailies.

Notwithstanding his popularity, Dr. Moffat has to divide the drug business in Norwood with diagnost and chemist. He started in business in 1878, left in 1885 and returned to Hastings in 1897, having in the meantime another drug store in Springbrook, of which he assumed personal charge during that time, and which is still in operation, being run for him by an admitted chemist. The doctor was himself admitted in 1892 keeps a full line of pure drugs and chemicals, patent medicines and toilet articles, as well as a large line of stationery and school books. He also acts as agent for the G.N.W. Telegraph. He has had a successful business career, having never taken any active part in politics. He is somewhat of a literary, having acted as correspondent at different times for local papers. He also handles at the present time the Toronto dailies.

After discussing life matters, it would not be inappropriate to talk of life insurers and of the latter Norwood has two who stand out prominently, one of them being councilman.

who represents the North American Life Insurance Company, the London Guaranty and Accident Company and the Phoenix of London, Eng. the Western of Toronto, the London Mutual and the Globe Mutual. The agency that Mr. Drain represents was started by Mr. Hugh Drain 32 years ago. T. J. Drain is 40 years old. Mr. T. J. Drain has been successful in putting the business in such a shape that he now carries 1,600 risks and claims to control the fire insurance of the townships of Ashpodel, Dummer and Belmont, as well as a large share of that of Ontario and Percy. The Globe and London Mutual are well-known for their low rates on farm property, being under one per cent. The North American investment plan has been a winner in Norwood in life insurance. Mr. Drain was elected councilman in '93, serving for three years, when he retired for one year, being again re-elected last year.

who subsequently acted as a general agent throughout the Midland district and in 1872 established himself in Norwood as an auctioneer. Ten years after he added insurance and real estate to his list of business. He represents the Royal, Liverpool, London and Globe, Lancashire, Commercial Union, Norwich Union, Phoenix of Hartford, Guardian and Equity, a new purely Canadian Company just organized and several of the stockholders of which are local men. His capital of $1,000,000 has attracted, within the three months of its existence 15,000 policies. Mr. Anderson acted as bailiff for 22 years for the Division Court, being appointed by the late George Hume in 1875. During all that period there never was a single charge accepted against him. Mr. Anderson was a member of the school board for twelve years, retiring last of January last on account of ill-health. He has taken no active part in politics for some years. During his late illness, his popularity was demonstrated in a very striking manner, and the callers at his bedside were almost innumerable. He does a large amount of business, not only in Norwood, but in Havlock and Hastings. He retired from auctioneering about a year ago.

While Norwood makes no pretense to be a cosmopolitan place, it certainly possesses in

of Mr. E. P. Cuffe, a dry goods store of which any city might well be proud. Mr. Cuffe had charge for ten years of the business of M. P. Williams. This firm had also since 1872 done a large business in Norwood and two years ago Mr. Cuffe purchased the latter. The stock consists of staple and fancy dry goods of the very highest class, as well as boots and shoes. Mr. Cuffe has all along striven, and that successfully, to give Norwood as good a selection of high grade goods as do the stores. After all is said, it is in his millinery department, in charge of Miss Peterson, that he shows Norwood what a city display is like. He has lately added a full line of ladies' millinery in charge of Miss Martin, which will be a bonus to the ladies of this place. Notwithstanding that Mr. Cuffe succeeded one of the most popular persons in all the Midland district, he has largely increased the trade.

W. A. CARNAHAN.

who learned his trade in Thornbury, six years ago, Norwood has had, for three years, an expert mill builder. Mr. Carnahan has found his most other tailors of today, that it is necessary for him, in order to meet present conditions to carry a full line of tweeds, worsteds, overcoatings, suitings, and trimmings. He has done satisfactory work for all the stores in the village. His business has assumed very satisfactory proportions which is no doubt due not only to his skillful workmanship but to his genial manners.

From dry goods to iron would be a lengthy journey for anybody but a newspaper man. The Times in introducing

The People's Faith

Firmly Grounded Upon Real Merit They Know Hood's Sarsaparilla Absolutely and Permanently Cures When All Others Fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is not merely a simple preparation of Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and a little Iodide of Potassium. Besides these excellent alternatives, it also contains those great anti-bilious and liver remedies, Mandrake and Dandelion. It also contains those great kidney remedies, Uva Ursi, Juniper Berries, and Pipsissewa. Nor are these all. Other very valuable curative agents are harmoniously combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla and it is carefully prepared under the personal supervision of a regularly educated pharmacist.

Knowing these facts, is the abiding faith the people have in Hood's Sarsaparilla a matter of surprise? You can see why Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, when other medicines totally, absolutely fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, aid digestion. 25c.

ACKERMAN & RORKE

to the public, wish to state first that the business was established 23 years ago by Mr. F. N. Ackerman. In '94 Mr. J. W. Rorke (who by the way is a son of Mr. Rorke, of Roxburgh & Rorke, wheat dealers) and who had previously served a long clerkship, was taken into the firm, bringing with him considerable capital and extending the business greatly. The store presents a most creditable appearance and carries a full line of shelf and heavy hardware, stores, tinware, furnaces. Messrs. Ackerman & Rorke employ two people in the manufacture of tinware. They also keep paints, oils and glassware and are agents for the well known Welland-Valley Lumber, a high priced wheel of which they have disposed this season. Mr. Rorke is a member of the village council.

While dealing with iron, it might be well to state that in this connection Norwood has six blacksmiths and wagon makers, noticeable among whom for the reason of his age is, who started in business in Norwood in 1847. After a three year's American experience, Mr. Nicoll came to Peterboro in 1855 and eventually resettled in Norwood. He has been in business altogether 42 years. While being an old gentleman, who came to this country in 1849, he still retains his energies and faculties and can smile over the tales of the early history of the community. If ostriches were a product of Norwood, it would be but a step from iron to groceries but the climate forbidding, the work must be taken without that and the first stopping place will be that of one of the members of the milling firm and father of the cheese man, who has for a number of years operated a large pork packing establishment in addition to running a first class grocery store. He handles the best brands of flour, manufactured by the mill of Equire Bros., the highest grades of cheese produced by Eddys C. Squire's in addition to a regular full line of staple groceries. Mr. Squire has been in business here for ten years, having previously had a large experience. He is at present a member of the school board.

MR. WM. NICOLL.

Going back to 1845, it is found that there was a settler by the name of R. Metcalfe. He was a builder, and although taking up a farm followed the trade as well. Never taking any active part in politics he was enabled to devote himself exclusively to business and has acquired an estate estimated at $40,000, part of which is the Metcalfe block, containing four stories and being three stories high. One of the stores is occupied by his son.

PHILIP METCALFE

who started in the grocery business two years ago. He carries a full line of staple and fancy groceries and delivers to all parts of the village. In addition to an ice cream parlor, he can accommodate the ladies with the best brands of chocolate, gum and confectionery. So as well handles all of all kinds including groceries and machines. His business has been very satisfactory for the past two years and gives great promise for the future.

A. FREEMAN

who is about to become the leader of the Peterboro Fire Brigade Band. Mr. Freeman has been a musician for the last 30 years, took charge of the Norwood band 15 years ago, the band being then under indifferent leadership, over 17 years ago. He had previously been connected with the Peterboro band and with that of Belleville. During his spare time he runs a barber shop and it is needless to say that his popularity secures him the bulk of the trade.

Norwood has another man whose personal characteristics has given him a clench in his business. In this case it is

B. T. SCOTT the livery man, who has handled horses all his life. His first introduction to public business was driving a stage from Hastings to Warkworth. After nearly two years experience in this line, he bought out the Headren livery and continuing it, has made a great success. He does a very large local business and makes a specialty of charging all alike. He does considerable driving to Havlock, Hastings, Warkworth and other surrounding towns, and operates the bus in connection with the Clancy House.

But Mr. Scott has a very lively competitor in McGregor Bros., who in 1888 started a large livery. They have ten horses, all of which are employed in connection with the commercial trade of the season.

McGREGOR HOUSE which is a large, modern three story building, run under the supervision of Mr. J. McGregor, who was born and brought up in the business and took charge of this particular house in 1881. The house has the commercial trade of the town. Although it shares this to a proper extent with the CLANCY HOUSE which was formerly known as the Brennan House. This hotel was originally built forty years ago, and was extended and enlarged about fifteen years ago. It can now accommodate sixty guests.

The present proprietor, Mr. William Clancy, took charge in 1886 having previously to that the City hotel of Peterboro for eleven years. The bar is stored with the finest liquors and cigars and the table has all the delicacies of the season.

CHINA TO OBSERVE RIGHTS OF BRITISH INVESTORS

The First Note of War—British Fleet Backs Up the Demands of the British Minister—Friendly With Russia, but—

London, Aug. 27.—A special dispatch from Shanghai says: "Violent scenes are reported to have occurred between Sir Claude Macdonald, the British Minister, and M. Pavloff, the Russian Charge d'Affaires, owing to the latter's commanding the Tsung-Tsun to break its agreement with the Hong Kong Bank, under pain of Carr's strong displeasure. The Chinese are inclined to obey M. Pavloff, seeing that the British confine themselves to verbal protests.

"The position is now worse than ever. The Russian ships have returned to Port Arthur, while the British vessels are assembling at Wei-Hai-Wei and Chefoo. Extreme activity prevails ashore at Port Arthur.

"The actions of the Russians at New Chwang indicates an intention in their part to remain there in strong force whether they build the Tien-Tsin railway or not."

THE STORIES SEEM TO BE YELLOW
With reference to the sensational Chinese dispatches to the Daily Mail and to a news agency here, it should be observed that the Times, Pekin correspondent, Dr. Morrison, who has been constant in his alert throughout all the getting information ahead of the Foreign Office, has thus far telegraphed nothing on the subject.

The appointment of M. Pavloff as Russian Minister to China would seem to indicate better relations between England and Russia since M. Pavloff has been the active agent in all Russia's advances in China.

PAVLOFF REMOVED.

The Times, Pekin correspondent says that M. Pavloff, Russian Charge d'Affaires in China, has been appointed Russian Minister to China.

BRITAIN AND RUSSIA FRIENDLY.
The Copenhagen correspondent of the Daily Mail asserts that he is in a position to confirm the statement he recently made that a compromise has been arrived at between Russia and Britain, in accordance with which Russia gets her way in the railway questions and Britain gets concessions in other directions.

"The relations between England and Russia," the correspondent says, "are very satisfactory. The Russian concessions fully meeting English wishes."

THE SITUATION STRAIGHTENED.

The officials at the Foreign Office admit that there is "considerable truth" in the statement that the British Minister at St. Petersburg, Sir Charles Scott, has written a letter to the Tsung-Tsun, Li-Yamen and Sir Claude Macdonald, the British Minister to China, are strained to the point of rupture, and that Sir Claude has intimated that Great Britain will regard as a casus belli any failure on the part of China to observe her wishes.

They say that the situation between Great Britain and China is acute. Sir Claude Macdonald strenuously insists that China shall observe her engagements to the British syndicates and demanding satisfaction for the railway with regard to the Peking-Hankow railway. If necessary if the British squadron, now assembled at Wei-Hai-Wei, will support the British Minister's demands.

Meanwhile, add the Foreign Office officials, the negotiations that are being conducted by Sir Charles Scott, the British Minister at St. Petersburg, to define the respective British and Russian spheres of influence, are proceeding in a "perfectly friendly spirit."

HATE THE MONKS

The Philippines Send out a Bitter Attack on the Monks

London, Aug. 27.—The Philippine Islands Committee in Europe has received a letter to President McKinley regarding the appeals made to him by high Roman Catholic ecclesiastics in the United States to protect the religious orders in the islands.

The expulsion of the Friars, the committee contends, is "a necessary antecedent to moral sanitation."

The letter names particularly the Archbishop of Manila and the Bishops of Nueva Segovia and Kourra Carera, "whose acts of hostility against both natives and Americans and against the civil and other respected religious institutions are condemned by everyone."

The committee urges President McKinley to aid the Philippines to suppress the immorality of the diabolical institutions fostered by these monks.

THINK CANADA A HOSTAGE

Very Mistaken Views on the Quebec Conference

New York, Aug. 27.—The Evening Post's London cable says: "The Anglo-American Conference at Quebec is being watched here with keen attention for though they phrase it differently there is a general apprehension of the fact here that Canada is a hostage to England's good behavior towards the United States. The question around which the most interests centres is. What will the United States demand as the price of reciprocity."

A New York telegram to the Morning Post to-day, positively announces that the United States commissioners will not modify the stand they have decided to take in that matter. They will make concessions only in return for preferential treatment exclusively in favor of the United States, and will not pay for equal treatment to that accorded to Great Britain.

If so, then reciprocity is absolutely impossible, for positive assurances were received in London yesterday from a member of the Canadian Ministry that no treaty will be consented to by Canada that does not extend to the Motherland trade privileges accorded to the States.

His Municipal Duties

A Mayor in Roumania Is Captured Among a Band of Brigands

London, Aug. 27.—News from Roumania says that for some months a large brigand band has been terrorizing the country in the neighborhood of Galatz, and in spite of the strenuous efforts of the authorities to come up with them, has always most miraculously disappeared. Three days ago the brigandage succeeded in capturing five of the bandits, among whom they were assigned to find the mayor of the district, who, according to his companions, was responsible for the general account of booty, and managed with increasing advantage to himself the distribution of spoil, besides keeping them advised of the movements of the pursuing military and "putting them on" to describe a parties for robbing. This excellent example of a mayor is now "in the dungeon."

THEY MUST BUY OUR LOGS

Americans Believe That They Can Hold Our Markets

They will Ask for Access to Our Deep Sea and Inshore Fisheries, and a Monopoly of Seal Catching

Quebec, Aug. 27.—The commissioners are preparing the programme for next week's meeting. Rich side will produce one and then they will discover which parts can be compromised and which cannot. The impression is that the Americans do not believe that a general reciprocity treaty can be arranged because the United States are indifferent to the advantages of trade with Canada, and the special interests which would be adversely affected would prevent the ratification of a treaty in the Senate. Their idea is to settle the minor and irritating questions such as sealing and the Atlantic fisheries, and in the same treaty to provide for reciprocity in certain sorts of forest products, for the free entry of fish in return for the participation of American fishermen in the use of our deep sea and inshore fisheries on the Atlantic, and for a few smaller trade matters. A treaty of such scope would, they believe, pass the Senate, and its passage would pave the way for special reciprocity negotiations on a much wider basis later on. The Americans want to use our fisheries in the east, to prevent our catching seals in Behring Sea, to dig our gold in the Kootenai and to cut our logs in Ontario and the other provinces of the Dominion. As to reciprocity the Americans hold that Canada must buy raw cotton, most of the coal, iron, and steel, hides and many other raw materials because they can be obtained more cheaply from the United States than any other country. Thus their standpoint they need not grant reciprocity.

SPOFFORD HANGS HIMSELF

His Wife Confessed that He was Guilty of Inceniarism

This was the Warning Sent to La Fox, Illinois, Keep Clear of the Wires, Police are After You

Genoa, Ill., Aug. 27.—Two weeks ago, S. Spofford, a Canadian, who said he came from Brampton and was 26 years old, engaged himself as a farm hand at a Chicago employment agency to Frank Keenan, who lives near Johnson's mound, south-west of La Fox. He stated that his wife had died at Brampton and he could not bear to stay there any longer. Last Monday he hanged himself in the hay loft.

After the inquest the following letter was received by the Postmaster and handed to the coroner:

Ontario, Can., Aug. 21, 1898.

Mr. Charles Smith:

Dear Sir,—I have sent your wife's confession, which I have taken from The Toronto News. Your wife has written to me to go to see her. I expect she wants to know about the notes. I they get to know that you have left the country they could collect the notes, but Mr. Wm. McKee was over, and says that if you can trust us with the money we will take care of it, and I think you had better do it. May save the loss of them.

They will swear us in court, I expect. Herbert Bolton has been here twice. Warning—Keep well away from the telegraph wires, and keep very quiet. For the fire insurance company is after you, and have found out where you go on the train.

Burn these letters when you have read them.

HENRY WILSON.

The clippings referred to consisted of a special telegraphic despatch to The Evening News, Toronto, from Belton, Ont., bearing the date of Aug. 19, and stated that last summer the barns and crops of Isaac Bowes, of Abon Township, were destroyed by fire and several of his cattle poisoned; that during that week the wife of Charles Spofford, formerly the daughter of John Bowes, of Abon, had confessed that her husband killed the barns and poisoned the cattle while working for Bowes, that Spofford afterwards rented a farm, but threw it up and deserted her; that she was seriously ill and not expected to recover, and that she had kept silent because of threats upon her life made by her husband.

Upon the body of the dead man were found notes for $212, $100 and $34, drawn in Orangeville, Brampton and Paigrove, respectively, believed to be those referred to in the letter. Though the letter is addressed to Charles Smith the fact that the clipping refers to Charles Spofford is considered conclusive evidence that it was intended for him.

It is therefore apparent that Spofford being a fugitive from justice and false pretenses upon his mind, made away with himself.

Sir William Laurier's Brother Dead

Montreal, Aug. 27.—A despatch from Arthabaskaville, Que., says that Dr. David Laurier, half-brother of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, died at noon yesterday at the Premier's residence. Dr. Laurier was in his thirtieth year. He was educated at the College of L'Assomption. When admitted to the practice of medicine he moved West and settled down at Marquette, Mich., where he married a young French-Canadian lady. Some five or six years ago he was taken ill from consumption, and grew rapidly worse. He went out West some months ago, in the hope of improving his health. Three weeks ago he returned to Arthabaskaville.

PLEA TO WASHINGTON

Spaniards Want the Protection of U. S. for Their People in Ladrone

Madrid, Aug. 27.—Negotiations have been opened with Washington to obtain permission for the Spanish in the Ladrone Islands to go to Manila, as the situation in the Ladrone is extremely critical.

Commander Emilio Diaz de Motu, former captain of the cruiser Cristobal Colon, promises to conduct a lively anti Government campaign in the Cortes on his return to Spain. As soon as the commandante arrives the Government will ask the Cortes for authority to prosecute him, as he is a Deputy and this authorization is necessary.

A semi-official denial is made of the statement that Admiral Carver has written a letter, published in the American press, praising the American navy. His authorship is repudiated.

THE CABINET'S TRICKERY

Very Grave Charges are Made Against the Turner Government

His Honor Fires a Broadside and ex-Prime Minister Replies with the Charge That He had Taken in the Governor's Son, W. W. B. McInnes, All Would Have Been Seely

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 27.—The entire correspondence between Lieutenant-Governor McInnes and ex-Prime Minister Turner is published.

It discloses the Governor's objections commencing July 13, four days after the general elections, to appointments recommended by the Government, to the change of date of the polling in Cassiar district to September 1st, to the placing at the disposal of the Government agent in Cassiar of $15,000 for the relief of men in that district and employing them on the trails, and other sums asked to be placed at the immediate disposal of agents in various parts of the Province.

THE CABINET'S TRICKERY

The Lieutenant-Governor also refers to unpleasant interviews had with him by the Premier and other members of the Government, and quotes instances of warrants which he had previously intimated he would not approve of thrust in again during orders on routine matters in such a way that in some instances he was nearly led inadvertently to sign them. In one instance a warrant placed $2,500 at the disposal of the Chief Commissioner for the construction of a county school house.

I did not sign the warrant having previously refused to do so.

HAYFORK METHODS

The Governor intimated a case in which a batch of warrants were sent him for signature, fastened together in such a way that his signature on the last sheet would have indicated approval of all, but he inspected them all before signing the last sheet. "Too my surprise I found inserted therein, in different places six or seven warrants in blank. As I did not propose to approve of blank warrants, I cut them out. This was about July 14th last. I have since waited for some information in regard, or some inquiry for those warrants in blank, but none have been forthcoming.

A PLAIN DISMISSAL

The Governor's letter of August 8, which Mr. Turner said was not a dismissal, concludes as follows: "For as I would not feel justified in granting you another dissolution and appeal to the electorate, and as after a careful study of the situation, I am convinced that you could not command a majority in the Assembly, I shall not put the Province to the delay or the expense of a special session of the Legislature, merely for the purpose of formally demonstrating what has been already sufficiently demonstrated to me by the general election. I deem it my duty therefore, to ask as I do hereby ask, that yourself and your colleagues hand in your resignations as advisers to me and as members of my Executive Council."

THE SON WANTED A PLACE

Mr. Turner, replying to that letter, says amongst other things, that on June 18, T. R. McInnes, the Governor's son, and private secretary, told him that the way out of his difficulty was to give to W. W. B. McInnes, M.P., a Cabinet position and be (W. W. B. McInnes) would resign from the Dominion House, bring in one or two Opposition members to join Turner's party, and that W. W. B. McInnes confirmed the proposition.

The Governor in a subsequent letter characterizes the suggestion as impertinent.

Supplies Tomb.

These tombs, considered the oldest monuments of Egypt, are supposed to have been erected before the time of Joseph, and are profusely ornamented with a variety of colored figures, denoting coarsely that these ancient people were as gay and nimble as they were depicted, solemn and immovable in their usual sculpture. On some of the walls were hunting scenes, women playing the tambourine and dancing, or applying with shortness the business to those of either sex who stood in need of reformatory measures; glass blowers, brickmakers, barbers, playing their vocation and even a chariot driver attending to business. Over each picture was written what the artist intended to represent—an idea that might be employed to advantage by some of our 20th century painters.—Ottawa.

A Very Well Begotten.

The mole is one of the thickest of animals. It never burrows at any great distance from water, and at times of drought when the supply of the needed element is diminished or cut off the "little gentleman in the velvet coat" constructs the property by digging walls until it can reach a depth in which water may be obtained.

Professional Interest.

Miss Flatty—That is Professor Snuggles, the celebrated curiously dressed—London Tit-Bits.

THE ISOLATION OF A CHILD.

I once knew a dear little mother, with a beautiful blue-eyed boy. She constantly teased and teased him, and when he had tired of a toy she would take it and scold it and scrag it and lay it away in the sun, and that is the way she took care of his playthings, every one.

Put up in his own little playhouse. The baby grew pained and pale, and there were the neighbors' children. All dirty and happy and hale. If the baby went out for an airing, the nurse was to understand that some of the neighbors' children was over to teach his hand.

But they did, and the injured mother brought the dear baby inside and shut him up in his playhouse. Where the little one fretted and died. Then the torn heart turned to the Virgin, and this was the weight of her prayer: "O mother, dear, don't let my play with the other angels up there!" —Cy Warren in New York Sun.

MR. JORDAN'S MONEY.

The Former United States Treasurer Once Narrowly Escaped Arrest.

Ex-Treasurer Jordan frequently amuses his friends by telling of an exciting experience he had while treasurer of the United States. Mr. Jordan occasionally indulges in joking remarks uttered with a serious countenance. It was the indulgence of this proclivity while connected with the treasury department that came near resulting in his introduction to a pair of handcuffs and incarceration in a dingy cell. Mr. Jordan had occasion to make a trip to New York just at a time when a new $5 bill was issued by the bureau of engraving and printing. It happened that the treasurer on the day of starting on his trip drew a portion of his salary, and the cashier handed him a bunch of the new $5 bills, which had reached the office within an hour. When he arrived in New York, Mr. Jordan proceeded to purchase some needed articles and handed the clerk one of the new bills. The clerk had never seen money that looked like that bill, which was spotted and unscrupled by him. He examined the alleged money and the man who gave it to him with equal care. Mr. Jordan watched him with suppressed amusement and remarked in a matter of fact way:

"It's good money. I made it myself." That was enough for the clerk, who went to the cashier's desk with the bill. There was a hurried conference and a message was sent to police headquarters over the telephone. In a short time a couple of detectives in citizens' attire were standing on either side of the treasurer of the United States. They waited there to watch developments, fanning their hands in their pockets. In the meantime the cashier studied the new bill further, looked carefully over his counterfeit detector and rummaged through treasury circulars relating to the issuance of money. Finally he came across a description of the new $5 bill which was to be issued by the treasury department. His message had not yet reached the clerk, who was exchanging significant glances with the detectives and watching Mr. Jordan, when the latter, getting tired of waiting for his change and realizing that his new money was probably passing the cashier, produced his card. At the same moment the cashier's message that the money was not counterfeit reached the clerk, who was exchanging significant glances with the detectives and watching Mr. Jordan, when the latter, getting tired of waiting for his change and realizing that his new money was probably passing the cashier, produced his card. At the same moment the cashier's message that the money was not counterfeit reached the clerk, who was exchanging significant glances with the detectives and watching Mr. Jordan, when the latter, getting tired of waiting for his change and realizing that his new money was probably passing the cashier, produced his card.

An Unpleasant Remembrance.

A shabby man with mores, intellectual features and well dressed man whose countenance bespoke refinement coupled with a genial disposition rather than with mental power found themselves side by side in a Columbus avenue car.

"Why, Ned!" shouted the prosperous looking man as his kindly eye fell upon his neighbor.

"That's my name," the other grumbled, with anything but welcome in his look.

"How are you, old boy? I have not seen you—let me see—since we last college. It's nearly six years, by George!"

The ready passenger granted and looked complacent.

"Well, how is the world treating you Ned?" the demonstrative man pursued, more intimately than ever.

"Worse than you anyhow," his classmate asserted, jumping to his feet and abruptly disappearing from the car.

The successful man looked sheepish, and as if by way of setting himself right before the other passenger he proceeded quite audibly:

"I pity him, poor fellow. He was one of the brightest in our class, but he never had eyes in his work or any head in his dealings with the other students. He always knew any lesson but the one he was called upon to recite, and he would read a lot, but not the books he wanted for his college work, and he always managed to be out of sorts with some classmate or other, if not with the whole class. Well, he is the most honest and good natured fellow you ever came across. I don't know what he is doing, but I have heard he is in pretty hard luck." —New York

TESTIMONIALS:

The following are a few from scores of testimonials the Sergt. Major has from people who have used this preparation:

My hair was falling out for six or eight months until the top of my head was quite bald, when a friend advised me to try KENNY'S Hair Restorer. I did so, and am happy to say that after using two large bottles my hair is restored to its natural condition with a more healthy appearance. The falling out of the hair stopped and all desired removed. I was only using the Hair Restorer about two months, February and March, until the new growth was fully developed. I can therefore, from my own experience recommend KENNY'S Hair Restorer as a most reliable hair remedy and I believe it has no equal for the prevention of baldness.

BLANCO ISSUES A PROCLAMATION AT HAVANNA

Cubans will Soon Repent—When They Encounter the Difficulties of Government They will Go to the Spaniards for Help

Havana, Aug. 26.—General Blanco has issued the following proclamation to the people of Havana:

"We have been vanquished and, without consideration of our birthplace, will be to-morrow as strangers to this country and as emigrants to this portion of the earth, which, until to-day and probably a few weeks more, is part of our Spanish fatherland."

"As strangers and as the vanquished I counsel you, the people of Cuba, whose hearts are Spanish and who deeply feel the disgrace of their country, not to dispute any of the benefits which the triumph gives to the victors."

"It is our obligation now to be quiet; not to take any part in the different manifestations of a local political nature and even to decline participation in such affairs, even if the right of franchise be offered us."

"But you have one duty, which should be a duty of love, that is to undertake the task of reconstruction of all your interests, and it is your duty also to ask for, even appeal, if it becomes necessary from your position as the vanquished to the victorious for a guarantee of your personal safety, and the protection of your proper interests."

"If you do as I counsel you the United States will take care of your lives and your interests. My mission here soon will be finished, as will the sovereignty of Spain, and anyone who feels that with honor to himself he may call himself a Spaniard, will have to register his name at the Spanish consulate, which will be established in this city."

"I am convinced that there will be no further disputes between the Cubans and the Spaniards in this island, for it is my belief that as soon as the Cubans begin to govern here they will find out how useful the Spaniards are to them, and finally concede to them the place they deserve in the government of the island."

Your compatriot,
RAMON BLANCO."

London, Aug. 26.—The Hong Kong correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "The retention of the prohibitive Spanish duties at Manila by the American authorities is causing concern among merchants here, who have asked United States Consul General Wildman to use his influence with General Merritt to secure a modification of them. American commerce of Manila here for $1.90 a case, while at Manila alone the duty alone is $2.05. Flour pays 70 cents a sack."

"The object of the Spaniards in imposing prohibitive duty was to shut out foreign imports. If they are retained they will prevent the importation of all foreign goods into Manila. Merchants here, in shipping goods to Manila, did so on the understanding that the Manila tariff would be in accord with the existing American customs laws."

THE SINKING OF A SHIP.

Washington, Aug. 25.—Adjutant General Corbin this morning received from General Lawton, now in command of the American troops for the inspection of the Americans, General Shafter and his staff sailed yesterday afternoon on the U.S. transport Mexico. His departure was not marked by a special incident. On arriving at Manila Point he will go with Major Miles to Washington to meet President McKinley and Secretary Alger, afterwards proceeding to San Francisco.

On the recommendation of Washington officials a bank of exchange will be established here. The scarcity of small coin is a great inconvenience and a cause of much trouble among the soldiers and local merchants. One result is exorbitant prices. The report for Aug. 25th: Total sick, 57; total fever, 67; total now cases of fever, 39; total of fewer cases returned to duty, 43. Deaths seven.

THE PEACE JUBILEE

Chicago, Aug. 26.—President McKinley has accepted the invitation to attend the peace jubilee to be held in Chicago in October. He will possibly be accompanied by Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, and John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy.

THE PRAIRIE ASHORE.

New York, Aug. 26.—The United States steamer Prairie is reported to be ashore three miles east of Annapolis, L.I. She has 400 troops aboard. All are reported as safe and well and assistance has been sent.

PASSENGER CORPSES.

San Francisco, Aug. 26.—The Spanish transport San Francisco, San Augustin and Colon left yesterday afternoon for Spain with 1,000 Spaniards, including fifteen officers and their families and four priests. Eight men died on the way to the ship. Their corpses were "checked off" as passengers. It appears that there have been many fatalities of this during the embarkation of the Spaniards, the transportation company thus being enabled to collect the passage money, a thing readily managed under the easy Collingwood, Aug. 26.—The McCarthyite convention, to be held next week in Stayner, is said to be of considerable importance. It is the representation of North Simcoe in the House of Commons. Old and wise heads put the matter thus and their reason for doing so is obvious; they must show at least a pretence of their desire to unite the two Conservative parties; it would be impolitic and uncharitable to do otherwise. Observant electors believe, however, that the convention is really for one purpose, viz., to nominate Leighton G. McCarthy, who has been conducting a quiet campaign throughout the riding for two months, in anticipation of securing the candidature. Leighton McCarthy's dodge in refusing to call himself an Independent Conservative or Independent Liberal, by simply "Independent," presents the probability that he is afraid of losing the Grit vote in the one case and McCarthyites in the other. He wants to make sure of the McCarthyites and Liberals, and does not care to run what the straight Conservatives do.

LEIGHTON NOT THE MAN.

Leighton McCarthy is not the man, however, that can do the mantle of the late Dalton McCarthy, whose following in North Simcoe was largely a personal one. He was a man in whom the people had confidence, and whose ability would be used in the right direction. The majority of his supporters did not vote for him because of any policy he represented; they simply relied on him as a man of integrity and earnestness and experience who would do what was right. Dalton McCarthy is dead, however, and where is the man that can take his place? His death also removed the Independent element, root and branch, from the House of Commons, and the next representative of North Simcoe, no matter what ticket he may be elected on, will be either Liberal or Conservative in the House at Ottawa. In fact, it is believed that Dalton McCarthy himself some time before his death had become dissatisfied with his representation of North Simcoe and intended to return to the Conservative party or quit politics altogether. If the Grit party fell in line with the so-called Independent candidate, and indications are that way at present, Conservatives will certainly feel it their urgent duty to put a man in the field and endeavor to bring back the McCarthyites to the fold.

ARRANGEMENTS BEING MADE

To Entertain the Peace Representatives at Paris in the Near Future

Washington, Aug. 22.—In view of the early meeting at Paris of the Spanish-American Peace Commissioners, arrangements are already under way for the entertainment of this distinguished body. It is understood that the commission will be the guests of the French Government, and while no formal invitation has yet been extended, there is reason to believe one will come in due time and that the commissioners will receive every courtesy and attention which the French Government can bestow.

The meetings of the commission will be held at the French Foreign Office, in the sumptuous and historic salon de Ambassadeurs. It was there that the famous congress of Paris met in 1856. The salon is probably the most elegant official apartment in all Europe, being hung with gobelin tapestries and decorated with lavish frescoes and works of art. Near the salon are private chambers suitable for committee rooms and for the meetings of the respective governments.

The several commissioners will choose their own private quarters, although Secretary Day may be the guest of the United States Embassy. The President hopes to be able to announce the names of the commissioners "on the part of the United States this week."

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York Physician has discovered the merits of Ripans Tablets with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I ascertained that if one wished to become a physician, he should do a beneficial deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Ripans Tablets, which is the best of the Ripans Tablets, and cause it to be put up in the form of a booklet and distributed among the poor."

Sales increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of H. B. Rogers & Co. on Broadway in New York City.

A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tablets were selling bought a five-cent carton and said:

"Do you know, I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar."

"At the time of this interview these were present two druggists who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should go to the credit of the newspaper, but to do this the older lady agreed: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tablets to any one afflicted as I was. In the last about my case in the paper, which was so greatly benefited by them, I have been, I am not mistaken. The druggists, knowing how carefully she felt about the health of her child, decided she was quite right."

"The sale of Ripans Tablets is constantly and is increasing. One especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of them, through the recommendation of friends to friends. Satisfaction with them is very general. When some day you begin to notice that a prominent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intimate mark, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of domestic troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Purdum Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tablets for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I have always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tablets recommended very highly in the New York Herald, I decided to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $5 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tablets has done me a world of good, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar."

"At the time of this interview these were present two druggists who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should go to the credit of the newspaper, but to do this the older lady agreed: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tablets to any one afflicted as I was. An old astronomer there was
Who lived up in a tower
Named Ptolemy Operatives Flammarion McOver.
He said: "I can prognosticate
With estimates correct,
And when the skies I contemplate
I know what to expect.
When dark'ning clouds obscure my sight,
I think perhaps 'twill rain,
And when the stars are shining bright
I know 'tis clear again."
And then abstractedly he scanned
The heavens hour by hour,

THAT SEDAN CHAIR.

"I repeat it," said Jacques d'Elgno, with an emphasis so curious that all turned to look at him; "it gave me the fright of a lifetime."

"A sedan chair?"

"Yes, listen, if you would know all about it." And he told us the following story:

"A love tale," said he, "of the city of Lille, of my twentieth year, and my pastry cook's daughter, a mere child, but so pretty, so sweet, so adorably coquettish; moreover, so admirably skilled in all pertaining to her father's business. Nowhere else could I buy such cake, such bun, such sugared almond.
And the stacks and stacks of rich confections that I devoured each day to prove my devotion!"

"The fire of my love—which she returned between the smiles bestowed upon her father's customers—alone saved me from gastritis by consuming the heaviness of my stomach."

"This was the state of things, when, one day, I chanced to find the pass key of 'le pere,' who spent half his time in the wine-shop across the way and the other half gossiping at his door with his equally idle neighbors."

"Determined to profit by this piece of luck, I managed to speak a word to Vi-toire, my little sweetheart, and to propose to her a visit to the theater that evening, if she could elude the vigilance of her mother and join me unseen.
She could easily re-enter by means of the pass key."

"Victoire was charmed with my inspiration, and six hours after I had conceived the project we had carried it into execution. Although it was the middle of the winter the night was superb, a late rising moon, but thousands of brilliant stars shining from every quarter of the heavens. Victoire trembled like a leaf in the wind, but I was filled with each burning ardor that it amounted to my head like a drink of wine."

"We were young, you see; the theater for us was a scene of enchantment, in love with each other and more than happy. Our hearts, like the strings of some delicately tuned instrument, vibrated to the slightest touch. In fact, we forgot everything but each other and never thought of moving when at last the final curtain fell until the lampist appeared to turn out the lights."

"Hurrying then to the street, we found that the night had changed. The stars were gone, the moon hidden under a canopy of clouds, a cold, penetrating rain beginning to fall and all the sedan chairs gone with the stars."

"No, I was wrong; one was left standing by the roadside a little way below us. At sight of it a fatal idea popped into my brain. It was not yet very late, and I had still so many beautiful things to say to Victoire. Why not go into that chair, a refuge from the chilly rain, and talk everything all over again?"

"The clock at the corner was just striking 12 as we slipped into our moveable apartment, rather cramped, to be sure, but both of us were light and this, as, drawing close and snug like birds in a nest, we awaited the passing of the shower—obscurely awaited it, too—when all at once something very strange occurred."

"The door of the house near which the chair was standing opened noiselessly, as if hung on velvet, and two men looked out, evidently desiring neither to be seen nor heard."

"Amazed of solitude and a clear conscience, they descended to the street, bearing in their arms a heavy burden. Just as that instant the moon slid from under the clouds, and we distinctly saw that this burden was a human being wrapped in a long cloak closely muffled about the face and shoulders."

"This was startling enough, but fancy our horror when the bearers of this strange load moved straight to the chair where we crouched in terror, and one of them already had his hand on the door when Victoire uttered a stifled shriek, answered by a frightful oath, and quick as a flash the men were gone as they had come, and the door reclosed as softly as it had opened."

"The whole thing had passed so quickly that we might have believed it some fearful vision, only doubt was not possible—we had seen it—both of us had distinctly seen the same thing, and without a spoken syllable were filled with the same blood freezing thought—murder—a murder doubtless committed in this very house, from which the murders were now seeking to carry away and to conceal all traces of the crime with the victim's body."

"Oh, let us go, let us go!" moaned Victoire tremblingly. "Let us go at once, Jacques. I am so frightened!"

"Go? Yes, I was willing enough, but how? For as Victoire spoke, two men emerged from the darkness around us—we could barely distinguish them, as the moon had gone behind a cloud again—caught up the chair and were bearing us away into the dismal night."

"This was a predicament. We were stunned. What must we do? Cry out, and make a dreadful scandal? Betray Victoire, and expose myself to the risk of discovery? Never! It was not to be thought of! It was not to be thought of! It was one of those times when trust in chance was the only resource, hoping by blind confidence to precipitate her fate."

"Perhaps this was my one; perhaps,

and I am inclined to think the latter, we were both so frightened that we had neither the strength nor the courage to attempt anything. Victoire had unconsciously thrown herself into my arms.
Her warm breath fanned my cheek. Her little hand held fast to mine. No matter what threatened us, it was something at least, to have gained this happiness:
we would die together, her last sigh on my lips."

"For these men—we were sure of it —were accomplices of the first two, and by a previous arrangement they had been engaged for the carrying off and concealing of the dead body. Deceived by our joint weight, they believed they had it, and we, instead of the murdered victim, were hurrying away through the shadowy gloom."

"True, so we were, but where were we hurrying? Where were we heading, as the men trotted on with swift, untiring steps, at times almost a run? What were they going to do with us—their master's burden?"

"Presently we saw that we were passing one of the city gates leading into the distant country. Again I was tempted to cry out, to call to the sentinel, but fear for Victoire deterred me, Victoire, whose mother believed her slumbering sweetly under her little white curtains."

"What should I do? What could I do? I was nearly distracted."

"By this time we were clear of the suburbs, but still swept onward. Another lightening of the sky, and I saw ahead of us a glistening sheet of water, the river Deule. I knew it well—a deep, rapid stream, the running of whose current we even now could hear."

"Undoubtedly the wretches were going to fling us into this seething vortex."

"This time I would have cried out, but Victoire, mad with fright, clung so tightly to my neck, clasping me with such force that my veins died in my throat, my eyes closed and the cry was strangled."

"How long a time elapsed I never knew. I was brought back to consciousness by the chair striking the ground.
They had set it down preparatory to—yes, but where, where? Decidedly not in the river. It was a room, on the contrary, the dirty, grimy chamber of a low country wine-shop, where a crowd of rough, coarse men were drinking, swearing and rolling about a lot of boxes, barrels and packages, like merchandise."

"Mme. Jervaise, Mme. Jervaise!" they shouted in chorus, as our bearers set us down. "Have you brought us Mme. Jervaise?"

"She is here," the bearers replied.
"To work, to work, then! We have no time to lose."

"And the chair door was thrown open.
But scarcely had they caught sight of Victoire and me, crouching half dead in the bottom of the chair, when a wild stampede took place, a better shatter rush for the outside. The lights were extinguished, the tread of feet was heard pounding away into the night, and then a deep, bloodcurdling stillness."

"We were alone in black darkness.
"Luckily I had noticed the direction of the door. To leap from the chair, like Victoire's hand and make my way to it was the work of a second. The clouds had not deepened, the rain had ceased, and by the purest miracle we found the road back to the city. By daylight we were safe at home."

"A fortnight later perhaps an article in a morning paper gave me the key to the mystery of that hideous night in which we (Victoire and I) had been so strangely involved. The article announced the capture by the police of a band of smugglers who had installed themselves in an old, abandoned wine-shop in the outskirts of Lille—a regular magazine, as it turned out, of contraband goods, which they had smuggled in and out of the city by means of a manikin representing a sick old woman, partly paralyzed, and which, muffled in wraps and placed in a sedan chair, they carried back and forth under the very nose of the gendarmes without the slightest fear of detection."

"An invalid ordered by the doctor to take the steam baths," they told the officers of the law, "by name Mme. Jervaise."

"Mme. Jervaise! The name told me all and explained everything that hitherto had seemed mysterious and inexplicable in our midnight adventure.
Happily for us our nocturnal escapade had never been suspected, and Victoire and I escaped a summons to appear as witnesses before the court of assizes.
All the same from that day to this the thought of a sedan chair gives me goose flesh down the spine."—From the French in Cincinnati Enquirer.

COMPRESSIBLE FLOUR

The British admiralty and the war department are testing under various atmospheric conditions, the new method for preserving flour. One objection to the establishment of national granaries has been the difficulty of storing grain for any length of time. The grain germ rotates and is ruined, and to keep large quantities in sound condition has been pronounced impracticable. Experiments are being made with a system of compression into briquets by hydraulic pressure. The trials show that the flour so treated is not affected by damp, even under unfavorable conditions, and is free from mold. The compression destroys all forms of larval life and the flour is thus rendered safe from the attacks of the insects. The saving in storage is enormous, as the cubic space occupied by 100 pounds of loose flour will hold more than 500 pounds of the compressed article.—Scientific American.

A REMARKABLE CONTEST.

A Sick Woman's Struggle to Outlive an Invalid for Her Children's Sake.

A remarkable case developed at Morrisburg, Ind., says The Louisville Republic. Morgan Chandler, a banker and a resident of Greenfield, several weeks ago executed his will, dividing his large estate among his nearest relatives. Among them was Eliza Burton, to whom he had bequeathed $10,000, which she was to receive providing she was not living with her husband, Charles, at the time of the testator's death, she having married Burton against his wishes. It was also stated in the will that, should the testator survive the wife, the bequest was to go to the legatee named in the will, not to Burton nor his heirs.

Soon after the will was drawn Burton died, leaving Mrs. Burton to support the children which she did, by taking in washing, sewing, etc. Several weeks ago the illness was taken ill, and at about the same time the wealthy uncle was also stricken. Both grew constantly worse. The neighbors and friends of the widow took great interest, wishing her to survive the uncle, having learned the provisions of the will.

Greenfield and Morrisburg have telephone connections and the friends of the widow were kept constantly informed as to the condition of the uncle. Both patients grew weaker. At times the mother would seem to be breathing her last, but she would be administered and she would revive, or long enough to enquire as to the condition of her relative, when she would return to a comatose state.

This was continued thirty-six hours, and all hopes of prolonging her life were virtually abandoned. Finally a message came that Morgan Chandler was dead. Mrs. Burton had endured the tortures of death long enough to secure a fortune for her children. They were summoned to her bedside, and with a blessing upon them she closed her eyes and passed away. Chandler McDonald of the Union Bank has been appointed their guardian.

The New Millionaire.

I ran across a new millionaire the other day whose name I have not yet seen in the papers. I found him and his family in a little room from whose windows one could see the lake. The thing that my friend Midas needs many servants and a palace to make sumptuous goes grandly on here in new room and an alcove. The new millionaire is a man of good nature, do all the work gratis. On the looking-glass was printed this little poem of Lucy Larcom's:

"ALL THINGS ARE MINE."

"I do not own an inch of land,
But all I need is in my hand;
The orchards and the mowing fields,
The winds my tax-collectors are;
They bring me little dividends,
Wild scents and subtle incense,
A tribute rare and free;
And more magnificent than all,
My windows keep for me
A glimpse of blue immensity,
A little strip of sea."
—Chicago Record.

The Speedy Racehorse.

A wild boar hunt was the exciting sport a number of the young men of South Jacksonville had looked forward to last week with a great deal of pleasure. The wild boar was a rascally hog. He was installed in a pen and fed with red pepper, gunpowder and dynamite, and became as fierce as his reputed cousin the Black Forest.

On the day of the hunt a cavalcade assembled at the meeting place armed with javelins and spears made of bamboo with hunting knives tied to the end.

The wild boar was liberated and trotted away into the woods. He squealed a half-contented, inquisitive, where's-the-rest-of-my-family sort of a squeal with no thought of the pursuers who squealed and whistled their horses into furious pursuit.

The wild boar trotted along—just simply and coolly trotted. He didn't look as if he was going, but the gun soon distanced the pursuers, and they were robbed of the pleasure of "jabbing" him full of holes.—Florida Times Union.

Sergeant Sue's Frank.

The father of Eugene Sue was a physician with exalted patients all over Europe, who sent him the choicest wines. The emperor of Austria, for instance, had contributed today, the king of Prussia rare hock, Queen Christina of Spain priceless alcañates, Prince Metemich genuine cachet d'or, and so on. The whole was kept in a large iron cupboard in the study of the learned physician, known as the Elisevir library. Eugene was then a college freshman, and, having procured a skeleton key to the closet, with his friends, Adolphe, Adam, Veron and others, proceeded every night to investigate the contents of the bottles. Not wishing to have their explorations prematurely stopped, they took the precaution to fill up the partially exhausted flasks with water and then to reassemble them. When, for a long time afterward, the doctor brought forth samples of his precious stock for the delectation of guests worthy of it, and the company tasted it with a due sense of awe, it was privately felt that the celebrity of these great brands was all moonshine, that ordinary table d'hôte beverages was preferable to them. But nobody dared to say so, and it was only after the death of his dreading parent that the novelist confessed the mortification.

CANARIES

They Are Subject to Many Diseases—How They Should Be Treated.

To neglect the cleanliness of food, cage or water is a sure means of bringing on disease. The cage should be so arranged as to be easy of access for the bird's head, and the feeding dish should be shallow and large enough to prevent the bird from injuring his plumage in his vigorous plunges.

Parasites which are too small to be seen of injury to the bird. They should be taken of the same size throughout—about twice the diameter of a common lead pencil.

If a young canary is observed to sleep more than usual or if it has the appearance of a puff ball, it should be taken in hand at once. Probably it is suffering from indigestion, arising from unwholesome or stale food, or from being given too many delicacies. The bird should be caught and a couple of drops of castor oil dropped down its throat, or the drinking water may be removed from the cage for a couple of hours and then put back with a few drops of cod liver oil floating on the top.

Either of these remedies will probably afford relief. The bird should then be removed to a dry, warm place and fed on crushed hemp for a few days.

Diarrhoea is caused by giving too much green food, food which is wet or decayed or stale seeds. Bad drinking water is another frequent cause. When the first symptoms of moulting are observed, give a little magnesia in the drinking water, 10 or 15 grains to a wineglassful, or put in the fountain a small leaf, changing it every day.

To catch cold when moulting is almost always certain death to the bird. Therefore avoid drafty places for the cage. At this time an abundance of food is necessary, and must be given by additions of a little hemp seed, white bread soaked in milk and lettuce or endive. The bird should also be kept warm.

Canaries are subject to many diseases. A common complaint is asthma. This generally arises from indigestion and leads to plain and rapid death moulting with water as the sole food. In very bad cases leave off hemp seed and use rape only; give abundance of bread soaked in water and pressed; lettuce or watercress, according to season; twice a week give a boiled bread and milk ball about as large as the end of the thumb.

This is made by throwing a piece of the crumb of bread into a cup of milk, boiling and stirring with a wooden spoon till it is of the consistency of pap. It must be given cold and always freshly made. If allowed to sour, it will give indigestion. This paste acts as a purge and its effects must be watched.

For overgrown claws and bent and sharp spurs and take care to avoid drawing blood. The long claws are a source of discomfort and danger, especially when the female is nesting.

A bird which is egg bound needs immediate treatment. Give coarse brown sugar and drop some sweet oil into the food.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Singular Pet.

In a "Tour Around Hawaii," written in 1888, is this amusing description of an odd pet, the favorite of two native women: When we reached the house of our host, the head man of Kapaeha, we met a cordial reception.

Two of the Hawaiian females are with-out a pet, usually a dog. Here we observed a species of favorite that we had not seen before. It was a curly tailed dog about a year and a half old, three or four feet long and in tolerable order. He belonged to two sisters of our host and joined the social circle around the evening hearth.

During the evening he closely followed every movement made by his mistresses, and at supper put forth his nose and received his portion at their hands. According to custom, they washed their hands after the meal, and then passed the bowl to the dog.

At the usual time for retiring to rest these two ladies spread their mats and topos on the ground in one corner, and, as is the usual practice, lay down to sleep with their clothes on. The dog waited very quietly till they had taken their places, when he marched over their tapes and stretched himself between them. The large tape that covered them all was then drawn up by one of them to his ears, after which he reclined his head on a pillow by his side.

I could not forbear smiling broadly at seeing the three heads in a row. This disconcerted the women a little, and they raised their heads and the dog grunted.

The brother said that his sisters had a great attachment for the dog, having fed it since it was a few days old, and did not like to have it sleep out with the other dogs in the cold, adding that if it were not out it would make such a noise all night at the door that no one in the house would be able to sleep.

Klondike Gold.

He had spent two or three winters in the Klondike country, or said he had, and he was telling his friends about it.

"It isn't so awfully cold up there when one gets used to it, is it?" asked a listener. "Well," he hesitated, "I don't really suppose it is; anyhow, it isn't to the one that's used to it. He doesn't know a thing about it. He's been from death a month by this time."

"Oh, indeed," stammered the inquirer, who seemed to be disturbed by the sad fate of the person accustomed to it.

ELECTRICITY AND CROPS

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Frenchmen Know the Secret—Seeds, Flowers, Grapes, Strawberries and Vegetables Showing Extraordinary Vigor When Electricity is Applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effects of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires soon withers away and dies; when artificially stimulated by an electric current it blossoms forth far more vigor than in a normal condition.

With this data to work upon, the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making dates at the rate of 100, which is a very unusual thing to happen in France.

Peas, beans and maize grew with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with batteries were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current.

The resulting crop was uneven in character, according as one particular section received more or less of the electric current. With the powerful electrical machines much more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

Electrical machines are far too expensive, however, for a farmer to use, and though all right in theory they are too costly in practice.

The new invention is called the geomagnetifer, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surmounted with a cheval de frise of copper spikes, designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connected with a copper wire (also insulated from the pole), which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given acre has been increased 80 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetifer is used are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume also as they are stimulated in this manner.

The exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that each action takes place. Some hold that it acts by adding the plants to assimilate the acids of the atmosphere, while others think that it favors the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil.

The experiment can be tried on any lawn or flower bed as long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without giving any protection.

It is estimated that a geomagnetifer sixty feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. At the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

Coleridge Liquid With an Extract of Marmorek.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, purpura, fever and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the peculiar and lengthy name of Anti-streptococcic. It has been seen at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a thin, colorless liquid, resembling water in almost every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it as yet in existence—little more than a tiny vialful, indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused pretty nearly all Paris—that section of it is least which takes an interest in medical affairs and in the science of curing disease. All these things have been inquired and regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that he is based on every hand with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and sufferers, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and the medical fraternity for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for acting in his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxine cure, when the institute was besieged by anxious crowds demanding the new remedy and offering large sums of money for even a little of it. When the doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply of it on hand, the crowd returned and applauded the Pasteur physicians violently, calling them unhuman and brutal. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly Work of the New Bullet.
Sir Benjamin Baker, in a paper on "War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but 'the part is always pounded; fragments are frequently carried out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulped, and, in fact, the limb mangled and damaged beyond repair.' It may not unreasonably be extended, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life everyone a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet even at a mile's distance, and further, by making vicious and vengeful snipers equally, and the cost of killing a man to be incomparably greater than of old, engineering science has done more to make war unpopular than all the army tactics of the world will ever be able to do, however much they may endeavor to direct attention.

The Health of the Hair

is indicated by its condition. When the natural secretions decrease, when the hair becomes dry, splits at the ends and comes out in bunches; when the gloss disappears and the hair becomes gray or faded, the health of the hair is indicated. The success of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is due to the fact that it restores the hair-producing organs to their natural vigor. It encourages and promotes the secretion of the hair follicles, and thus gray or faded hair regains its original color, new growth begins, and lost lustre is restored.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

In the Cells.
One tramp and a drunk occupied cells at the police station last night.

At the regular meeting of October Lodge, No. 13, last night, one candidate received the first degree, and two candidates the second. P. G. Copeland, Brockville, was among the visitors present.

Poor Outlook in Haliburton.
Haliburton county people are not in a very hopeful frame of mind. Early frosts and long continued drought damaged potatoes and grain. The price of cordwood is very low, and lumbering operations will likely be curtailed next winter.

Fire in the South Ward.
About 2:30 o'clock this morning an alarm of fire was sent in from the South Ward. Michael O'Brien's residence on Sherbrooke street was the scene of the blaze. The brigade turned out promptly and soon had the fire under control. Its origin is a mystery. The damage, principally from water, was slight.

Cheap Rates to Toronto.
The C. P. R. has announced a $1.25 rate to Toronto and return, good to go on August 30th up to September 9th inclusive, and return up to and including September 12th. This means that the rate is $1.25, flat, during the Toronto Exhibition. The C.P.R. is the shortest, fastest and most convenient route to the Queen city. Trains leave at 4:42 a.m., 7:10 a.m., 1:18 p.m., and 4:25 p.m.

Down the River.
Say, the summer is passing and you have not been down the river for the prettiest fall in this province. Or, perhaps, you have been down and promised yourself the fall again. Well, remember that Capt. Martin is again in charge of the North Star, and that this popular steamer will run daily trips to Rice Lake points. The steamer will leave the wharf at 8:15 a.m. each day except Saturday. On Saturday she leaves at two o'clock in the afternoon. The best of attention is received on the North Star.

A Bad Case.
Saturday's issue of the Ottawa Free Press contains the following:—A bad case has come to light in the removal of a young lady student from the Normal school. She came from Lindsay, Ont., to a Slater street boarding house, and told the lady of the house she did not wish to be introduced to any of the gentlemen boarders. She would get up and walk around the house at night in the dread that someone was following her. She was sent to a Metcalf street institution as her matters were causing some uneasiness among the rest of the boarders. Her strange actions continued with the result that she was taken home.

SEWERAGE COMMITTEE

Take Preliminary Steps for a Big Extension of the Sewage System.

The Sewerage Committee met in the clerk's office last night. There were present Councillors Best, Chairman, McWilliams, Dawson, W. H. White, Deane, and Langford.

Some half dozen petitions asking for extension of the sewerage system on different streets were presented.

The Council will be asked to grant the various extensions—the Committee having recommended such action.

The new ground covered by the petitions is as follows:

From the corner of Belmont and Homewood avenues to Hunter street; down Hunter to Park; south along Park to Charlotte; east along Charlotte to Aymer.

From Charlotte south along a lane between Belmont and Stewart streets to the corner of White, Adams and Gilmour properties.

From the Roman Catholic Church on Hunter street to Park street.

From the Convent down Reid street to Charlotte street.

From Simcoe street down Rubidge street to Charlotte street.

From Water street to Dixon street on Melksham street.

Moved by Councillor Deane, seconded by Councillor Melrum, that Town Engineer Belcher be authorized to prepare plans and specifications for sewers on the streets specified in the petitions at the regular meeting of the Council on Tuesday evening, Sept. 6. Carried.

Councillor Best stated that the sewer on Stewart street from Dalhousie to Rink was not in good working order, and that some action should be taken in regard to the same at once.

Moved by Councillor Dawson, seconded by Councillor Melrum, that the Town Engineer be instructed to inspect the sewer on Stewart street from Dalhousie street to its intersection with the Rink street sewer, ascertain its condition and report to the Council.

Carried.

It is the intention of the Committee to have the construction of these sewers proceeded with at once, and rushed forward to completion.

The Committee then adjourned.

CHARITY BOARD

Some further unimportant business was transacted and the Board adjourned to meet on the last Monday in September, at 7:30 p.m.

TELEPHONE CO'S FRANCHISE

Considered Last Night by Committee of the Whole Council.

The Town Council met last night in Committee of the Whole.

There were present Messrs. W. H. White, Deane, Aldridge, Langford, Melrum, McWilliams, Dawson, Best and W. H. White.

Mr. J. S. Knappman, District Manager of the Bell Telephone Co., appeared in reference to renewing the Company's franchise which expires on the 1st of September. He said the Company had been paying the town $400 a year for the franchise, but that they considered this amount excessive, particularly when the fact that Peterborough was getting cheaper rates than any other town in Canada was taken into consideration. The best offer the Company was prepared to make for the franchise was the granting of a free fire alarm system and a guarantee not to increase the present rates during the next five years.

After some discussion the matter was referred to the Finance Committee, on motion of Councillor Dawson, seconded by Councillor Deane.

The question of exempting from taxes the Matthews Co.'s proposed extension to their pork packing establishment was next discussed.

Geo. Matthews, representing the company, was present and stated that he would like to have the matter settled at once as they wished to commence building operations as soon as possible.

A large consensus of opinion appeared to be in favor of exempting the property as far as possible, but the law would not allow the Council to grant exemption from school taxes.

It was decided to finally settle the question at the next meeting of the Council.

The meeting then adjourned.

Go to Toronto with the Lacrosse team Tuesday, per Q.T.R. Ticket only $1.25, good to return the same evening at 8.30 or on any train up to Sept. 12th

TO ACQUIRE A LOT

The Town Wants a Lot on which to Store its Street Sweeper, Road Grader, Etc.

The Street and Bridge Committee met in the town hall last night. Present—Councillors Dawson, Chairman, Best, W. H. White, Melrum, McWilliams and Langford.

The propriety of purchasing a lot for the use of the corporation was discussed.

The acquisition of a stationary stone crusher makes such a purchase almost an absolute necessity. An electric motor will be necessary to operate it, and considerable room will be required for the stone used by the machine. The stone roller will also require to be housed and these necessities together with a much needed roadway, furnish the best of reasons for such a purchase being made. The lot will require to be central.

After a thorough discussion of the pros and cons in this connection it was Moved by Councillor Best, seconded by Councillor Melrum, that the clerk insert an advertisement in the local papers asking for tenders for a suitable lot for the corporation, same to be received up to Thursday, 1st Sept., and that the Street and Bridge Committee inspect the properties offered the Friday following. Carried.

Councillor Dawson stated that some difficulty would be experienced in the construction of the granite walk on George street opposite Akerman's factory, owing to the unequal foundation. At this particular point a depression had been filled in with loose material, forming a foundation sufficiently strong for an ordinary sidewalk, but entirely inadequate for a granite walk.

The matter was left in the hands of the Town Engineer, with the understanding that the work is not to be completed further than Sherbrooke street until the question is further considered. On reaching Sherbrooke street the contractors will be asked to do the Charlotte street contract.

Councillor Langford drew the attention of the Committee to the town's liability for damages for accidents occurring through electric light, telephone and telegraph poles being out of line with the walks. Some of these poles were two or three feet out, and were very dangerous, especially in case of runaways.

The Street Inspector was instructed to notify the interested companies and have the matter complained of rectified.

The Committee then adjourned.

RIVER AND LAKE NOTES

PASSED CONFEDERATE BILLS

Chas. Fugue and Wm. Dunsen, of Peterborough, Found Guilty After a Long Trial.

Last night's Toronto News contains the following: Charles Fugue and William Dunsen, the two Peterboro men who secured a number of old five dollar and ten dollar Confederate bills and succeeded in passing them off upon a number of keepers of disreputable resorts on Richmond, Jarvis, and Emily streets, were found guilty after a long trial.

Out of some of the good money found on the prisoners the soiled doves were reimbursed, the lawyers got the remainder, and to-morrow the Magistrate will say how long the men will stay in goal.

—Lindsay Warder—Now that autumn is coming on why not form an association foot-ball league in Victoria county or a league of the big towns in this district, embracing, say, Peterboro, Lindsay, Uxbridge, Port Perry, and Whitby? Let us hear from the kickers.

—Miss McDunn, the first wife of Rev. W. J. Thompson, the Baptist preacher now under arrest for her murder, formerly resided in Orillia. The crime is alleged to have taken place in Ipswich, Mass., in May last.

—Rev. Mr. Shepherd, Church of England clergyman at Haliburton, and Mrs. Shepherd, will sail next Thursday for England on the Allan Line S.S. Numidia, and will be absent for some months. They will leave Haliburton on Monday.

—Mr. F. W. Miller went up to Lakefield last night. There has been engaged to organize the Sons of England band of the village. The band has had instruments for some time but has been in an imperfect state of organization.

—A team employed in drawing contractors' material for the pavements lowered out in front of a streetcar in front of H. Leith's yesterday. The neck-yoke knocked a hole in the car and one horse had a leg skinned but no serious injuries resulted.

—Look out for counterfeit 50 cent pieces. There is said to be quite a number of them in circulation which have drifted in during the past week or two. They are said to be easily detected, not being up to the usual high standard of the counterfeit coin. They are thicker than the good coin and have the greasy feeling peculiar to lead.

—An official from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa, arrived in town yesterday morning and proceeded to the back lakes on an important mission. It has come to the attention of the Government that there are on both the upper and lower waters of this district, several yachts and other vessels, which, although carrying passengers, have not complied with the Act which requires a regular inspection of all such craft by Government officers, both as to condition of vessel and machinery and to the measurement of the dimensions of the boats.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES

AN INDIAN CRADLE SONG.

Swing thee low in thy cradle soft,
Deep in the dusky wood!
Swing thee low and swing aloft—
Sleep as a popple should.
For safe in your little birchen nest
Quiet will come and peace and rest,
If the little popple is good.

The coyote howls on the prairie cold,
And the owl hoots in the tree,
And the big moon shines on the little child
As it stumbles peacefully.
So swing thee high in thy little nest
And swing thee low and take the rest
That the night wind brings to thee!

Father lies on the fragrant ground,
Dreaming of hunt and fight,
And the pine leaves rustle with mournful sound.

All through the solemn night,
But the little popple in his birchen nest
Is swinging low as he takes his rest,
Till the sun brings the morning light.
—Southern Workman.

THE DERELICT.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS.

I was second mate of the American brig Ruby, bound from Java to New York, and all had gone well with us for a fortnight, when accident brought about a curious adventure. Just as night was closing down, with the brig sailing along on an even keel and the breeze steady, I swung myself upon the rail to get a look at what seemed to be a raft floating past us. I may have been overcautious or a rope may have given way, but of a sudden I found myself in the water. The men at the wheel witnessed my mishap and gave the alarm and threw me the life preserver always ready for such an emergency, and I had no doubt of being picked up within ten minutes. I had seized the float when down thundered a black squall from out of the west, and next moment it was as dark as midnight and the sea all in a chop. I felt that it was all over with me then. The men would be lucky to bring the brig through the fierce squall without thinking of me. Indeed, if she had had 100 men on board instead of 12, they would not have dared to lower a boat. I got just one glimpse of the craft as she shot away into the darkness and then began to work to get the life preserver under my arms. I was buffeted and knocked about in the most confusing manner, and had the squall lasted five minutes longer I should have been drowned on the surface. It passed away as suddenly as it came, and ten minutes later the sea had calmed down, and I was floating with my head well out of the water.

I had gone overboard at about 7 o'clock in the evening. For the first three hours my hopes and fears made me alert, but by and by I felt a dull languor and was only half conscious of what was going on. An hour after midnight I was suddenly aroused from what seemed to be a troubled dream. I was bumping against something hard, and my first idea was that I had been cast ashore. It took me several minutes to shake myself together and make out that I was alongside the hull of a vessel. It was hard to credit the fact, but fact it was, and when I realized it I had scarcely more to do than lift up my hands and seize the low rail and draw myself inboard. I had found a derelict brig. Both masts were gone close to the deck, much of her bulwarks swept away, and I knew by the feel of her that she was waterlogged. I took one glance over her and no more, but dumped myself down on the deck and was asleep in five seconds. When I opened my eyes, the sun was an hour high, and a big albatross was poised directly above me and not 50 feet high. It did not take me long to master the details of the wreck. In the first place, she was loaded with Australian redwood and could not sink beyond a certain point; next she had been floating about for months and months. There were some wreckage on her deck, but made and yards and boats and bunks had gone clear off her as they fell. She had settled down until her masts were only a few inches above water, but owing to the buoyant cargo she could not sink deeper. As a sailor I made two out to be a French craft, and later on I discovered that she was the Marie of Breton. She was a small craft, carrying a crew of eight or nine men, and was a forecastle ship instead of having a deckhouse for the men. The cabin or cook's galley had gone overboard with the rest, but the doors of the cabin and the scuttle to the forecastle were tightly closed. The brig had been wrecked aloft in equal or equal and had at the same time sprung a leak. Whether her crew had been washed overboard or taken to the boats there was no means of telling until I had made an investigation below.

The first thing was to get something to eat and drink. After a few minutes' work I broke open the cabin doors and got into the pantry. There was wine in plenty, as might have been expected, and I soon came across some meat and biscuits in tins. I washed water, but there was none to be had, and so, taking what I could lay hands on, I went on deck and made a fair meal. When this had been concluded, I returned to the cabin for an overhaul. All the shirts and nautical instruments were there, nor had any of the spare clothing of captain or mates been taken away. I found the logbook, and though I could not read French I made out the latitude and longitude last recorded. As near as I could figure it out the brig was then midway between Australia and the Cape, and the date was nearly seven months old. She had drifted to every point of the compass, but must have drifted nearly 2,000 miles to the north to reach the spot where I found her. It was noon before I began an examination of the lumber to see how I should fare for provisions. I found flour, wheat, table water, preserves, bones of blarney, shales, bones, codfish and other articles in liberal quantity—enough to last one man for months. Forward of the cabin I found a storehouse, in which were several barrels of beef and pork, with four barrels of coarse flour, dried fish, beans, coffee, tea and other articles of food for the men. Forward of this was the water cask, a dozen or more, and all full. When I came to examine the forecastle, I found boots, clothing, sou'westers and other belongings of the crew, to prove that they had not gone away in the boat. Indeed I was sure before I had half concluded my investigation that every man had perished when the brig was wrecked. It was night before I had finished, and I tumbled into the captain's berth and never slept more soundly. You may think it queer that during the day I had scarcely glanced around the horizon and given no thought to rescue, and that I went to bed with a contented mind, but sailors are prone to take back as it comes, good or bad. I had made a miraculous escape and was fairly safe on the wreck, and there was nothing to worry over if not taken off for weeks. Interested as I was in overhauling the stranger, I would not have tossed up a penny to be taken off by a passing vessel.

When morning came again I made a more thorough investigation of the cabin. In rear of the captain's stateroom I chanced upon a closet which had escaped me the day before, and here I made a great find. There was about $1,000 in French gold and notes, $1,200 in English goldpieces and exactly $7,000 in goldpieces just struck off at the Australian mint. The money was in two tin boxes, but whether it belonged to the ship, her captain or to other people I could not determine. It was a big fortune to a poor sailor, and I remember that I acted very foolishly over the find. I counted it over and over again, and when I at last realized that I was rich I rushed on deck, with a wild hope of seeing a sail close at hand. But for the money I believe that the long days and nights which followed would have been rather contentful for me, isolated as the situation was. I had plenty to eat and drink, there was nothing to break my sleep, the wreck might drive where she would, but there was no danger of her going down. The discovery of the money was followed by a hope of rescue, and this again by worry and anxiety. I wanted to go ashore to enjoy my wealth. I feared that when rescue did come I should be robbed. I conjured up a thousand senseless fears, and the apophony was anything but beneficial. I have spoken of the general situation in a careless way. As a matter of fact, being a navigator, I took observations regularly when the weather permitted and picked off the drift of the wreck on the chart. On the average the weather was fine, but there were days and nights when gale and sea troubled the waterlogged craft about until only a miller could have lived through it. Instead of lifting her the waves ran over her, and at such times the decks were two feet under water and the cabin was flooded. The cargo was adrift with the water in the hold, and as the wreck rolled and pitched the timbers rubbed together and produced noises which would have frightened landmen into fits.

I kept an accurate reckoning, and I had been on the wreck just 49 days when I caught sight of my first sail. No doubt ships had passed and repassed me by day and night, but I could see no signal by day and from the first I slept all through the night. This sail was discovered early one morning, coming up from the south, and her course was such that she must see me. I had put the money into bags and the bags into bundles of clothing in view of a rescue, and therefore had nothing to do but wait. The stranger, which proved to be an English merchantman bound for India, but considerably off her course, was within four miles of me and had sent a signal to gladden my heart when a big whale suddenly broke water close to the wreck. He was followed half a minute later by a second, which attacked him with great fury. The monsters put up a terrific battle, leaping and biting each other and kicking up a sea like a gale of wind. They at first drew away from me, but after a few minutes made a circle which brought them back. When I had feared from the first came to pass after a quarter of an hour. Half blinded by pain and fury, or feeling itself overmatched and desirous of getting away, one of the whales suddenly whirled about and came for the wreck head on. He was fully 50 feet long, and he came like a moving mountain. I made sure of my hold as I saw him coming, but he struck the wreck on her port side with such force that I was thrown across the deck and into the sea beyond. I heard the crash of planks and timbers, was tossed about by the waves, rubbed against the whale as he rounded and reached the surface to find the wreck a hull no longer. It was simply a heap of floating debris. The strange ship drew nearer, lowered a boat, and I was picked up as I clung to a plank. The money was gone, all else but the timbers which composed the cargo had disappeared, and my adventure, surprising as it had begun, had ended in a manner strange enough to satisfy even the most imaginative novelist. I was carried to India by the rescuing ship, and I know that the French consul at Calcutta set inquiries on foot regarding the fate of the crew of the Marie. What they amounted to I never learned, but have always felt satisfied that all perished when their craft was dismantled. But for the fight between the whales I believe the brig could have been pumped out and called into port, but fortune is a jade who rede Jack Tar far oftener than she smiles upon him.

Crafty Czar

DESIRES PEACE TO ASSIMILATE ADVANTAGES GAINED

Confronted by Famine—Revolt of the Poles is Imminent, Other Powers Are Hostile and the French Alliance is Shaky

London, Aug. 29.—The Daily Chronicle's Paris correspondent declares that the disarmament olive branch would have emanated from Emperor William in Jerusalem if the Czar's advisers, including perhaps M. Hanotaux, had not forestalled the Emperor's project. Editorially the Chronicle says: "The Czar's encyclical is assuredly one of the most striking documents of the century. It could only have been more dramatic if the Kaiser had issued it from the birthplace of the Prince of Peace."

"Looking to the present attitude of Russia in the east the proposal almost takes one's breath away. A cynical view is painfully obvious. Russia has just received a series of vast territorial and diplomatic advantages which it will take years to assimilate. She is face to face with famine, a revolt of the Poles is threatened and she is threatened by other powers, and there are signs of a dissolution of the Russo-French alliance. Happily the humanitarian view is equally clear and convincing. The Czar, hitherto overborne by veteran obstinate advisers, has now asserted his natural desires. He is one of only two men who could make the proposal without fear of being misunderstood. Great Britain and the United States will certainly welcome the proposal. If another great power does also much will be gained in the desired direction."

GOOD MAY ARISE

The Daily Mail says: "If the Czar had not been the Emperor would surely have been the dramatist. It is too much to hope for the realization, but some good ought to come out of it in the way of a better understanding of the powers."

The Daily Telegraph says: "The idea is so beautiful that we are reluctant to throw cold water upon it; but what is to be the basis of discussion? A conference which should recognize that free and open markets are for the advantage of the entire civilized world would indeed pave the way to universal peace, but such of this we fear the gathering will prove abortive."

The Daily News: "The Czar by this message has acquired a more righteous and enduring fame than belongs to the proud conqueror of his illustrious house. There is no quarter from which such a manifesto would produce a more profound impression. Hitherto the great obstacle was that nobody would begin. The Czar cannot be suspected of making a virtue of necessity. We shall hardly be wrong in attributing the momentous policy to the Czar himself. It is the pen of Nicholas, but the doctrine of Cobden."

The Morning Post, discussing the difficulties in the way of the proposal, arrives at the conclusion that it would suit Russian needs and Russian design wonderfully well, but would not suit England at all.

WHAT THE FRENCH THINK
Paris, Aug. 29.—The Figaro believes that the disarmament conference will be called because the Czar could not have risked a refusal. It believes, however, that the aspiration is chimerical. The Gaulois thinks the proposal a natural one from Russia, because the immense armament imposed upon her is the principal obstacle to her development. The Gaulois says: "France would not gain what Russia and the other powers would be disarmed. Universal peace has been often proposed but never realized."

Le Journal thinks the conference, instead of realizing the Czar's hopes, will rather encourage national antagonism. It does not lead to demands totally inimical to the world's peace. Le Radical wishes all success to the movement, but says "The readjustment of certain patriotic questions in which France cannot and never will cease to interest herself is however an essential preliminary to general peace."

The Siecle and The Rappel comment in a similar strain.

The Petit Journal expresses the hope that the powers will respond and that the conference will solve the problem in accordance with the principles of right and equity. In short all the papers welcome the proposal with the reservation that the question of Alsace-Lorraine shall first be regulated.

POLITICIANS ARE SNEERING.
Berlin, Aug. 29.—The Czar's note was posted in the bazaar and cafes and is generally discussed rather cynically. A high official of the War Office observed that it would be a good topic for a dull sermon. If the conference met there would be no doubt that France would demand the return of Alsace-Lorraine. All politicians are inclined to sneer at such a proposal emanating from Russia. The general belief is, however, that all the powers are willing to attend the conference in the belief that it will prove fruitless, looking to the impossibility of agreement.

A Prominent Physician.
A prominent New York physician is discussing the merits of Ripans Tablets with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthropist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tablets, and cause it to be put up in the form of a hetchup and distributed among the poor."

Salutary Remedy.
The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hagenman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tablets were being sold bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for them?" He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tablets is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they begin I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.
An elderly lady living in Furtham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tablets for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tablets recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a week. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tablets lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elderly lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tablets to any one afflicted as I was. If the talking about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

SINCE THE TROLLEY'S CAME TO TOWN.

Ring out the loud bonanzas and do the job up brown. For at last we have a trolley a-running through the town. The farmers stop their haying and wonder at the sight. For the way the cars go swooshing is a revelation quite. Their clanging and their buzzing all other noises drown. For they make an awful racket a-running through the town.

The old town doesn't seem the same. It's mighty bright and gay. And every one can celebrate its resurrection day. Two buried many years ago, and buried good and deep. But now it has awakened from its Rip Van Winkle sleep. And every hour of the day the cars run up and down. And every one is tickled now the trolley's come to town.

There's two new barns a-growing up, excitement everywhere. And a mild form of parents seems to permeate the air. The benefits to be derived have surely taken root. While real estate has risen to fifteen cents a foot. And all the wimmin folks have bought a brand new muslin gown. For they're bound to eat a figure now the trolley's come to town.

—Barford Times.

AN EERIE EPISODE.

It was at a masquerade at Galinber's studio in one of the old Roman palaces. There were music, the tripping sound of dancing feet, laughter and the unintelligible hum of conversation mingled in a gay medley.

Carson, an American, a new arrival in the city and a stranger to that colony of sculptors and painters, had been accidentally separated from the friend who brought him in the crowd shortly after his entrance to the ballroom.

He was wandering listlessly among the merry masks, quite regardless of their glances and laughter at his expense. Tired at length of his aimless peregrinations, he turned aside from the glaring lights and heat to the shade and coolness of the balcony.

The wide casements at the end of the room were open and gave an unobstructed view of the kaleidoscopic scene within. A divan near the balustrade offered a place for repose, but it was not until he was seated that he was aware of the presence of a lady. She occupied the farther end of the divan and was partially concealed by the drooping tree ferns and palms with which the balcony was decorated. She moved slightly in her nest of tricolored cushions, and her fan fell with a slight clatter upon the stone floor.

Carson picked it up and gave it to her with a courteous bow. She thanked him, speaking in English, with just the slightest Italian accent.

"I fear that I am intruding, signora," he said.

"Not so. The balcony is free to all who come. There can be no intrusion." She reached up her hand as she spoke and pushed aside the feathery branches that swayed between them. Then he saw that she was young and very fair to look upon.

Her face was decidedly English. She wore an indescribable swathing garment of soft texture that was gathered up closely about her neck and fell to her feet in long, clinging folds—strongly suggestive of a Bernhardt costume. Two beautifully shaped arms were bare to the shoulder, and the small hands that lay in her lap looked as though they had been modeled in wax.

She leaned back, resting her head upon the stuccoed pillar, her fan waving languidly to and fro.

"Permit me," said the American, taking the dainty lace and ivory trifle from her hand and fanning her gently.

She smiled a gracious assent, and then began talking.

It was so warm in the ballroom and one grew so tired dancing, she said. Did the gentleman dance? Perhaps he was not acquainted with many ladies—a stranger in Rome? Was he an artist or a sculptor?

"Neither, signora. I am an attaché."

"From what country—England?"

"No—America."

"America! Ah, that marvelous land!"

She chatted on in an open, friendly manner until a bevy of tired dancers invaded their retreat. Among them was his friend Tarro.

"Great heavens, Carson! Where have you been? I have looked everywhere for you. Everybody is unmasking, and it is time for supper. No doubt you are starving. Come, I have secured a table, and you are to meet some charming women. What have you been doing here all alone? It was exceedingly stupid in me to get separated."

"I have not been alone," replied Mr. Carson. He glanced around, but the lady was gone.

"Not alone? Why, who was with you?"

"The lady. Did you not see her when you came?"

"A caprice, my dear boy. I saw no lady. No, you sat there moaning, staring in a most sentimental manner at that Moorish lantern hanging over there. Come along. They are waiting for us."

They lingered long over their supper. There were merry, high pitched talking and much laughter, but Carson was not in a state of hilarity. His restless, bored glance wandered over the assembly, and once he started and turned sharply in his chair at the low voice of a woman who, with her escort, passed close beside him.

Tarro tried to rally him on his abstraction, but his brow contracted fretfully, and he nervously fingered a spray of flowers that lay by his plate. He was not sorry when the ball was over and he found himself on the pavement outside of the palace.

A cab was waiting, but without knowing why he declined to accompany his friend, saying he preferred to walk to his hotel. He wandered along slowly, with bowed head, absently staring at the dim shadows cast by the waning moon. As he was passing across the Piazza de Farnese he heard a low voice speaking:

"So we meet again!"

He halted. She, his new acquaintance, was beside him.

"Signora! You here at this hour and alone? Where are your friends?" She smiled. "You will walk with me to the street below, will you not?" "Certainly. But your friends—their carelessness is criminal."

They walked through the square and down several streets almost in silence. Presently she stopped before the entrance of a house.

"Here, signor!" she said.

Almost simultaneously she swayed forward and caught his arm, at the same time uttering a smothered cry.

"You are hurt!" he exclaimed anxiously. "You have twisted your ankle on those wretched stones."

"I fear so." She pressed her hand upon her bosom and looked into his eyes with mute appeal.

"You cannot walk." He stooped and gathered her up into his arms. "I will carry you. Which floor?"

"The fourth," she replied, her face flushing at the light of the early day fell upon it.

A drowsy janitor answered his ring. He ascended the first flight of stairs without pausing, carrying her as a nurse might a child, happy at the delicious touch of her bare arms against his neck as she clasped him.

On the second flight ascent was not as easy. Her weight grew heavier, and the head that had now fallen on his shoulder pressed like a ball of iron, her arms were relaxing their clasp and lay against his neck with startling coldness. She seemed to be letting herself go, and at each step grew heavier in proportion.

He was no longer carrying a litesome maiden, but something burdensome and horrible—something that was bearing him down and suffocating him with a sensation as though his chest was bursting.

On the third landing he felt her slipping.

"Signora," he faltered.

He sought to renew his hold, but the burden, now a dead weight, slid from his arms, and she fell with a heavy thud to the floor.

"What noise is this?" called a masculine voice in Italian.

Carson began a hasty explanation to the man, whose head protruded from a partially open door.

The man came forward and bent over her.

"She does not belong here," he said.

"She is a stranger. She is pale as death. Unfasten her clothing. She must have fainted. Where is the janitor?"

The fool he never is here when he is needed. Call him, signor, and send for a physician." His hasty hand broke the knot of ribbon that outlined her bodice.

With a wild exclamation he instantly loosened his hold on her dress and started backward. The full throat and white bust were exposed. There were deep bluish purple hands around the throat and a gaping dagger wound, dark with coagulated blood, on the snowy bosom.

Their cries aroused the janitor, who hastened to call the police. Presently he returned, panting up the stairs, accompanied by an officer. Carson drew aside the curtain, and the bright light of day fell upon the body.

"Holy Virgin!" cried the policeman as he saw the dead woman.

"Can you identify her?" asked Carson.

"Yes," returned the man. "She is the woman who was found murdered on the Corso night before last. How came she here?"—M. M. Halm in Argos.

De Looze's Statue.

M. Fremiet has finished the head of the enormous statue of the late Comte Ferdinand de Looze which is to be placed at the entry of the Suez canal. The canal project is to be represented standing, covered with an Arab turban, and pointing toward the new waterway opened up to navigation. On one of the sides of the pedestal—which is to have a granite foundation—will be a medallion containing the portrait of the khedive who patronized the canal. —Boston Transcript.

Seeking Counsel.

Next to the power of standing outside oneself and looking at me as other folks see me the most remarkable is this (by the insight of genius and imagination) becoming you. The first makes one sometimes only too reasonable, too humble; the second warms the heart and ennobles the soul, for it gives the charm of selfhood to beings and ourselves. —Jean Ingelow.

A New Fashion.

"Yes, Miss Agnes, there are the two terms officers waiting for us."

"And is it true that returning tourists are only allowed $100 worth of baggage?"

"It is too true. The law is imperative. How much baggage have you, Miss Agnes?"

"Fully $175 worth."

"And I have $25."

"Must I pay?"

"There is—there is but one way to avoid it. Miss Agnes, dear Miss Agnes, let us share our 175 and—and our baggage! Be my wife!"

"Why, Mr. Littlebit, how you have startled me!"

"But, they are looking this way! Quick, your answer!"

"How can I—?"

"Here they come! Yes or no?"

"Yes, but—"

"Yes, Mr. Inspector, it is just a hired spouse." —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Ambiguities.

The following rather ambiguous advertisement appeared in the "Personnel" column of a Western newspaper a short time ago:

"Wanted—Information regarding the whereabouts of Ebenezer Jones, who is supposed to have died in this city last year."

A still more ambiguous personal appeared in a Chicago paper a year or two ago. It was as follows:

"If this should meet the eye of Lewis J. Smith and he will send his greatest address to his old home he will have something to his advantage. His wife is dead."

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES

Kaiser Accepts GERMANY WILL PARTICIPATE IN THE CONFERENCE

Although She Expects No Result—If Only Four Powers Consent the Czar's Suggested Meeting will be Held Without the Others

London, Aug. 30.—The Berlin correspondent of the Daily Times says: "Germany will accept the conference suggested by the Czar, but expects nothing to result from it. Mr. Jackson, secretary of the American Embassy, does not believe in the practicability of the proposal. He assured me that, speaking for himself only, he felt sure that America would not permit the Philippine question to be submitted to such a conference; nor did he believe it would be possible for any power to begin the work of disarmament."

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says: "The subject was long on the mind of Emperor Frederick, who feared the time would come when Europe, exhausted by militarism, would be at the mercy of the industrial competition of the United States. A diplomatist assures me that Emperor William intended to revert to the subject of disarmament while at Jerusalem in the coming autumn, to attend the dedication of the Church of the Redeemer."

BORROWED FROM THE KAISER.

"In addition to taking the wind out of the Kaiser's sails, the Czar is the only Russian sovereign who has visited Siberia, and he must have seen such a population of political malcontents at might easily be induced by American, Japanese and English influences to declare for independence. The greatest objection to the circular is that such a clever person as Czar Nicholas would not sign it."

According to various correspondents of The Daily News the Russian Emperor's proposal is the revival of a project of Alexander III. of Russia, which was mooted to Emperor Frederick of Germany, but not publicly, owing to the precarious state of public feeling in France on the subject of Alsace-Lorraine. One correspondent says: "Emperor Nicholas has had in mind the prospective activity of the United States and Japan in the world's affairs, and has ascertained that Great Britain is absolutely determined to improve on China a complete military and naval reorganization. I understand that if only four powers agree the conference will be held without the others."

SENATOR DAVIS' VIEW.

Chicago, Aug. 30.—Senator Cushman K. Davis, of Minnesota, member of the Paris Peace Commission, when asked for his opinion of the probable success of the Czar's proposal for a disarmament conference, said: "While the desirability in the way of the abandonment of the standing armies seems almost unarguable, still I would not be at all surprised if every material good could be accomplished by a conference of the kind proposed. It might not result in the reduction of the standing armies, but it would be a step towards that goal and it might have side results which would be of the greatest value."

IT WILL BE SHELVED.

London, Aug. 30.—The newspapers here continue to devote a large amount of their space to commenting upon and criticizing the Czar's peace note. While, naturally, differing in regard to the reasons actuating the appeal, they generally agree that the outcome will be a conference of the Powers, if not of the sovereigns themselves, probably at Copenhagen, which will be followed by an expression of concurrence in the humanitarian aims of the Czar and a report of the resolutions of their governments when the whole thing will be shelved indefinitely. The latest comments from Paris show that there is intense irritation there on the subject. There Czar's proposal there is regarded as being unfriendly and inconsistent with the Russian alliance. Curiously, a telegram from St. Petersburg confirming the report that Emperor William of Germany and the exchanged views in regard to the establishment of a lasting state of peace, "which was fully demonstrated by the identity of the monarchs' wishes."

RUSSIAN CZAR A DREAMER.

London, Aug. 30.—The newspapers are again giving the Czar's proposal for the Czar of Russia. The Times says: "If unaided, which has also a great but still undeveloped, industrial future before him is becoming fully convinced as we in England have long been, that his resources are better devoted to the beneficial arts of peace than to the destructive incoherent energies of war. Englishmen, as essentially peace-loving people, can only hail the Czar's proposal as a great step towards the ultimate goal of humanity. The difficulties are great, but nothing can henceforth deprive the Czar of the credit of having brought peace and disarmament into the sphere of practical politics."

"It looks at present as though all the great powers might be willing to enter the conference, while the United States might be expected to lend a favorable ear to proposals tending in any degree to lessen the weight of the Imperial responsibility she is about to undertake. Her industrial policy is closely akin to our own, and her abiding interest in the maintenance of peace is hardly less vital."

SIR CHARLES DILKE.

London, Aug. 30.—The religious world loudly praises the Czar's noble initiative. Sir Charles Dilke said: "The Russian peace feeling of nearly a million regulars across the peace feeling of Germany, Austria and Italy combined. Thus it has been in Russia's power to reduce the land forces by diminishing her own in connection with a similar action on the part of Germany. "French public opinion is not prepared for disarmament, which would mean, as things stand now, an acceptance of the Alsace-Lorraine situation. Naval disarmament would be dangerous for Great Britain. Any formal plan would involve subsequent breaches of faith, but if Germany and Russia will cease increasing their forces we can follow without a formal agreement."

DR. EMILE REICH.

London, Aug. 30.—Dr. Emil Reich, the eminent Hungarian historian and British Counsel in the Venezuelan arbitration, says: "The Czar is a dreamer. He is not in robust health, and has always to take great care of his body. This scheme for universal peace is one of his dreams. It is also a feat. Count Muraviev, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, hopes thereby to get a free hand in the development of Russian schemes in Manchuria."

MR. DE HAASWITZ.

What is noticeable in European comments is the fact that everything is bent to point on the action of France. Mr. De Haaswitz, the Paris correspondent of the Times, puts the matter pithily. He says: "It is practically impossible that France could have been consulted because an absolutely primary condition of her sanction would be that Alsace and Lorraine should be returned to Germany. France has once said to me, 'There are three of us who made Germany an Empire. The German nation would hang all three if we offered of our own free will to give back Alsace and Lorraine to France.'"

"At no moment could the idea of disarmament be advanced more inopportunistically. I would even almost say more perfidiously, for France is called upon to arrest her enthusiasm, to paralyze her efforts, and make vain her fresh sacrifices by an invitation to halt in our onward march of incomparable perfection in armament."

"The scheme therefore appears to aim at arresting France in her forward march. It is true a few amateur Machiavellis explain it as an arranged matter between the allies with the view of proving to the world that Germany was expected to decline to enter the conference, is the real obstacle to universal peace, and that therefore other nations should league themselves against her. But these are all trances. I believe, nevertheless, the explanation will suffice, but nothing is responsible except the Czar's dream of realizing his father's ideal of peace."

FRENCH PRESS.

Paris, Aug. 30.—The French newspapers generally distrust the practicability of the Czar's peace scheme, and mostly indicate that France would make no contribution of Alsace-Lorraine, pre-empting to her participation in the conference.

GOOD MAY ARISE.

The Daily Mail says: "If the Czar had been the Emperor would surely have been the dramatist. It is too much to hope for the realization, but some good ought to come out of it in the way of a better understanding of the powers."

The Daily Telegraph says: "The idea is so beautiful that we are reluctant to be the basis of discussion. A conference which should recognize that free and open markets are for the advantage of the entire civilized world would indeed pave the way to universal peace, but short of this we fear the gathering will prove abortive."

The Daily News says: "The Czar by this message has acquired a more righteous and enduring fame than belongs to the proud conqueror of his illustrious house. There is no quarter from which such a manifesto would produce a more profound impression. Hitherto the great obstacles was that nobody would begin. The Czar cannot be suspected of making a virtue of necessity. We shall hardly be wrong in attributing the momentous policy to the Czar himself. It is the pen of Nicholas, not the doctrine of Gobineau."

The Morning Post, discussing the difficulties in the way of the proposal, arrives at the conclusion that it would suit Russian needs and Russian design wonderfully well, but would not suit England at all.

STRONG MILK.

A Consideration of the Scientific Reason Given For Its Presence.

Mr. John Speir, writing to The Scotch Farmer on the subject of "strong milk," says: Bacteria plays a most important part in all dairy matters, and all bacteriologists who have directed their attention to strong milk have arrived at the same conclusion—viz., that it is caused by bacteria. These investigations have also brought to light the fact that several forms of bacteria may cause strong milk, and that strong milk cannot be produced without infection. In Norway and Sweden a certain class of "strong milk," called "laug milk," is sold as an article of commerce, and this milk is said to be produced by feeding the cows on a particular plant. Tests made by bacteriologists did not, however, produce such an effect, and at the present time all evidence seems to point to every case being the result of infection.

The bacillus which is supposed to be the principle cause of strong milk has been found by Gullibson to retain its vitality in butter for a couple of months to which it had been inoculated in March. It is generally supposed to live on the floors, walls and air of the byre, and on the udders and bodies of the cows, and on the vessels which hold the milk or by which it is carried. It is said to be very difficult to kill, and nothing but the most scrupulous cleanliness in everything from the delivery of the milk to the feeding of the cows, including the hands and clothes, will get rid of it. While in Switzerland in 1894 at the conference of the British Dairy Farmers Association, I had a conversation with Professor Freudenreich on this subject, and he said that the bacillus of this complaint was probably more common in Switzerland and Norway than in any other country. At one of the conferences in 1894 he showed these present samples of milk, all from one pure source twelve hours before, each of which had been inoculated with a different cultivation of some bacillus causing trouble in the dairy. He dipped his pencil into the milk to which a cultivation of this bacillus had been added, and when lifted up, the milk, by simple absorption, was drawn out into a string one to two feet long. Later on, in his laboratory, I had an opportunity of seeing other samples of good and bad bacteria which are commonly found associated with dairies, and heard from him the extreme difficulty of eradicating a byre or dairy of this bacillus.

While warm weather enables this bacillus to increase, it should also give your correspondent a favorable opportunity of thoroughly disinfecting his whole premises, cows, utensils and people. Lime wash, with some strong disinfectant, should be freely used; the dairy utensils should be thoroughly steamed or boiled rather than usual, for several days successively; the cows' udders and bodies should be washed with some weak disinfectant; the clothing of the milkers and those handling the milk should be entirely renewed; and the milkers' hands washed after every cow. These precautions are carefully carried out, the mischief may reasonably be expected to be got rid of.

Conclusions reached by a German authority are that the mammary pipe must be carefully constructed and protected from extremes of moisture and sunlight. It should be kept moist, but not wet. It is well to turn cattle in upon it occasionally to tramp it down, and thus exclude excess of air. When the teat is completely dry, it should be wiped with a dry cloth. If these precautions are observed, the use of preservatives may be dispensed with.

The Newest Stationery.

The latest find in paper is a sheet the size of the envelope, which goes into its envelope without folding. In the usual correspondence size—that small size used for a hurried note or invitation—the style goes very well, but when it comes to larger size stationery any it will not take. In this connection it is reported in the New York Herald that the most popular style is a sheet of paper which folds in half and fits into an envelope which has a square flap. This style comes in billet, note and letter size, and the envelopes are graduated to match. The favorite colors are white, cream, rose, regimental gray and bond blue. The fancy tints of pink and heliotrope, yellow and green, though carried to meet a certain demand for them, are considered in poor taste.

A very dainty little machine is made for weighing letters, useful to a woman with a large correspondence or to a business woman who must needs send letters inclosing samples or circulars.

Smooth Roads and Tires.

The increase of efficiency in vehicles having a smooth surface on which to travel is very great. Perfect roads are a necessity for the steam engine, and a smooth roadbed is essential if high speed is to be obtained. The motor carriage, which has already become established as a good road surface. The bicycle gains enormously in ease of propulsion, in speed and in adaptability to new fields of usefulness by having good roads. About these three there is no dispute, but it seems necessary to prove by argument, illustration and statistics that other vehicles are equally benefited by a smooth traveling surface.—Exchanges.

A STORY OF NAPOLEON.

The Exalted a Scotchman at Oberkampf Request.

Napoleon had at one time many admirers in England, especially among the commercial classes, who suffered deeply from the war, but he alienated the sympathy of all such by his cruel arrest of the English who were in France at the time of the rupture of the peace of Amiens, in 1804. Some 15,000 English of both sexes were thus detained in irksome captivity all the close of the war, and hardly a family in the middle and upper classes but had to bewail the absence of some friend or connection.

Yet in individual cases Napoleon showed some magnanimity. A young Scotchman, one Robert Hendry, from Glasgow, a scientific dyer and chemist, had taken advantage of the peace to visit the great manufacturing houses of France, and he was staying at Jouy, where Oberkampf had established a large cotton printing factory, when war suddenly broke out. Hendry was thereupon constituted a prisoner by the authorities, but allowed to remain on parole at Jouy.

Napoleon one day visited the factory unexpectedly, accompanied by Josephine. She made rapid progress through the works. Villagers and work people, the latter numbering 1,600, assembled to witness his departure, cheering the carriage, and cheering still louder when the emperor was seen to take the cross from his own breast and offer it to that of the modest Oberkampf. Hendry painted the scene, and the picture is still to be found upon the walls of Versailles. But Oberkampf had still something to ask. Napoleon called propitiously, but made a very long time when he heard the petition, which was for the release of the prisoner. "An Englishman?" "No, sir, a Scotchman. His mother's name depends on his name." "Well, he shall be free, then," said the emperor.—Household Words.

These tombs, considered the oldest monuments of Egypt, are supposed to have been erected before or during the time of Joseph, and are profusely ornamented with a variety of colored figures, denoting country life and domestic pursuits. The figures were as gay and plump as they were depicted, solemn and immovable in their usual sculpture. On some of the walls were hunting scenes, women playing with cherubs, the husband to those of either sex who stood in need of recreation. Numerous plant blossoms, birds, fish, and other things were depicted, and even a cherub playing a lyre. Over each picture was written what the artist intended to represent—an idea that might be employed to advantage by some of our fine stone painters.—Outing.

The mole is one of the thirdest of animals. HERE IS AGE FOR YOU

REMARKABLE COLLECTION OF STONE IMPLEMENTS FROM AFRICA.

Over 100,000 Years Old Found in a Spot Which May Have Been the Garden of Eden—Great Site in a Sand Archaeologists' Paradise.

Forty centuries ago down upon your fertile Nile Valley, as we understand his soldiers to battle under the shadow of the Pyramids. The Pyramids were not built yesterday, but in the light of recent archaeological discoveries they must be regarded as very recent works of man.

Visitors at the British Museum may examine a collection of stone implements in a remarkably perfect state of preservation, to which the most expert archaeologists of to-day ascribe an age of not less than 100,000 years. It is the most recent acquisition to the museum, and is a portion of a collection made last year in the desert of Beni-Suef by Mr. H. W. Seaton-Hart, a well-known English archaeologist and his game hunter. It was the first expedition, in 1885, of the Mount St. Elias range in North America. Mr. Seaton-Hart has continued his explorations and hunting expeditions to North-western Asia and Eastern Africa, and has achieved a large and very valuable collection of archaeological remains. Three years ago he made a thorough study of the prehistoric collections in England, notably that of Sir John Evans of the Royal Society, and with that expert gave a great deal of time to prehistoric research.

On account of the rich finds in the upper Nile Valley by Professor Flinders Petrie, the eminent Egyptologist, Mr. Seaton-Hart was led to believe that diligent exploration in the regions farther to the south and east would be productive of great additions to the scientific knowledge of prehistoric man. Accordingly, early last year he started in to make a general survey of the Eastern African deserts. At first he was rewarded by the discovery of a large number of stray finds in the vicinity of Thebes, and from the conglomeration of localities in which they were found the explorer felt certain that they had no historic connection with the comparatively modern temples and pyramids of Egypt. Encouraged by this success, he pressed forward into the desert, in the hope of finding authentic traces of the lost first man, which he believed had existed in that region.

He directed his journeyings into the land of the Beni-Suef, and by constant intercourse with the nomads, endeavored to learn from them the whereabouts of any remains of prehistoric man. He soon found some traces of ancient man, but they were so few and so scattered that he was obliged to keep his eyes open for a long time. After hundreds of miles of fruitless wanderings over a waterless and treeless country he would be rewarded now and again by some little discovery, often of inferior value in itself, but sufficient to keep alive the hope that he was on the right track. Finally late in November of last year, in the hidden cliff picture of the Wady Sheik, accompanied by his caravan of Bedouins and camels, the intrepid explorer came upon a prehistoric site of great extent, stretching for twenty miles or more across the desert, and he was able to make a preliminary survey of the great prehistoric site. Each of the mounds was characterized by its own special type of implements, which experts have now agreed are of the greatest possible interest and were previously unknown to science.

Scattered all over the region were found stone axes, knives, spear heads, rings, disks, sickle shaped knives and hundreds of other implements, resembling a policeman's baton, with which the other articles were probably shaped. Many of these evidently lay as the workmen had left them when they went home to dinner, thousands of years before the time of the present day. The implements were found in a fine state of preservation. On the long, low hills of Central Beni-Suef great numbers of stone tools were discovered, once buried deep for concealment, but now each raised on a little pyramid of solidified gravel. They appear not to have been subjected to river action, as the remains found to the left of the Nile and its branches. Many of the best of the specimens Mr. Seaton-Hart headed on to his pet camera, and after thoroughly examining a country for a great distance, returned to the shore of the Red Sea and sailed with his treasures for England. Although a diligent search had been made for lost implements, which might assist in establishing with a greater degree of certainty the antiquity of the discoverer, few were found in close proximity to the ancient mounds, yet Mr. Seaton-Hart believes he has secured the only prehistoric site yet discovered.

In London the newly found relics of the Stone Age were exhibited before the Royal Society, and the archaeologists agreed that the implements date from a period not far remote from the very infancy of man, and that they were the work of a primitive race, and Africa for purposes of trade in flint and arrow heads. If not a unity of race over the greater part of the inhabited world at that early time, the implements remain, but hardly of such unaltered antiquity, have been found further north in Africa, and in South Africa, India, the valley of the Euphrates, Central Italy and the valley of the Danube, to Spain. Mr. Seaton-Hart has independently suggested that Central Beni-Suef may, indeed, be the site of the Garden of Eden. He claims that the found flint tools which might be identified with those of the first chapters of the book of Genesis, and other landmarks which he considers without exaggeration, cannot be found in the belief that he may have really found the virgin scene of our first parents. The aid of the Beni-Suef, however, today gives no suggestion of the fertility and luxuriance of Eden, and even the enthusiastic archaeologists of the Royal Society are inclined to think that Eden must have been located in a more favored region of the earth, even with the allowance for many possible changes in climate and topography. In the time that has elapsed since the fall of Sir John Evans says the collection. "The prehistoric discoveries of Mr. Seaton-Hart in Egypt and Beni-Suef have assisted in bringing over the interval between prehistoric man in Britain and in India and have added another link to the chain of evidence by which the original cradle of the human family may eventually be identified. They certainly tend to prove a identity of race between the inhabitants of Asia, Africa and Europe."

A Diagnosis.

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 1, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Annual Outing
At a special meeting of the members of the George Street Methodist Church choir held last night, it was decided to hold their annual outing down the river per North Star to-morrow. An enjoyable trip is promised all who attend.

The New Instructor
Mr. James McLeod, of Hamilton, the new physical director of the Y. M. C. A. will arrive in town at noon to-day to assume his new duties. An informal reception will be tendered him at 8 o'clock this evening when all members of the Association are invited.

Annual Rifle Matches
The annual rifle matches of the 57th battalion will be held on Monday next at the ranges, beginning at 9 o'clock and continuing until 4 p.m. The fall drill previous to inspection will begin on Tuesday night next, Sept. 6th when a full attendance of the ranges will be expected.

Request
The members of Court Chemong No. 530, I.O.F., are hereby requested to assemble at the hall, Simcoe street, on Friday, Sept. 2nd, at 10.30 a.m., for the purpose of attending the funeral of our late Bro. A. W. Fleming, from his residence, 190 Red street, to G.T.R. Station, thence to Hastings.

The Rathbun Drive
The last contingent of the Rathbun Drive returned yesterday when those who have been settled for the last month on the Ashburnham commons struck camp and left for Healey's Falls. The camp on the lake shore in Ashburnham has had many callers during the past month and the genial cook, Mr. J. Kelly, made himself very popular with the citizens by his generous hospitality.

Brotherly Picnic
On Wednesday, Sept. 7th, the employees of the Calcott Brewing and Malting Company will hold their annual picnic at Jubilee Point, per City of Peterborough. There will be games of all kinds at the Point, and also a baseball match between Millbrook and the West End Base Ball Clubs for a silver cup. Butcher's orchestra on board for dancing. The steamer leaves Peterboro at 8 a.m. All are invited. Tickets 25 cents. Ashburnham at 8.15.

One Month for Stealing a Hen
An old man named George Weiden was sent up to gaol for a month yesterday morning by County Magistrate Edmondson on a charge of theft. Weiden, it seems, was slightly the worse of liquor, and in order to obtain more drink stole a hen and nine chickens from Miss Mills, of Ashburnham. He put the fowl in a bag and carried them around endeavoring to make a sale. Before he could do so the hen and her chicks were smothered, and he states that he then threw them away.

Committee Meetings
The Fire, Water, Light and Finance Committees of the town council met last night. The latter recommended the payment of a number of accounts and the former a set of rules and regulations for the better government of the Fire Department. Mayor Davis and Councillors W. H. and J. M. White, Allen, Best, McWilliams and Dennis were present. Mr. Dewey, representing the Buffalo Potts Co. pointed out to the Councillors present the advantages the steam roller manufactured by his company possessed over those of other firms.

You will not know how much good Hood's Sarsaparilla will do you until you try it. Buy a bottle to-day and begin to take it.

Centrepieces, all ready stamped out for working for 10 cents at Miss Melville's, Hunter St.

A VERY PLEASANT OUTING

The Ashburnham P. & P. Picnic One of the Most Successful of the Season

What proved to be a very pleasant affair was the annual outing of Ashburnham Public school, which was held at Jubilee Tuesday, Aug. 30.

The scholars and their friends boarded the City of Peterborough which conveyed them down the river in good time. Jubilee being reached shortly after eleven o'clock.

After dinner a programme of sports was run off. Mr. F. Adams, who is ex-chairman of the School Board, and still a very worthy member thereof, assisted the teachers in conducting the sports.

Bridges, suitably inscribed, were presented to the winners, the first prize being red, and the second blue.

The results were as follows: Girls under 10—Clara Adams, Jennie Revoy, Boys under 10—Crell Buck, Archie Orwig, Girls under 13—Pearl Law, Ada Whaley, Boys under 13—Joe Heffernan, Archie Craig, Boys 13 and over—Robbie Long, George Crowe, Boat race, girls under 11—Clara Adams, Ada Whaley, Boys boat race—Orlando Mowry, Robbie Long, Girls' boat race—Ada Whaley, Alice Revoy, Boys three-legged race—Robert Long and George Crowe, Orlando Mowry and Bruce Armstrong, All-fours race—Robert Long, Oscar Mitchell, Boys' long race—Orlando Mowry, Robert Long.

The prize, fifty cents, for selling the largest number of tickets was won by Percy Crane.

The writing prizes donated by Mr. H. Calcutt to the Third and Fourth classes were presented by Mr. Adams, in the absence of Mr. Calcutt. The first prize in each class was one dollar; the second prize fifty cents. In the third class Clara Adams and Carrie Doupe were the winners, while Florence Palmer and Daisy Tibben carried off the honors in the Fourth class.

Home was reached in good time after a very pleasant sail. All present enjoyed themselves thoroughly.

The next public event in connection with the school will be the second annual concert, to be held, as usual, on the last Friday in January.

As the school has chosen this evening for their concert each year, other organizations are respectfully requested to avoid clashing with this date.

HONORABLY ACQUITTED

Not a Particle of Evidence to Connect Dr. Pigeon with an Alleged Case of Abortion

The many friends in town of Dr. Pigeon will learn with pleasure of his honorable acquittal yesterday afternoon on a charge of attempting to procure an abortion in Catherine Johnson, the particulars of which appeared in a recent issue of the Times.

The case came up before Judge Welles yesterday afternoon. The evidence taken at the preliminary hearing, with the addition of that of a couple of witnesses, was carefully gone over by the Honor with the result that Dr. Pigeon was completely exonerated from all connection with the case.

There was not the slightest particle of reliable evidence connecting the doctor with the alleged crime.

Wm. Hayes, who was charged with counselling the young woman to procure a miscarriage, was also discharged.

ANNUAL EXHIBITION

Of the Horticultural Society Today—Music by the Sons of England Band

The annual exhibition of the Peterboro and Ashburnham Horticultural Society will be held this afternoon and evening in the market building. The number of entries in the different classes has been exceedingly large and the show promises to be of the most successful character, to be bigger and brighter than ever, in fact.

Mr. Brownson, the energetic and efficient secretary, was kept busy until a late hour last night receiving entries.

The exhibition will be open to the public this afternoon from 4 o'clock and after seven o'clock in the evening. The Sons of England Band, under the direction of Mr. F. W. Miller, will furnish a choice and classical program.

PETERBOROUGH'S WATERLOO

Additional Details of the Peterborough-Orillia Championship Lacrosse Match

Yesterday's issue of the Times contained a brief report of the Peterboro-Orillia championship lacrosse match, played at the Island, Toronto. The Mail and Empire has the following detailed report of the game.

To decide the championship of the North-eastern district of the C.L.A., the Peterboro and Orillia lacrosse teams played at the Island yesterday, when the latter twelve outplayed the former and won by the overwhelming score of 8 to 1.

It was a victory of the straight kind for the Northerners, who played the Peterboro's to a standstill. The game was a hard one in many respects, and things were done there which should never be condoned, as they were at times. Referee T. R. Glanville, of Mount Forrest, was far too lenient, and repeatedly allowed foul tactics to be indulged in.

The game was late in starting, and as a consequence it was 7 o'clock before it was finished.

To begin with the Peterboro braves in their red shirts made a dash for the Orillia flags, where Quinn relieved, and from a bit of neat combination work "Marry" Curran got the rubber and looked it past Dobbin in three minutes.

"Micky" O'Connor and Dolbin were called upon to defend, and again Lynch saved when Thompson and Grant became aggressive during the second game. On a neat combination by Wilkinson, Grant, and Armstrong, the last names scored the second for his team in six minutes.

The third was a flush, lasting but fifteen seconds. Grant doing the trick. The Orillians had a slow call at their goal in the fourth game, when they were able to shoot at the other fellows' flags, but Lynch saved, while Churchill slashed unnecessarily, while Grant took advantage of an easy chance to score, after both Brown and Lynch stepped back to let him do it.

There was a squabble which developed into a pugilistic encounter at the beginning of the fifth game. Boulton Kean, who was the Orillia timekeeper ran into the field and got mixed up in it with Lionel King, who for the Orillia man was removed from the ground enclosure.

Hogarth walked up to see the fun, and "Micky" O'Connor hit him a star blow on the head, for which the Orillia player should have been put out of the whole match. Jack McCabe also had a hand in the row. The Peterboro lads got badly rattled, but Phelan succeeded in scoring in four minutes.

Then the Peterboro's captain put in a protest, according to the rule which gives the referee power to put a man off for a deliberate foul such as O'Connor's was.

A very close tussle happened at the Peterboro stakes, where Dolbin did some clever clearing. At close range Watson tallied in three minutes, putting the score 7 to 2 in Orillia's favor.

The game was a very close one, with both teams doing some effective work in the first part of the eighth game. There were many close combinations at Peterboro's goal, and twice the ball hit the poles, the second time Grant sweeping it through on the rebound. Time 4 minutes. Score 7 to 1 in favor of Orillia.

In the ninth game, which was a very clever check, and welling down the field he passed to Watson, who lunged the ball through in 61-2 minutes.

Lynch and Brown did some effective work in the first part of the eighth game. There were many close combinations at Peterboro's goal, and twice the ball hit the poles, the second time Grant sweeping it through on the rebound. Time 4 minutes. Score 7 to 1 in favor of Orillia.

COAL OIL AT HASTINGS

An Important Discovery—Will be Thoroughly Investigated by Experts

For some time the steam drill and dynamite, says the Hastings Star, has been faithfully doing its work in deepening the channel above the locks. The opening of two sluiceways in the dam necessitated the use of some of the blown out rocks for filling with the cement used in the bottom of the sluiceways. To effect this, a quantity of rock, at times is brought down to the locks where they are broken up into small pieces before using. It was while thus breaking the stone that small pockets were discovered containing a substance like oil and on investigation was found to smell strongly of coal oil.

From the number of these pockets, the rock seems to be thickly saturated with them. While nearly every other section has had its mineral boom, may not it be an opening for capitalists? If the rock so near the surface gives such rich evidence of coal oil, would it not warrant a thorough investigation by an expert. Samples may be seen at this office and any one with a few hours of leisure and any doubt, can satisfy himself by watching the workmen at the locks break open some specimens.

Attractions in Toronto

Among the attractions that will be found of interest to those who are going to Toronto to the Exposition and Fair this year, the new famous Cummings Stock Company, which has been playing at the Princess Theatre, Toronto for all of the past year, will be surely visited by many who come from this section.

This company of players came to Toronto at first quite unknown there, although they had made a number of just such successes in several of the large cities of the United States, and played at that theatre for thirty-eight consecutive weeks, and have been crowding that favorite theatre to the doors at every performance.

The most remarkable thing about this theatrical company is that they play only the very best plays, presenting them all in really magnificent style, always and the prices of admission are so remarkably cheap, that they have simply raght all the theatre goes many of whom were never in the habit of going to the theatre, before this company came to this city.

Another great point which has figured much in their remarkable success is, that they all of the best comedies and plays always equal to and often better than the same plays are done at high priced theatres. This is the reputation this splendid company has enjoyed in Toronto for sometime among the very best class of people of that city.

The time is rapidly going by, when the public will be compelled to pay high prices for such a show, when they can get a show as the Cummings Stock Company offer at such cheap prices.

Every one who goes to Toronto to the Fair wants to have a good time, and so who has heard about the troupe, should miss going to the Princess Theatre while in Toronto, especially as the prices are so cheap.

The first week of the Fair the Company will present Chas. Froman's rousing farce comedy "Jane" which no doubt will be enjoyed with shouts of laughter for three solid hours, and this for fifteen cents at the daily afternoon matinees, or 25 cents at night, and it is really worth four times as much anywhere else.

The second week of the Fair, Jas. O'Neil's great "Monte Christo" will be played by the same Company at the prices, with new and handsome scenery for both plays.

These two plays always draw large crowds, and they are surely worth it. It is well to know just where to go, where one can get the most for the least money, especially when it is first class, and this Company will be one of the biggest attractions during the Fair weeks.

Important Revelations in the Dreyfus Case

LIED AND THEN ADMITTED
 Confession Obtained by an Appeal to His Soldierly Honor

Found Dead in a Pool of Blood in His Cell—
The Dreyfus Case Will Probably be Reopened

Paris, Sept. 1.—When Lieut.-Col. Henry was summoned to the residence of the Minister of War, he found assembled there Col. Dety du Sillon, Count Esterhazy, General de Boisdeffre, General Rogot and M. Cavalagna. The Minister of War had the suspected let-fer on his desk. He took it up and said to Henry—"You did not mention the name of the agent who furnished this letter. My attention has been called to the fact that on the note here is no name."

"It is a pity you have forgotten," said M. Camignac, dryly, "we think the letter a forgery and that you have been duped by a clever forger."

DENIED THEN CONFESSED.

"Come," said the Minister; "no agent ever gave it to you. You wrote it in pencil to disguise the hand-writing the better. You—-are the forger."

The Colonel's speech grew thick, but he denied the charge. Then it was repeated and he gave fresh explanation.

"On your honor as a soldier," said M. Carver, more gently, "did you or did you not write that letter?"

"Since you appeal to my soldierly honor," replied the man, "I think I

IN A POOL OF BLOOD

The fact of the suicide became known to Montpelier about nine o'clock in the evening. It is supposed that it was committed about 5 p. m. When the officials entered his cell, Henry was found lying in a pool of blood, dead, with a terrible gash in his chest. Shortly before midnight Madame Henry, who had been informed sent to the forenoon and was admitted, the officials granting her permission to pass the night beside the body.

menties will be convoked in extraordinary session and that a strong parliamentary commission of inquiry will be appointed. M. Cavaignac has declined to accept the resignation of General Gonze, under chief of the General's staff.

GIVEN A CHANCE TO SUICIDE.
Paris, Sept. 1.—It is now insinuated that the suicide of Lieut. Colonel Henry was connived at by the French army authorities. In any case, the suicide occurred shortly after the prisoner had received a visit from an officer of the general staff, who on leaving, ordered place of confinement not to disturb the prisoner, as he had a lot of work to do. It is recalled that a similar opportunity to commit suicide was offered to Dreyfus, who however declined to profit by it. It is generally believed that the rest of the general staff of the French army will follow the example of General Boisdoffre, the chief of staff, and of General Gonze, the under-chief, and tender their resignations.

It appears that the Minister of War, M. Cavaignac is convinced that Colonel Henry had accomplices in the forgery of the incriminating document, and here are persistent reports that Col. Henry, the Chief and Under-Chief of Staff.

by the claim with shortly thereafter in this connection it is reported that the Minister of Justice, M. Sarrion, has already taken steps to grant Dreyfus a retrial.

SPORTING NOTES

Toronto will follow home on Saturday, Sept. 3, and will play her last series of games with Syracuse, winding up the season here. These games decide whether Montreal or Toronto is to win the pennant and Saturday's game should be witnessed by the largest crowd of the season. The Toronto's are playing fast ball and will make desperate fight for first place.

the words which had attracted her attention.

A MIDDLE-AGED GENTLEMAN OF wealth and position is desirous of opening a correspondence with a lady of education and refinement, with a view to matrimony. Address Alpha, Herald office.

"Well," mused Miss Sophia, drawing a long breath, "I really wish I dare do it. There can't be any harm in trying, anyway. Wouldn't Aaron be astonished if I should get married, after all? I don't know why I shouldn't, I am sure," she said, tossing her head, as much as to say, who dare contradict her! An hour later found Miss Sophia on her way to the postoffice, with a letter hidden in her pocket, which made her heart throb strangely every time she thought of it.

The letter was sent, and an answer anxiously awaited, which came in due season, addressed to "Angelica," in rather stiff, unnatural hand, she thought, but then her correspondent might be disquieting her landlady, as she had been. Miss Sophia now made frequent excursions to the postoffice, and one day she returned home in quite a flutter, and ran up to her room at once, where she again perused the letter which she had read while walking slowly home along the quiet country.

"Oh!" murmured Miss Sophia, "oh, dear! what shall I do? I am all in a flutter to think of seeing him so soon, for he wants me to appoint a meeting, and of course I must. As soon as possible," he says. Dear me! how anxious he is to see his own Angelica, as he calls me, and I'll own to myself I'm just as anxious to see him. I do wonder what he is like! He must be nice, anyway, for he writes such charming letters; it is really delightful to read them."

A few days subsequent to Miss Sophia's solitary, on a beautiful, bright May morning, she donned her most becoming apparel, and quietly leaving the house, made her way to the one hotel of which the village boasted, where she called for a private parlor, and sat down to await, with what patience she might, for the coming of her correspondent. A few moments of anxious expectancy, then the door slowly opened, and some one entered, closing it behind him.

Miss Sophia, peering through her thick veil, saw no handsome stranger, but—could she believe her eyes?—her brother, Aaron Allen! He approached her.

"Angelica!" he said, softly.
Miss Sophia threw aside her veil, and sprang to her feet.

"Aaron Allen!" she cried, "what are you doing here?"
"Why? why? Sophia!" stammered Mr. Allen, utterly confounded by the sudden denouement. "You here?"

"Yes, I am here, Aaron Allen, and I want to know what you mean by addressing me by that name?" demanded his sister.

"What name?" asked Mr. Allen, utterly bewildered.
"Angelica," answered Miss Sophia, blushing furiously, in spite of herself.

"I—I made a mistake in the person—that's all," replied Mr. Allen, blushing in his turn. "I'd like to know what you're doing here, Sophia."

"That's my business," she interrupted, sharply. "And now I want to know who it was you mistook me for?"

"Well, Sophia, I might as well tell you that I am engaged to be married," said Mr. Allen, sheepishly, "and came here by appointment to meet my intended."

"And I am also engaged," simpered Miss Sophia, "and am here to meet my intended."

"Who your intended?" demanded Mr. Allen, a fearful suspicion beginning to dawn on his mind.

"I have known him by the name of Alpha," she replied.

"By Jove! Sophia, that's my name!"
"What?" shrieked Miss Sophia, "you Alpha?" and she burst into a fit of hysterical tears and sobs.

"And you are Angelica?" asked Mr. Allen. He needed no answer. "Thunderation! Sophia, what a confounded pair of fools we have been," ejaculated Mr. Allen. "I think the best thing we can do is to go home, and live as we have done for so many years, and let matrimony alone for the future."

And Miss Sophia thought so, too.—Grace Jewel.

THINKING ALOUD.

A BIRD WHICH HUNDED LORD DUDLEY and Formed a Friendship.

One of the curls of Dudley, who was addicted to the practice of thinking aloud, found himself in a very awkward predicament on a certain occasion. If a story told of him may be credited, he was to spend the evening at the house of a friend and ordered his carriage early, as he had a long drive back to his own home.

When the hour arrived, the carriage was not forthcoming. Seeing that Lord Dudley was considerably annoyed by the delay, one of the guests, whose way homeward lay past his lordship's house, politely offered him a seat in his carriage. The gentleman was almost a stranger to Lord Dudley, but the offer was accepted.

The drive did not prove a very agreeable one. Lord Dudley took his seat and immediately relapsed into silence, his thoughts apparently engrossed by some unpleasant subject. Presently he began to speak in a low, but distinctly audible tone of voice, and his companion, to his astonishment, heard him say:

"I'm very sorry I accepted his offer. I don't know the man. It was civil certainly, but the worst is I suppose I must ask him to dinner."

Since followed this bit of audible thinking. His lordship was unaware that he had betrayed his thoughts and was probably still meditating upon the same unpleasant subject when the voice of his companion broke the silence.

"Apparently this stranger was afflicted with the same malady from which his lordship suffered, for he exactly imitated Lord Dudley's tone as he said:

"Perhaps he'll think I did it to make his acquaintance. Why, I would have done the same to any farmer on his estate. I hope he won't ask me to dinner, for I shan't accept his invitation."

Lord Dudley's abstraction was all gone. He listened to the other's words, immediately comprehending the joke against himself, and frankly offered his hand to his companion, making many apologies for his involuntary rudeness.

The stranger proved magnanimous, and from that night the two became fast friends.—Youth's Companion.

DREYFUS WAS CONVICTED ON FORGED EVIDENCE

Revision of the Trial—The Minister of War Will Punish All Guilty Parties—Colonel Henry to be Court-martialled

Paris, Aug. 31.—Lieut.-Col. Henry, on the discovery that he is the author of an important letter which figured in the Dreyfus case, has been arrested. Col. Henry has been, throughout, the fighting champion of the army against Col. Pequet, with whom he fought a duel. This new development evidently entirely alters the aspect of both the Dreyfus and the Zola cases and practically nullifies the evidence of General Pellieux and Bonafant, and the declaration of the Minister of War, M. Cavaignac, in the Chamber of Deputies. In fact, some people believe that perhaps the real turning point in the Dreyfus case has been reached and that a revision of the trial of the prisoner of Devil's Island will take place. Col. Henry has confessed to the forgery of the evidence on which Dreyfus was convicted.

CAVAIGNAC'S ACTION

It appears that so soon as M. Cavaignac assumed the office of Minister of War, he charged the official bureau to make a thorough research of the Dreyfus case, and it was this inquiry which resulted in the discovery of documents lately read in the Chamber of Deputies by M. Cavaignac, showing that proof of the guilt of Dreyfus was forged. When Col. Henry was questioned he affirmed the authenticity of the document. But when discrepancies were pointed out, he confessed to fabricating the whole letter. The Minister is determined to punish all the guilty ones, no matter what their rank or position may be. Col. Henry is to be tried by court martial.

A QUEEN'S PROCLAMATION

Wilhelmina of the Netherlands, Attended Her Majority Today

The Hague, Aug. 31.—Upon the occasion of her birthday and the attainment of her majority to-day, Queen Wilhelmina, Helena Pauline Maria, who was born August 31, 1880, issued the following proclamation to the people of the Netherlands. It was worded as follows:—

"On this day, so important to you and me, I desire before all else, to say a word of warm gratitude. From my tenderest years you have surrounded me with your love. From all parts of the kingdom, from all classes of society, young or old, I have always received striking proofs of attachment. After the death of my venerated father, all your attachment to the dynasty was transferred to me. On this day I am ready to accept the splendid though weighty task where to I have been called, and I feel myself supported by your fidelity. Receive my thanks. My experience hitherto has led me to the conclusion that I am surrounded by a future. My dearly loved mother, to whom I am immensely indebted, set me an example by her noble and exalted conception of the duties which henceforth devolve upon me. The aim of my life will be to follow her example and to govern in the manner expected of a Princess of the House of Orange. True to the constitution, I desire to strengthen the respect for the name and flag of the Netherlands. As sovereign of possessions and colonies east and west, I desire to observe justice and to contribute so far as in me lies to the increasing intellectual and material welfare of my whole people. I hope and expect that the support of all, in whatever sphere of official or social activity you may be placed, will be to the nation or without, will never be wanting. Trusting in God, and with a prayer that He give me strength, I accept the government."

(Signed) WILHELMINA.

WAS A CIGARETTE FIEND

Son of a Well known New York Times Out-a-Burger

New York, Aug. 30.—Frederick G. Jahne, 29 years old, the son of a wealthy and respected parent, living at No. 448 Hancock street, in the fashionable section of Brooklyn Hill, was caught in the act of robbing the hat and umbrella store of Charles Jackson, at 17 Fulton street, Brooklyn, when after three o'clock yesterday morning.

Overindulgence of cigarettes is given by members of his family as the probable cause of the young man's downfall.

Holmesman Cook was in the shadow of a building in Fulton street, near Red Hook lane, when he saw Jahne helping himself to hats, hats and umbrellas from the show window of Jackson's store on the opposite side of the street. The window had been broken with a stone.

HEAVY GALE IN THE SOUTH

It is blowing 15 miles an hour in the District of Savannah

Savannah, Ga., Aug. 31.—A heavy storm is sweeping along the coast. The wind at Savannah has blown a gale since 9 o'clock last night, reaching a velocity of about sixty miles an hour. The low tide is a flooded and heavy damage to rice and cotton will result. Railroad tracks are washed out and trains on all roads are delayed.

At 4 o'clock this morning the wind reached a velocity of 75 miles an hour, and rain is pouring in torrents. The streets are filled with debris. The fast report from Tybee early in the night was that the wind was blowing 70 miles an hour, and the operator in the signal station was just leaving for the light-house for safety. The quarantine station is believed to have been abandoned before the escape of the occupants was cut off.

New Zealand Favors a Pacific Cable

Wellington, New Zealand, Aug. 31.—The report of the committee of the Legislature, just issued, recommends joining the Australian colonies with Canada and the other countries by a Pacific cable, on the basis that if Great Britain and Canada together would guarantee five-ninths of the cost of the work, New Zealand and the other colonies would contribute the remaining four-ninths, of which amount New Zealand will contribute one-ninth. The committee also recommends that Canada be entrusted with the construction, administration and maintenance of the cable, on the understanding that the contributing colonies are to be entitled to representation and votes on affairs of policy of the management, and that the cable is to be jointly owned and controlled by the contributors. The report concludes with advising that a conference of the colonies concerned in the new cable be held in New Zealand.

DRYDEN IN GOLD SHADES

His Petitioner Declared Disqualified and Calder Given the Seat

A Blow to the Government—Confidence Revived the Liberal Party of Even the Right of Trial

Toronto, Aug. 31.—The petition of Charles Pilkey, the agent of Hon. John Dryden, against the election of Mr. Charles Calder, M.P., of South Ontario, has been heard again. Now Mr. Calder is the member, and Mr. Dryden can in no way secure the seat.

Mr. Dryden announced some time ago that he would unseat Mr. Calder and redeem the seat, or resign.

A BLOW TO THE GOVERNMENT.

This is without a doubt a blow to the Government, for there will be a race for the position, and the Government will be embarrassed in selecting a successor from among the numerous applicants.

Mr. Justice Oiler, in his judgment this morning, said:—

"I feel bound to hold on a fair reading of the petitioner's examination that though he was a British subject, he afterwards renounced his allegiance and became a citizen of the United States, and he has not since resumed his former nationality."

"He has, therefore, notwithstanding his British birth, ceased to be a British subject, and is in Canada to be regarded as an alien."

NO STATUS AS PETITIONER.

"Therefore, not being a subject by birth or naturalization, he was, though his name appeared on the voters list, not a person who was entitled to vote at the election. It appears to me to follow that his status as petitioner is destroyed. He was not a person entitled to vote, and though he did vote, his vote is shown to be void. I find, therefore, that he is not a person who was entitled to vote at the election. I do not think that the act intends that one who has voted without having a right to do so may be a good petitioner. The objection is well taken, and hold that he is not qualified to be a petitioner."

TOO MUCH CARELESSNESS.

"I must say this without any regret, that from my examination, it appears to be one of which there are too many on the files of the court where charges have been technically made in petition, and touched by an equally reckless affidavit of some specific charges which the petitioner has given in, but of which he admits he never knew or heard anything. I cannot conceive how he could have made, or have been asked or permitted by his solicitor to make, such an affidavit."

Regarding the objection that the petition was a false one, Justice Oiler said that it was not a good one, because it could not be ascertained how much the petitioner did know.

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

The Count de Hubner tells in his "Memoirs" a thrilling story of an adventure in the Italian city of Turin during the days of the revolution of 1848. When the trouble began in the streets, he contrived to get into a house, taking with him two or three other persons, including the wife of a minor official who had threatened the lady for awhile in the country, but who was to have certain news of her as soon as possible.

The string grew heavier, and the whole men had possession of almost every house in the street.

On the 16th of March, Count de Hubner decided that he must do something toward bettering his position in case of an attack, and he forced his only remaining servant to make a dash across the street to the palace where the Austrian general, Roth, was quartered, two blocks away and on the other side. The man was merely to let the general know that De Hubner himself was coming, and to ask that the gates be held ready for him.

"Myself, gratitude and my horse had a long and heated argument," says Count de Hubner. "Finally I pulled myself together. I had to let Prince Metetrach know about myself, to make a last report, and to keep my word about poor Nina. I said the door, drove a long month, and returned down the street."

"The bullets flew all around me, scattering leaden showers from the stone pavement. As I arrived at the gates of the palace, they swung open, and in a second I was inside, a dead. But only half my journey was done; I had still to go back again."

"A letter, my last report—was sent completed for Metetrach and my message to the husband of Nina. It was given. I had to return."

"Again the gates were opened and I bounded forth. A veritable fusillade followed. From every window and house top came the sports of white smoke, and I tried to dodge 40 bullets at once. In a minute I had reached my own door, and as I did so I turned to look back."

"Another man left the palace gates at full speed, but before he had half crossed the street a puff of smoke shot out of a window, and he fell flat and was instantly lying like a log across the gutter. The fire stopped at once—what was the use of an Italian man in shooting a dead man?"

"But on the second that all became quiet to my great astonishment I saw this 'dead man' rise to his legs like a cat and dash across the street into the half open door waiting for him. The sharpshooters were taken by surprise and he escaped."

The Good Old Times.

"An increase of salary" exclaimed the pompous manager of a small omnibus company to a clerk who had just made that request. "I am afraid, sir, that you are too extravagant."

He toyed with his heavy watch chain and looked severely at the young man, who returned his stare boldly. It was the set phrase on such occasions, and the applicant had heard it all before. He meant to have that rise or—go somewhere else.

"Excuse me, sir," he replied respectfully. "I haven't any chance to be extravagant on what I earn."

"Young man," continued the pompous gentleman, "I have risen from the monkey board. Now! By being careful. When I was young, I made money by saving my share."

"Ah, that was in the old days," said the young man, with a bowing wish. "But with the half pence and the ground system of inspection you would find you couldn't save anything without being called, however careful you were."

The manager nearly fainted, and the young man had to seek other employment.—Pittsburgh Weekly.

The Good Old Times.

The father of Eugene Sue was a physician with exalted patients all over Europe, who sent him the choicest wines. The emperor of Austria, for instance, had contributed today, the king of Prussia rare brandy, Queen Christina of Spain genuine sherry, Prince Metetrach genuine cognac, and so on. The whole was kept in a large iron cupboard in the study of the learned physician, known as the Elavir library. Eugene was then a college freshman, and, having procured a skeleton key to the closet, with his friends, Adolphe, Adam, Veron and others, proceeded every night to investigate the contents of the bottles. Not wishing to have their explorations prematurely stopped, they took the precaution to fill up the partially exhausted flasks with water and then to recork them. When, for a long time afterward, the doctor brought forth samples of his precious stock for the delectation of guests worthy of it, and the company tasted it with a due sense of awe, it was privately felt that the celebrity of these great brands was all moonshine, that ordinary table d'hôte Bordeaux was preferable to them. But nobody dared to say so, and it was only after the death of his dreading parent that the novelist confessed the mortification.

The culprit looked puzzled for a moment, and then a smile broke over his face, and he said: "Why, you know, I am always after news. I heard about the man and got a tip that it was going to be raided, and I went there to get the news."

"That's all right," said the magistrate. "But what were you doing with a chicken in your hand?"

The newspaper man hesitated but an instant and said, "Well, you see, I wanted to alight my news from a better tree, so I just grabbed the chicken to show that it was a chicken fight."

The magistrate looked at him a moment and said: "Well, you'll do. You are discharged."—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegram.

WHAT SHE MOST RESENTED.

She Could Readily Forgive and Forget Most Anything but This.

She swept into the office of the manager with cyclonic perturbation. Anybody could see from the haughty superiority of her manner that if she was not yet a star she fully intended to be one. In her hand was a newspaper, which she laid on the desk before the manager.

"Now, really, Miss Frostleigh," he said somewhat impatiently, "I am not responsible for what appears in the newspapers about you. I can't do anything more than say I am sorry you should have any troubles. That's all anybody does for me when I get into debt."

"Have you read that cruel article about my husband applying for a divorce?"

"Yes—that is to say, I glanced over the headlines."

"You can at least tell me where I can find the editor."

"Now, take my advice and keep away. It won't do you the least bit of good."

"But don't you think I have a right to complain?"

"Of course. It was too bad. I have no doubt it was a base calumny to say you cut his allowance down to $15 a week."

"I could have borne that," she murmured.

"And I can understand it was very annoying to have it said that you put him out of a cab one night and made him walk three miles to the depot."

"That was not the cruellest part of it, though."

"And it was naturally embarrassing to have it asserted in cold type that in a fit of jealous pique you knocked him down and then jumped on him."

"Do you think the papers in all of the cities printed that?" she inquired.

"In all probability they did. I'm sorry for the worry it must cause you."

"That wasn't all!" she exclaimed.

"I know. What you refer to is the insinuation that he is your seventh husband."

"That isn't the worst either," she said, with a heart-breaking sob. "They called my name wrong!"—Detroit Free Press.

WARTIME RECOLLECTIONS.

The Old Soldier Tells of His Going Away and of His Home Coming.

"My last recollection of the camp in which we were mustered in," said the old soldier, "was of my mother. We had been in camp for days, for weeks, in fact, filling up the regiment and getting ready for the march, and getting ready generally. Finally we were mustered in, and the next day after that we started."

"It was nightfall when we fell in for the last time in the company streets of our first camp and marched out and turned on the color line. There was a great crowd there, relatives and friends and sightseers come to see the regiment off. In front of my own company I could see my father and mother, come to see the last of their boy before he went to war. I was the apple of my mother's eye. I knew that, and I had expected to see her break down completely when the regiment marched away, but she stood as firm as a rock."

"When the regiment came home, we marched up through the same street."

—Can't Start a Reporter.

That newspaper man is full of resources was well illustrated recently. One of the craft who lives on the south side is fond of eating a chicken fight, and he has some good chickens. Recently he attended a cooking man and took one of his game chickens with him. There had been several lively bouts when a policeman appeared and gathered the crowd in. The newspaper man had hold of his chicken when the policeman arrived, and in his excitement held on to it.

At the hearing the policeman told his story, and no one denied being present or declared that the story was not true. The police magistrate turned to the newspaper man and said: "How does it come that you were there?"

The culprit looked puzzled for a moment, and then a smile broke over his face, and he said: "Why, you know, I am always after news. I heard about the man and got a tip that it was going to be raided, and I went there to get the news."

The newspaper man hesitated but an instant and said, "Well, you see, I wanted to alight my news from a better tree, so I just grabbed the chicken to show that it was a chicken fight."

German Alliance

BRITAIN'S REPLY TO RUSSIA AND FRANCE

Positive Statements Made in London Yesterday That the Arrangement Has Been Signed by Both Governments —British Occupation of Egypt Endorsed

London, Sept. 2.—A report was current here to-day that a treaty of alliance between Great Britain and Germany on the lines of the speech of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain was actually completed yesterday.

This is probably an amplification of the gossip relative to the daily visits of Count Von Helldorf-Wildenburg, the German Ambassador here, to the British Foreign Office during the past fortnight, which have been attributed to a desire on the part of Germany and Great Britain to formulate a common policy in regard to Russia and China.

THE CONTROL OF EGYPT. Another explanation of the German Ambassador's visits to the Foreign Office here is that they relate to the mixed tribunals of Egypt, the international agreement on the subject ending in February. Through French and Russian influence, the Court has always been hampered by the British Foreign Office during the past fortnight, which have been attributed to a desire on the part of Germany and Great Britain to formulate a common policy in regard to Russia and China.

SHAFTER SPEAKS

He Says That the One Who Ordered the Summer Campaign is to Blame

New York, Sept. 2.—The World prints an interview with General Wm. R. Shafter, who was in command at the siege of Santiago, in which he is represented as saying:—"At Santiago we had to deal with things as they were, not as they should be. Of course there was sickness. It was inevitable in a summer campaign. But nobody was neglected. Doctors were scarce at first but we had hundreds of them soon as they could get there. The doctors got sick like the rest. They were overworked and exhausted. But their ability is unquestionable. Look at the low percentage of deaths from wounds. It never was lower in any war. Why, in the Civil War, I lay on the battle field myself until maggots developed in my wounds, and that was right near by. Not down in a malicious, sub-tropical country far away."

THE PERSONS RESPONSIBLE.

The men who ordered a summer campaign in a fever-infested country are responsible for the natural and unavoidable consequences. None of our wounded were allowed to lie on the battle field. It was the best that we could do, and the thing. It was in the midst of the most torrid heat a shower would fall. It would drench everybody without cooling the air. In a few minutes, under the sun again, every man would be steaming. Men of the strongest constitutions succumbed. I am, however, satisfied with the Santiago campaign. When it is fully understood with all its difficulties, it will receive just place in military history. We were hurried off to Cuba. We landed and could not have got our stores back on board ship if we had wanted to. When the invasion was planned it was obvious that it must be a rush. Such it was. And it was a success—complete and unequivocal."

CHALLENGE IS AT NEW YORK

Some Points to be Settled Concerning the Length of Competing Yachts

New York, Sept. 2.—Sir Thomas Lipton's challenge for the America Cup next year, issued through the Royal Yacht Club in charge of a special committee, arrived here yesterday. The committee, which has been authorized to make arrangements for the international cup contest, is composed of Hugh C. Kelly, secretary of the Royal Yacht Club, Major Sherman, and a number of other prominent yachtsmen. CAUGHT IN A PLANNER

Young Man Seriously Injured at Toronto Junction

Toronto Junction, Sept. 2.—Oscar Jeffery, from near Woodbridge, who started yesterday at noon to work in the lumber plant on the Keel street, got his arm caught in the planer while alone in the factory this morning. His cries attracted the attention of W. Green, who ran into the mill and threw off the belt and stopped the machinery. Mr. Jeffery, of Keel street, also went in and had to undo a bolt before the man's arm could be released. He was severely injured, the arm being badly cut by the knives from the end of the fingers to the elbow. The city ambulance conveyed the young man, who is about twenty years of age, to the General Hospital.

REVISION DECIDED UPON

London, Sept. 2.—A special despatch to the Evening Standard from Paris, published this afternoon, says the French Cabinet has decided upon a revision of the Dreyfus case.

A POPULAR HOME WORK

Successful Only When the Diamond Dyes are Used

In thousands of happy and thrifty homes in the Dominion and in the colony of Newfoundland the work of rug and mat making is becoming very popular. Home made rugs and mats are more highly esteemed just now than imported goods. This is not surprising when we remember the fact that the home articles are the best wearing and prettiest.

REVISION IN DREYFUS TRIAL

Strong Feeling in Favor of the Young Captain's Release

Blind Dupe of a Forger—Henry's Confession Brought Confusion Upon Accusers of Dreyfus

Paris, Sept. 2.—Col. Henry's confession of having forged the famous document upon the authenticity of which General De Boisdeffre, chief of the staff of the French army, in his impugned appeal to the jury in the Zola trial, staked his own reputation and the honor of the army, and Colonel Henry's suicide in the fortress at Mont Valerien, have caused an emotion in France which has not been witnessed since the fall of Sedan.

TARIFF A STUMBLING BLOCK

Each Side Using It to Force Terms on the Minor Questions at Quebec

The Representative of Newfoundland Expresses His Opinion on the Canadian Tariff

Quebec, Sept. 2.—Today's sitting of the British-United States Joint High Commission is of the most important nature. The sittings opened at the usual hour of eleven o'clock this morning, and will adjourn early in order to allow some of the commissioners to take the afternoon train for their homes. In these two or three hours that the Conference will be in session will virtually be decided the success or failure of the negotiations.

THE TURBULENT TARIFF.

In all the discussion which has taken place during the sitting of the commissioners, the question of the tariff, while not taken up directly, has persistently cropped up. Realizing that it was the point of all others over which the greatest difficulty would be experienced, the commissioners, perceiving the danger of the tariff in the preliminary discussions. But, like Hamilton, it would not down. It was the same whether the Hebrides or the fish of the Atlantic coast was the item under consideration. In the former the British Columbia sealers were disposed to give up their seal-fishing if they received a fair indemnity for the loss of their vessels, but though the United States commissioners were not indisposed to entertain the indemnity proposition, it is understood the British representatives were unwilling to choose the matter until the trade question has first been discussed.

THE FISHERIES.

When the matter of the American inshore fisheries was taken up, the tariff problem played even a more conspicuous part. As stated in this column a few days ago, the Canadian commissioners proposed to open the inshore fisheries of the Dominion to United States fishermen in consideration of a mutual arrangement being effected concurrently providing for greater freedom of commercial intercourse between the two countries. This proposition at once opened up the subject of the Canadian pro-British preferential tariff, and the United States commissioners declined to commit themselves to any such proposition to enter into reciprocal arrangements so long as the preferential tariff stands. The question of the fisheries was thereupon dropped.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S DEMANDS.

In this connection it is understood that Sir James Winter, the representative of Newfoundland expressed himself very strongly at the Conference. Sir James is understood to take the ground that as it is Canada's tariff which stands in the way of a satisfactory settlement of the fisheries trouble, the matter in which Newfoundland is vitally interested, it is unjust that the island colony should be

Most fascinating invention of the age. Always ready to entertain. It requires no skill to operate and reproduces the music of bands, orchestras, vocalists or instrumentalists. There is nothing like it for an evening's entertainment. Other so-called talking machines reproduce only records of cut-and-dried subjects, specially prepared in a laboratory, but the Graphophone is not limited to such performances. On the Graphophone you can easily make and instantly reproduce records of the voice, or any sound. Thus it contains an entire new interest and its charm is ever fresh. The reproductions are clear and brilliant.

Important Revelations in the Dreyfus Case

LIED AND THEN ADMITTED

Confession Obtained by an Appeal to His Soldierly Honor

Found Dead in a Pool of Blood in His Cell—The Dreyfus Case will Probably be Re-opened

Paris, Sept. 1.—When Lieut.-Col. Henry was summoned to the residence of the Minister of War, he found assembled there Col. Paty du Clam, Count Esterhazy, General de Boisdere, General Roget and M. Caraigne. The Minister of War had the suspected letter on his desk. He took it up and said to Henry: "You did not mention the name of the agent who furnished this letter. My attention has been called to the fact that on the docket here is no name."

Col. Henry beat his forehead and then said he had no memory for names and had forgotten the name in this case, but he would know the man if he saw him.

"It is a pity you have forgotten," said M. Caraigne, dryly. "We think the letter a forgery and that you have been duped by a clever forger."

Henry declared his belief in its authenticity, but in a very faint voice.

DENIED THEN CONFESSED.

"Come," said the Minister, "no agent ever gave it to you. You wrote it in pencil to disguise the hand-writing of the letter. You—were the forger."

The Colonel's speech grew thick; but he denied the charge. Then it was repeated and the same explanation but his tongue began to cleave to the roof of his mouth and it was feared that he would have an apopleptic stroke.

"On your honor as a soldier," said M. Caraigne more gently, "did you or did you not write that letter?"

"Since you appeal to my soldierly honor, it was I who wrote it," he replied.

IN A POOL OF BLOOD.

The fact of the suicide became known at Mont Valerien about nine o'clock in the evening. It is supposed that it was committed about 5 p. m. When the official entered his cell, Henry was found lying in a pool of blood, dead, with a terrible gash in his throat.

Shortly before midnight Madame Henry who had been informed went to the fortress and was admitted, the officials granting her permission to pass the night beside the body.

Figaro believes that the Chamber of Deputies will be convoked in extraordinary session and that a strong parliamentary commission of inquiry will be appointed. M. Caraigne has declined to accept the resignation of General Gonze, under chief of the General's staff.

GIVEN A CHANCE TO SUICIDE.

Paris, Sept. 1.—It is now insinuated that the suicide of Lieut. Colonel Henry was committed at by the French army authorities. In any case, the suicide occurred shortly after the prisoner had received a visit from an officer of the general staff, who on leaving, ordered the entry on duty before Col. Henry's place of confinement not to disturb the prisoner, as he had a lot of work to do. It is recalled that a similar opportunity to commit suicide was offered to Dreyfus, who however declined to profit by it. It is generally believed that the rest of the general staff of the French army will follow the example of General Boisdere, the chief of staff, and of General Gonze, the under-chief, and tender their resignations.

It appears that the Minister of War, M. Caraigne is convinced that Colonel Henry had accomplices in the forgery of the incriminating document, and there are persistent reports that Col. Paty du Clam will shortly be arrested in this connection. It is reported that the Minister of Justice, M. Sarrien, has already taken steps to grant Dreyfus a retrial.

ANOTHER ARREST.

Later in the day La Patrie announced that Col. Paty du Clam had been arrested for complicity in the Dreyfus forgery.

Songs That Sing Themselves
How the music comes from a Graphophone cylinder is a mystery that adds much to the fascination of the machine. The songs of the Graphophone are literally songs that sing themselves. The Graphophone is marvellous as an entertainer. The Graphophone might be described as all musical instruments in one. You can get from it any kind of music you want, vocal or instrumental. It is the perfect talking machine; for entertainment at home it has no rival as its repertoire is unlimited. Furthermore it costs less than a cheap musical instrument. The Black Cap.

There is one particular part of the dress belonging to the order of the O.E.S.—the black cap—which the judges in England always put over their wigs when passing sentence of death. Little is known concerning this black cap, and many mistakes have been made about it. Mr. Sergeant Pulling, in his work "The Order of the O.E.S.," says: "The black cap, or sentence cap, of the judges and sergeants is certainly not the cap, as Lord Campbell repeatedly states. It is on the contrary, the covering expressly designed to roll the cap on the only occasion when the cap was required to be hidden. By the ancient privileges of the sergeants the cap was not to be taken off even in the royal presence. The chief insignia of the order was to be so displayed when sitting on the bench or pleading at the bar, but this rule was always to have been departed from in passing sentence of death.

"The head of the administrator of justice was then covered, as a token of sorrow, by the black sentence cap. This covered cap, black cap, or sentence cap, as it is sometimes termed, is a piece of limp black cloth, which is put on the top of the wig. The cap is rarely put on, except when a prisoner has been convicted of murder, and then the judge places the cap on the top of his wig and passes sentence of death."—Gentleman's Magazine.

Analogue Reasoning.
A poet profiting his work to an editor said:
"This is a small poem, but quality is the main thing. I venture to think you'll find it true poetry."

Having read it the editor put it into a drawer and, handing the poet a 10 cent piece, said:
"This is a smallish coin, but I am as bold as to hope that you will be pleased with its purity. It is nearly all silver."—San Francisco Examiner.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Tubular Boilers for the Western Block, Ottawa," will be received at this office until Tuesday, the 6th of September, 1898, for the supplying and placing of four tubular boilers in the Western Block, Ottawa.

Plans and specifications can be seen at the Department of Public Works, Ottawa, and tenders will not be considered unless made on the form supplied and signed with the actual signatures of tenderers.

An accepted bank cheque, payable to the order of the Honorable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent. of amount of tender, must accompany each tender. This cheque will be forfeited if the party decline the contract or fail to complete the work contracted for, and will be returned in case of non-acceptance of tender.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

E. F. E. ROY,

Secretary.

ELECTRICITY AND CROPS

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Frenchmen Know the Secret—Grapes, Flowers, Grapes, Strawberries and Vegetables Showing Extraordinary Vigor When Electricity is Applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effects of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires soon withers away and dies; when artificially stimulated by an electric current it blossoms with far more vigor than in a normal condition.

With these data to work upon the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making date seedlings grow, which is a very unusual thing to happen in France.

Pears, beans and maize grew with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with batteries were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current. The resulting crop was uneven in character, according as one particular section received more or less of the electric current. With the powerful electrical machines much more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

The new invention is called the geomagnetifier, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surmounted with a chevron of copper spikes, designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connected with a copper wire (also insulated from the pole), which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given area has been increased 50 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetifier is used are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume also when stimulated in this manner.

The exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that such action takes place. Some hold that it acts by aiding the plants to assimilate the acids of the atmosphere, while others think that it is the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil. The experiment can be tried on any lawn or flower bed as long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without giving any protection.

It is estimated that a geomagnetifier sixty feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. As the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

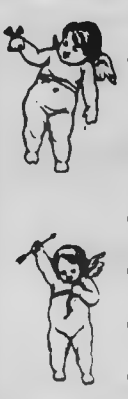

Colorless Liquid With an Extract—Name Dr. Marmorek San Mass.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, puerperal fever and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the peculiar and lengthy name of Anti-streptococcic. It has been seen at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a thin, colorless liquid, resembling water in almost every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it as yet in existence—little more than a tiny vialful, indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused pretty nearly all Paris—this section of it is what takes an interest in medical affairs and in the science of curing disease—into making frequent inquiries and regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that he is best on every hand with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and sufferers, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and to make a lottery for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for so acting is his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxin cure, when the Institute was besieged by anxious crowds demanding the new remedy and offering large sums of money for even a little of it. When the doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply it on hand, the crowd returned and upbraided the Pasteur physicians violently, calling them unhuman and brutal. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly Work of the New Bullet.
"War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but the part is always pounded; fragments are frequently carried out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulsed, and, in fact, the limb mangled and damaged beyond repair." It may not be unreasonably be expected, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life everyone a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet over a mile's distance, and further, by making victims and vanquished suffer equally, and the cost of killing a man to be immeasurably greater than of old, engineering science has done more to make war unappealing than all the army tales of the world will ever be able to do, however much they may attempt to do.

Paine's Celery Compound the Great Autumn Medicine and Life Saver

It makes Strong Nerves, Calms the tired Brain, Purifies the Blood, Gives New Life and Long Years.

The first month of the beautiful but variable season is now with us—a time when the sick, suffering and despondent should think seriously about their condition. Many in weariness, despondency and physical agony have dragged through the almost unbearable heat of summer to encounter new difficulties and dangers that must add fresh fuel to the fire of disease.

It is folly to imagine that nervous disorders, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, liver and kidney troubles and blood diseases can be treated with more success in the autumn season. The varied temperature of autumn—warmth, frosty nights, chilly winds and cold rains are as difficult to cope with as the enervating and weakening heat of summer. The medicines that have failed to bring good health in the hot weather, will not prove more efficacious when the weather becomes cold. A sweeping and radical change must be made by every sick and diseased mortal, and that without delay, if new health is to be established.

The medicine that has made sick people well in the past, after failure with other medicines, is Paine's Celery Compound. This marvellous prescription discovered after laborious studies and scientific research by America's ablest physician, Professor Edward Phelps, M.D., L.L.D., of Dartmouth College, and prescribed by the best practitioners in every city in America, is the one medicine suited to the present wants and needs of weary, sick and diseased men and women who have failed in the past to secure that jewel—good health.

Paine's Celery Compound makes short work of all diseases arising out of debility and nervous exhaustion. It quickly drives from the system rheumatism and neuralgia; it banishes like magic dyspepsia, insomnia, lassitude, and irritability, it feeds the nerve centres and purifies the blood.

It is therefore all-important that the suffering and diseased should, without delay, make use of a medicine like Paine's Celery Compound that has such a wonderful and bright record to recommend it.

To the thousands that are not prostrated by severe sickness and deadly diseases, but who are simply tired out, wearied and half sick mortals, who are not fully prepared to battle with the work and duties of everyday life, we say, "Give Paine's Celery Compound a fair and honest trial. Feed the starved and weakened nerves, throw off the poison that makes your blood foul and impure. Correct your digestive organs with Paine's Celery Compound, then you will increase in weight and in physical and mental vigor, the eyes will be bright, the skin clear and spotless and the countenance will bear a happy and contented appearance.

When Ague Shakes You

You can shake the Ague by using AYER'S AGUE CURE. It is the one certain and infallible cure for that debilitating disease. It has been tried in many countries and under various conditions, and has never been known to fail. An old veteran writes:—

"You may be interested to know my experience many years ago with Ayer's Ague Cure. The year before the war I was in Kansas. Some twenty of us were engaged in farming, and suddenly all were taken with fever and ague. We tried almost everything without getting any help, till at last I sent to the city and procured a bottle of Ayer's Ague Cure. I recovered at once. The others followed my example, and they, too, recovered. Every one in camp took the remedy and was cured by it. I went all through the war, have lived in thirteen different states of the Union, and have never had the ague since."

O. B. SMITH, St. Augustine, Fla.

Appealing the Case

Chief Roszel yesterday received notice from Ross, Roche, who was convicted on August 25th of being a prostitute and was sent to the Mercer for two years, that she would appeal against the conviction at the next regular Court of Appeal.

Farmers' Institute Meetings

The dates and places for holding the annual public meetings in connection with the East Peterborough Farmers' Institute have been arranged as follows: Warraw, Dec. 1, Westwood, Dec. 2nd, Norwood, Jan. 18th, Keene, Jan. 10th.

Business Troubles

H. J. Denola, planing mill owner, Greenbush, has assigned to J. W. Bates. Vance and Company, grocers, Norval, have assigned to J. S. Lundy. The Toronto Loan Company, Ottawa, has assigned to the Trusts Corporation of Ontario. Blakely and O'Malley, wholesale millinery, of Montreal, have held a meeting of their creditors. E. R. Deane, tobacconist, Peterborough, has assigned to Henry Rush. Wm. Johnston, basket manufacturer, Windsor, has assigned to J. H. Macpherson.

Competition

A Max American exchange puts it in this way:—"We live in a land of high mountains and high waves, low valleys and low wages, big crooked rivers and big crooked steamers, big lakes, big pumpkin heads, silver streams that gush in the mountains and pour out of the clouds in the night, pouring cataracts and roaring orators, fast trains, fast horses, fast young men, sharp lawyers, sharp financiers, sharp-tongued shoes, noisy children, fertile plains that he like a sheet of water, and a thousand newspapers that lie like thunder."

Battalion Orders

The attention of the volunteers is called to the following orders: Headquarters, Peterboro, Sept. 2nd, 1898. Orders by Lieut.-Col. R. W. Bell, commanding the 5th Battalion of Infantry, Peterborough Rangers. 1. The battalion will parade at the rifle ranges on Monday at 8 a.m. for the annual rifle matches and target practice. All members of the battalion are requested to attend in uniform, drill order, but without bayonets. 2. The battalion will parade at the drill shed Tuesday evening next at 8 o'clock and on each subsequent Tuesday at the same hour for drill preparatory to the inspection. All members of the battalion are requested to attend.

By order, H. A. MORROW, Capt. and Adj.

The Game Laws

Letters are pouring in to the game department at Toronto, from all quarters, in answer to the questions sent out regarding the game law. Two clauses in the present law are usually objected to. Hunters in the north ask that deer be allowed to be shot in the water. In almost every reply from the Peterboro, Renfrew and Hastings districts, and usually in Simcoe north, this claim is made. They say that if the number of deer that one man may kill is limited, no too many animals will be slaughtered. The department has always been decided on this point, but it is possible that owing to the universal demand the change may be made. The other request is that the penalty for forced to pay the regular fee. The latter, it is declared, are usually the offenders against the game law. At any rate they never protected very hard against the imposition. The usual suggestion is that the money collected for license be put into a fund for the better enforcement of the game law.

The testimonials in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla are written by honest people who want you to know what it does for them.

A NEW INDUSTRY

The Port Hope Knitting Works, George St., Take a Step Forward

Workmen have just completed the work of enlargement, improvement and renovation of the Port Hope Knitting Works, George street. A large addition has been made to the floor space of the shop by removing the workroom in rear to the second floor, and considerably curtailing the space occupied by a stairway on the northern side. The floor space is now increased by nearly 500 square feet, giving almost double the floor area. New counters and shelving have been supplied in the newly included space, and conveniences of most modern and elegant style provided. In the rear on this floor is a comfortable office, containing the safe and the desk of the cashier. A new stairway leads to the

which will be used for manufacturing underwear, gloves, mitts, tights, etc. A fine new fire-horse-power electric motor will furnish the power for operating the various machines, and about twelve skilled workmen will be employed in this department the year round. Immediately in front of the operating room are two nicely furnished work rooms with shelving and all the requisites of an up-to-date stock room—in fact a place for everything, and, as our reporter noticed, everything in its place. The

THIRD FLOOR

is used entirely for storing the raw material, such as yarn, etc., and the various commodities and well arranged. The Port Hope Knitting Works can now boast of having one of the most commodious, convenient, best appointed and complete stores in town, which will greatly increase the large business which their straightforward methods and splendid selection of stock have brought them in the past. Not the least important adjunct to such a well-ordered establishment, are the intelligent and obliging sales-ladies and the courteous and energetic manager Mr. T. C. Elliott, with whom people find it a pleasure to do business. Every service in connection with the store is as efficient as excellent management can make it.

STREET & BRIDGE COMMITTEE

Open Tenders Last Night for a Steam Roller and a Corporation Lot

The Street and Bridge Committee of the town council met in the clerk's office last night.

There were present—Councillors Dawson, chairman, W. H. White, Mel-drum, Best, Langford and Mayor Davis. Tenders for steam roller were opened as follows: Sawyer-McNee, Co., $3,300, Harrisburg Foundry & Machine Works, $2,965, Buffalo Pitts Co., $3,135.

The tenders were considered but no choice was made. The matter will come up again in a few days.

Offers for a corporation lot were received as follows:

J. Snice, 57 Chamberlain st., $1000.

F. W. Hall, corner London and Aylmer streets, $1,500.

Cahill & Rush, lot between King and Charlotte along the creek, offering to have price fixed by arbitration.

John Carnegie, pt of lot 1, north of King and lot 1, south of Townsend and west of George. No price.

Dr. T. N. Greer, lot at corner of Aylmer and Simcoe streets—frontage on Aylmer—$2000.

Offer for lot 1, north of King and east of George at lot 12 and 13, south of Charlotte street, and west of George st. or lot 3, south of Brock and west of George St. No price.

E. J. Beck, the south 120 feet of lot 9, south of Simcoe and west of George at $2,000.

Denniston, Park & Stevenson, lot 9, north of Dalhousie and West of George at $1,000.

It was decided to make no choice until all those tendering had submitted a price, the clerk in the meantime to notify the interested parties to his effect. The matter, so far as the committee is concerned, will be finally settled next Monday evening.

The committee then adjourned.

The Customs Department has suspended until the end of September the operation of that clause in the new tariff, which provides that certificates of origin must be printed, written or stamped upon the face of the invoice instead of being attached thereto in a separate sheet, as formerly. The suspension of the clause is designed to give importers a chance to get used to the provisions of the preferential tariff.

LOCAL BREVITIES

happenings in Town and District During the Past Twenty-four Hours

—Market day.

—A tramp occupied a bench in the cells last night.

—There was no session of the Police Court yesterday morning.

—Two cent postage takes effect Nov. 8th.

—On account of the rain yesterday evening there was no band concert in Victoria Park.

—The steamer City of Peterborough brought a large excursion from Bewdley to-day.

—Monday being Labor Day and a public holiday, there will be no issue of The Times that day.

—The time set for the hearing of the West Victoria election protest draws nigh. It will be tried at Lindsay on Tuesday.

—Messrs. McDonald and Hayes, who have the contract, are busy putting in a concrete flooring in the stables of the fire hall. A depression is left in the concrete at the point where the horses stand so as to be filled with wooden flooring.

—A quiet but very pretty wedding ceremony was performed at the residence of Mr. W. P. Adamson, Stewart street, Thursday evening, when Rev. S. J. Spence, of the George street Methodist church, united in matrimony Miss Laura Webber, second youngest daughter of Mr. John Webber, to Mr. Wm. Whitcroft.

—Prof. Brodie, entomologist of the Ontario department of agriculture, is studying a new bug which he has just discovered. It attacks the "pears," and, according to Prof. Brodie, is extremely disastrous as it will destroy any quantity of pears. The department of agriculture have been notified, and an effort will be made to find out whether the pest is in other parts of the province. Measures will be taken to stamp it out wherever it is found.

—Our Oakwood correspondent writes that the cheese factory at Valentia was totally destroyed by fire last Tuesday evening owing to some mishap in the engine room. The building burned rapidly and was beyond hope of saving by the time people had gathered in any numbers. The shareholders will suffer a heavy loss, as in addition to the factory and machinery nearly 100 cheese were destroyed, 75 of which had been purchased by Mr. Flaville last Monday and were to be delivered on Wednesday. The loss is partly covered by a policy held in the Waterloo Mutual.

—On Monday next, Sept. 5th, Labor Day, a grand picnic will be held at Young's Point in aid of the Roman Catholic parish fund. Numerous attractions will be provided for the entertainment of all who attend. A dancing pavilion will be erected on the picnic grounds adjoining the village, and excellent music has been engaged for the day. Games and row boats will be provided for those who wish to enjoy the pleasures of boating and fishing. Rev. Father Fitzpatrick will have the assistance of an energetic committee of ladies and gentlemen, who will leave no stone unturned to give their visitors an enjoyable day.

A New Suggestion

Mr.—There appears to be a wider spread of feeling against our Council for endorsing Ackerman's and McNeill's taxes. Since they are bound to do it for some unknown reasons, is there not some way of tiding over the difficulty whereby the intentions may not be frustrated, and at the same time satisfy the indignant ratepayers? I would suggest this mode. It has now become a matter of history that our Council at various times have had a penchant for giving away what did not belong to them—i.e., the Queen's highways. If they are bound to perpetuate such a policy then instead of the exemptions stated, let the Council give those parts of George street bordering on the respective premises of Ackerman and Matthews, as they have already practically done with Peter Hamilton, when they then could consistently make Mr. Hamilton a formal grant of those parts of George, King and Water streets which he now occupies. Of course property owners between Water street and the river would kick, but they need not, for as I am informed, there is a reservation of 100 feet along the water front for the use of the public—which these people have enclosed—over which they can get access. Then as to property owners in the south end of the town, and those who seek access to the C.P.R. station, they could be satisfied in this way. Divert the course of the creek as proposed along the old raceway on the north side of King street to the river, and use the bed of the creek southward instead of George street as heretofore, and thus make everybody happy. In that event we would have to grant equal privileges to all property owners each might be allowed to use that part of whatever street may be adjacent to his premises. I would restrict such privileges to those only who employ, say, at least, five hands. But it might be said that this would be discriminating against the poor man. So it would, but does not such discrimination exist the wide-world over? Are not the rich getting richer and the poor poorer. And would not the exemption of taxes be a still greater discrimination? Indeed the policy of exemption if presented it will render it impossible for the poor man to pay his taxes if, as is proposed, he will be obliged to pay his own and the rich man's, as well. And it is in his interest that I thus write you so, that attention may be called to the great injustice of such municipal legislation.

Yours, etc.,

Sept. 2, 1898.

Down the River

Say, the summer is passing and you have not been down the river for the prettiest fall in this province. Or, perhaps, you have been down and promised yourself the fall again. Well, remember that Capt. Martin is again in charge of the North Star, and that this popular steamer will run daily trips to Rice Lake points. The steamer will leave the wharf at 3.15 a.m. each day except Saturday. On Saturday she leaves at two o'clock in the afternoon. The best of attention is received on the North Star.

Acute Rheumatism

Pains in the Feet and Limb—A Complete Cure Accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"For a number of years I was afflicted with acute rheumatism in my left side and all the way down my limb into my foot. I live five blocks from my work and had to stop and rest several times in going and coming. I could get no relief from my trouble and was on the point of giving up my job when I happened to hear of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I purchased a bottle of this medicine and a visit of Hood's Pills and began taking them. Before I had half finished them I was relieved and it was not long before I was completely cured. I never lose an opportunity to praise Hood's Sarsaparilla, for my cure meant a great deal to me, as I have a family and must always be at my post." CYCLING.

According to an interesting article in the Lunnet, more threat arising directly from the effects of cycling on very dusty roads is becoming more and more common. As often as not headache and depression are also felt, and in short, the symptoms are generally those of one or other form of poisoning. When we come to consider the various ingredients of which common or high road dust is composed these symptoms are really not to be wondered at; but we are told, by the Lunnet that both pedestrians and cyclists would suffer very much less from the complaint commonly known as country roaditis if only they would, while proceeding along the offending roads, take the simple precaution to keep their mouths closed and breath through the nose. Cyclists would, in addition, do well on their return home to douche the nasal cavity with a weak and lukewarm solution of some harmless antiseptic.

How the music comes from a Graphophone cylinder is a mystery that adds much to the fascination of the machine. The songs of the Graphophone are literally songs that sing themselves. The Graphophone is marvellous as an entertainer. The Graphophone might be described as all musical instruments in one. You can get from it any kind of music you want, vocal or instrumental. It is the perfect talking machine; for entertainment at home it has no rival as its repertoire is unlimited. Furthermore it costs less than a cheap musical instrument. A CONVERTED PHYSICIAN.

With the aid of South American Kidney Cure, Nurses His "Hopeless" Cases Back to Health.

A prominent physician writes this of diabetes: "Personally until very recently I have never known an absolute cure." But this same physician says further that he has noted wonderful work accomplished in patients of his by South American Kidney Cure; patients whom he had seemed to treat because in his estimation there was no cure and no hope. What a tribute this is to the medical genius in the compounding of this great remedy—this kidney specific. It cures, heals and cures the diseased parts. Does it quickly and permanently. Sold by H. S. McDonald.

The Black Cap.

There is one particular part of the dress belonging to the order of the cell—the black cap—which the judges in England always put over their wigs when passing sentence of death. Little is known concerning this black cap, and many mistakes have been made about it. Mr. Sergeant Pulling, in his work "The Order of the Cell," says: "The black cap, or sentence cap, of the judges and sergeants is certainly not the cap, as Lord Campbell supposed it to be, in the century, the covering expressly assigned to veil the cell on the only occasion when the cell was required to be hidden. By the ancient privileges of the sergeants the cell was not to be taken off even in the royal presence. The chief insignia of the order was to be as displayed when sitting on the bench or pleading at the bar but this rule seems always to have been departed from in passing sentence of death.

"The head of the administrator of justice was then covered, as a token of sorrow, by the black sentence cap. This covered cap, black cap, or sentence cap, as it is sometimes termed, is a piece of limp black cloth, which is put on the top of the wig. The cap is rarely put on, except when a prisoner has been convicted of murder, and then the judge places the cap on the top of his wig and passes sentence of death."—Gentleman's Magazine.

Analogous Reasoning.
A poet proffering his work to an editor said:
"This is a small poem, but quality is the main thing, I venture to think you'll find it true poetry."
Having read it the editor put it into a drawer and, handing the poet a 10 cent piece, said:
"This is a smallish coin, but I am as bold as to hope that you will be pleased with its purity. It is nearly all silver."—San Francisco Examiner.

"Lay" Plates.
In caring for the table during a dinner party it is customary to reserve the most valuable or artistic plates for the "lay service." The scheme of providing does not permit the guest to be without a plate before him, and between the courses plates are laid at each cover, one laid down while the used plate is removed. Caution. Copeland and Royal Worcester china are much liked for "lay plates."—Philadelphia Press.

ELECTRICITY AND CROPS

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Frenchmen Show the Secret—Garden Flowers, Grapes, Strawberries and Vegetables Showing Extraordinary Vigor When Electricity is Applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effect of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires soon withers away and dies; whereas artificially stimulated by an electric current it blossoms with far more vigor than in a normal condition.

With these data to work upon the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making the stunted growth of a very unusual thing to happen in France.

Pears, beans and maize grew with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with batteries were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current. The resulting crop was uneven in character, according as one particular section received more or less of the electric current. With the powerful electrical machines much more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

Electrical machines are far too expensive, however, for farmers to use, and though all right in theory they are too costly in practice.

The new invention is called the geomagnetizer, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surmounted with a chevron of copper spikes, designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connected with a copper wire also insulated from the pole, which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given area has been increased 50 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetizer is used are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume also when stimulated in this manner.

The exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that each action takes place. Some hold that it acts by aiding the plants to assimilate the acids of the atmosphere, while others think that it favors the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil.

The experiment can be tried on any lawn or flower bed so long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without giving any protection.

It is estimated that a geomagnetizer sixty feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. At the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

Colorless Liquid With an Extraordinary Name Dr. Marmorek Has Made.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, pericarditis and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the peculiar and lengthy name of Anti-streptococcic. It has been used at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a colorless liquid, resembling water in almost every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it as yet in existence—little more than a tiny vialful, indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused the curiosity of the medical profession. It is less than a drop of oil, and its use is in a small quantity, and in the case of curing diseases—into making frequent inquiries regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that he is based on every hand with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and sufferers, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and the medical fraternity for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for so acting is his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxin cure, when the institute was besieged by anxious crowds demanding the new remedy and offering large sums of money for even a little of it. When the doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply of it on hand, the crowd returned and upbraided the Pasteur physicians violently, calling them unhuman and brutal. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly Work of the New Bullet.
Sir Benjamin Baker, in a paper on "War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but the part is always pounded; fragments are frequently carried out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulped, and, in fact, the limb mangled and damaged beyond repair." It may not unreasonably be estimated, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life, even a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet over a mile's distance, and further, by making violence and vandalism suffer equally, and the cost of killing a man to be immeasurably greater than of old, engineering soldiers does more to make war unpopular than all the other factors of the world will ever do. It is, however, a pity that they may not be directed to the good effect.

Paine's Celery Compound the Great Autumn Medicine and Life Saver

It makes Strong Nerves, Calms the tired Brain, Purifies the Blood, Gives New Life and Long Years.

The first month of the beautiful but variable season is now with us—a time when the sick, suffering and despondent should think seriously about their condition. Many in weariness, despondency and physical agony have dragged through the almost unbearable heat of summer to encounter new difficulties and dangers that must add fresh fuel to the fires of disease.

It is to imagine that nervous disorders, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, liver and kidney troubles and blood diseases can be treated with more success in the autumn season. The varied temperature of autumn—warmth, frosty nights, chilly winds and cold rains are as difficult to cope with as the enervating and weakening heat of summer. The medicines that have failed to bring good health in the hot weather, will not prove more efficacious when the weather becomes cold. A sweeping and radical change must be made by every sick and diseased mortal, and that without delay, if new health is to be established.

The medicine that has made sick people well in the past, after failures with other medicines, is Paine's Celery Compound. This marvellous prescription discovered after laborious studies and scientific research by America's ablest physician, Professor Edward Phelps, M.D., L.L.D., of Dartmouth College, and prescribed by the best practitioners in every city in America, is the one medicine suited to the present wants and needs of weary, sick and diseased men and women who have failed in the past to secure that jewel—good health.

Paine's Celery Compound makes short work of all diseases arising out of debility and nervous exhaustion. It quickly drives from the system rheumatism and neuralgia; it banishes like magic dyspepsia, insomnia, lassitude, and irritability; it feeds the nerve centres and purifies the blood.

AN INDIAN CRADLE SONG.

Bring thee low in thy cradle nest,
Deep in the dusky forest;
Bring thee low and bring thee soft—Sleep as a poppy should.
For safe in your little birchen nest
Quiet will come and peace and rest,
If the little poppy be in good.

The poppy bows on the prairie cold,
And the sweet birds in the trees,
And the big moon shines on the little child
As it slumbers peacefully.
So bring thee high in thy little nest
And bring thee low and take the rest
That the night wind brings to thee!

Father lies on the fragrant ground,
Dreaming of home and light,
And the pine leaves rustle with murmured sound.

All through the solemn night;
But the little poppy in his birchen nest
Is swinging low as he takes his rest.
Till the sun brings the morning light.
—Southern Workman.

BY CHARLES D. LEWIS.

I was second mate of the American brig Ruby, bound from Java to New York, and all had gone well with us for a fortnight, when accident brought about a curious adventure. Just as night was closing down, with the brig sailing along on an even keel and the breeze steady, I swung myself upon the rail to get a look at what seemed to be a raft floating past us. I may have been overboard or a rope may have given way, but of a sudden I found myself in the water. The man at the wheel witnessed my mishap and gave the alarm and threw me the life preserver always ready for such an emergency, and I had no doubt of being picked up within ten minutes. I had seized the float, when down thundered a black squall from out of the west, and next moment it was as dark as midnight and the sea all in a chop. I felt that it was all over with me then. The men would be lucky to bring the brig through the waves squall without thinking of me. Indeed, if she had had 100 men on board instead of 12, they would not have dared to lower a boat. I got just one glimpse of the craft as she shot away into the darkness and then began to work to get the life preserver under my arms. I was buffeted and knocked about in the most confusing manner, and had the squall lasted five minutes longer I should have been drowned on the surface. It passed away as suddenly as it came, and ten minutes later the sea had calmed down, and I was floating with my head well out of the water.

I had gone overboard at about 7 o'clock in the evening. For the first three hours my hopes and fears made me alert, but by and by I felt a dull languor and was only half conscious of what was going on. An hour after midnight I was suddenly aroused from what seemed to be a troubled dream. I was bumping against something hard, and my first idea was that I had been cast ashore. It took me several minutes to shake myself together and make out that I was alongside the hull of a vessel. It was hard to credit the fact, but that it was, and when I realised it I had scarcely more to do than lift up my hands and seize the low rail and draw myself inboard. I had found a derelict brig. Both masts were gone close to the deck, much of her bulwarks swept away, and I knew by the feel of her that she was waterlogged. I took one glance over her and no more, but I saw that she was on the deck and was asleep in five seconds. When I opened my eyes, the sun was an hour high, and a big albatross was perched directly above me and not 50 feet high. It did not take me long to master the details of the wreck. In the first place, she was loaded with Australian redwood and could not sink beyond a certain point; next, she had been floating about for months and months. There was some wreckage on her decks, but masts and yards and boats and bunks had gone clear off her as they fell. She had settled down until her scupper holes were only a few inches above water, but owing to the buoyant cargo she could not sink deeper. As a sailor I made her out to be a French craft, and later on I discovered that she was the Marie of Breton. She was a small craft, carrying a crew of eight or nine men, and was a forecabin ship instead of having a deckhouse for the men. The cabin or cook's galley had gone overboard with the rest, but the doors of the cabin and the scuttles to the forecabin were tightly closed. The brig had been wrecked aloft in squall or gale and had at the same time sprung a leak. Whether her crew had been washed overboard or taken to the boats there was no means of telling until I had made an investigation below.

The first thing was to get something to eat and drink. After a few minutes' work I broke open the cabin door and got into the pantry. There was wine in plenty, as might have been expected, and I soon came across some meat and biscuits in tins. I wanted water, but there was none to be had, and so, taking what I could lay hands on, I went on deck and made a fair meal. When this had been concluded, I returned to the cabin for an overhaul. All the charts and nautical instruments were there, nor had any of the spare clothing of captain or mates been taken away. I found the logbook, and though I could not read French I made out the latitude and longitude last recorded. As near as I could figure it out the brig was then midway between Australia and the Cape, and the date was nearly seven months old. She had drifted to every point of the compass, but must have drifted nearly 2,000 miles to the north to reach the spot where I found her. It was noon before I began an examination of the lumber to see how I should fare for provisions. I found flour, wheat, table water, preserves, beans of bluish, choice bacon, codfish and other articles in liberal quantities—enough to last one man for months. Forward of the cabin I found a storehouse, in which were several barrels of beef and pork, with four barrels of coarse flour, dried fish, beans, coffee, tea and other articles of food for the men. Forward of this were the water casks, a dozen or more, and all full. When I came to examine the forecabin, I found boots, clothing, con-westers and other belongings of the crew, to prove that they had not gone away in the boat. Indeed I was sure before I had half concluded my investigation that every man had perished when the brig was wrecked. It was night before I had finished, and I tumbled into the captain's berth and never slept more soundly. You may think it queer that during the day I had casually glanced around the horizon and given no thought to rescue, and that I went to bed with a contented mind, but sailors are prone to take luck as it comes, good or bad. I had made a miraculous escape and was fairly safe on the wreck, and there was nothing to worry over if not taken off for weeks. Interested as I was in overhauling the stranger, I would not have tossed up a penny to be taken off by a passing vessel.

When morning came again I made a more thorough investigation of the cabin. In rear of the captain's stateroom I chanced upon a closet which had escaped me the day before, and here I made a great find. There was about $1,000 in French gold and notes, $1,000 in English goldpieces and exactly $7,000 in goldpieces just struck off at the Australian mints. The money was in two tin boxes, but whether it belonged to the ship, her captain or to other people I could not determine. It was a big fortune to a poor sailor, and I remember that I acted very foolishly over the find. I counted it over and over again, and when I at last realised that I was rich I rushed on deck, with a wild hope of seeing a sail close at hand. But for the money I believe that the long days and nights which followed would have been rather contentful for me, isolated as the situation was. I had plenty to eat and drink, there was nothing to break my sleep, the wreck might drive where she would, but there was no danger of her going down. The discovery of the money was followed by a hope of rescue, and this again by worry and anxiety. I wanted to go ashore to enjoy my wealth. I feared that when rescue did come I should be robbed. I conjured up a thousand anxious fears, and the specter was anything but beneficial. I have spoken of the general situation in a careless way. As a matter of fact, being a navigator, I took observations regularly when the weather permitted and picked off the drift of the wreck on the chart. On the average the weather was fine, but there were days and nights when gale and sea rumbled the waterlogged craft about until only a sailor could have lived through it. Instead of lifting her the waves ran over her, and at such times the decks were two feet under water and the cabin was flooded. The cargo was adrift with the water in the hold, and as the wreck rolled and pitched the timbers rubbed together and produced noises which would have frightened landmen into fits.

I kept an accurate reckoning, and I had been on the wreck just 49 days when I caught sight of my first sail. No doubt ships had passed and repassed me by day and night, but I could set no signal by day and from the first I slept all through the night. This sail was discovered early one morning, coming up from the south, and her course was such that she must see me. I had put the money into bags and the bags into bundles of clothing in view of a rescue, and therefore had nothing to do but wait. The stranger, which proved to be an English merchantman bound for India, but considerably off her course, was within four miles of me and had not a signal to gladden my heart when a big whale suddenly broke water close to the wreck. She was followed half a minute later by a second, which attacked him with great fury. The monster put up a terrific battle, lashing and biting each other and kicking up a sea like a gale of wind. They at first drew every man from me, but after a few minutes made a stroke which brought them back. What I had feared from the first came to pass after a quarter of an hour. Half blinded by pain and fury, or feeling myself overwhelmed and desirous of getting away, one of the whales suddenly whirled about and came for the wreck head on. He was fully 80 feet long, and he came like a moving mountain. I made sure of my hold as I saw him coming, but he struck the wreck on her port side with such force that I was thrown across the deck and into the sea beyond. I heard the crash of planks and timbers, was tossed about by the waves, rubbed against the whale as he rounded and reached the surface to find the wreck a hull no longer. It was simply a heap of floating debris. The strange ship drew nearer, lowered a boat, and I was picked up as I clung to a plank. The money was gone, all else but the timbers which composed the cargo had disappeared, and my adventure, surprising as it had begun, had ended in a manner strange enough to satisfy even the most imaginative novelist. I was carried to India by the rescuing ship, and I know that the French consul at Calcutta set inquiries on foot regarding the fate of the crew of the Marie. What they ascertained I never learned, but have always felt satisfied that all perished when their craft was dismantled. But for the fight between the whales I believe the brig could have been pumped out and sailed into port, but fortune is a jade who lets Jack Tar far oftener than she smiles upon him.

Hair & Hints

It is much easier to keep the hair when you have it than it is to restore it when it's lost. If your hair is coming out, it needs instant attention. The use of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR will promptly stop the hair from falling, and stimulate it to new growth.

"Some years ago my hair began to fall out and I became quite bald. I was advised to try and had used it but a short time when my hair ceased to fall out and a new and vigorous growth made its appearance. My hair is now abundant and glossy.

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 8, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Brewery Picnic

Tomorrow the employees of the Calcutt Brewing Company will hold their annual picnic at Jubilee Point per City of Peterborough. There will be games of all kinds at the Point, and also a baseball match between Millbrook and the West End baseball clubs for a silver cup. Butcher's orchestra on board for dancing. The steamer leaves Peterboro at 8 and Ashburham at 8.15 a.m.

Accident on the F. R.

An east bound freight train ran off the rails at Myrtle half way between here and Toronto, about nine o'clock Saturday morning, this being due to a spread rail. Auxiliaries were hurried to the wreck from Hawkeville and Toronto Junction and the line was cleared as speedily as possible. The derailed train was made up of one of the three-wheeled engines, three meat cars and several other cars.

"The Lottery Ticket"

The Nelson Lewis Comedy Co. opened a week's engagement last night at the opera house, with the four-act farcical comedy drama, "The Lottery Ticket." A fair sized audience was present and the play was superbly presented. The company successfully portrayed the several scenes with finish and praiseworthy cleverness. The specialties were particularly good and full houses should be the rule during the remainder of the week.

A Customs Conclusion

The Customs Department has suspended until the end of September the operation of that clause in the new tariff which provides that certificates of origin must be printed, written or stamped upon the face of the invoice instead of being attached thereto in a separate sheet, as formerly. The suspension of the clause is designed to give importers a chance to get used to the provisions of the preferential tariff.

Labor Day

Labor Day was a very quiet day in town. The attendance at the Knights of the Maccabees' excursion to Jubilee Point, the North Star to Rice Lake, the Salvation Army excursion to Queen's Park, and the 57th Batt. annual rifle matches were all more or less affected by the rain. None of these events were entirely satisfactory. A very large number took advantage of the cheap railway rates to visit the Industrial Exhibition at Toronto.

Brewery Picnic

On Wednesday, Sept. 7th, the employees of the Calcutt Brewing and Malting Company will hold their annual picnic at Jubilee Point, per City of Peterborough. There will be games of all kinds at the Point, and also a baseball match between Millbrook and the West End Base Ball Clubs for a silver cup. Butcher's orchestra on board for dancing. The steamer leaves Peterboro at 8 a.m. All are invited. Tickets 25 cents. Ashburham at 8.15.

New Books

The following new books have been placed upon the shelves of the public library:
The Story of the Maccabees, by J. G. Gough.
Canadian Folk-life and Folklore, by Green.
Silence and other stories, by Wilkins.
The King's Jackal, by Harding Davis.
The Romance of Zion, by LeGallienne.
The Millionaires, by Moore.
In King's House, by Dorr.
The Darker, by R. B. Frost.

A Church Forward

St. Andrew's Church has organized a Young Men's Guild with the following officers:
Hon. President—Rev. J. G. Potter.
Hon. Vice President—The Session and Board of Managers.
President—Peter Kerr.
Vice President—Bruce Anderson.
Secretary—Harry Beale.
Treasurer—Rollie Glover.
Executive committees—Garnet Bell, Rollie Waddell, Thomas Anderson, Willie Garrow, James Maude, Wm. Lewis, Walter Conors, Alex. Waddell, W. Langford.

The Guild will meet in about a fortnight for the adoption of constitution.

"PI" WRITES ABOUT THE BAND

Some suggestions which if acted upon will prove beneficial.

To the Editor of "The Times,"
Sir,—Some weeks ago there appeared in one of the daily papers over the pseudonym "Musicians" a letter upon this subject was discussed to some extent with the result that the views expressed received pretty general approval in the Press as well as upon the streets. If I remember rightly the point of the letter was that in view of Mr. Miller's resignation the time was opportune for reorganization and further that the Battalion should be the rallying point. Since then it appears to have developed that the Bandmen are unwilling to act under Mr. Miller's leadership; I am not informed as to the nature of Mr. Freeman's engagement but I assume that he has simply been so kind as to temporarily fill the gap. I am really surprised that the matter has not received more attention from the Military Authorities and now that preparation is being made for the annual inspection surely the officers will awake from their apparent lethargy. Where is the restless energy of Lieut. Col. Bell? Where is the spirit of all the captains and subalterns? The time has arrived when the 57th must look to his laurels or possibly be reduced to a rural battalion, as I have heard hinted. Peterboro is not enough to have a first class Military Band, but this can only be accomplished by the employment of a thoroughly skilled Bandmaster and such a Bandmaster as we want can only be obtained by the payment of a liberal stipend. I am quite willing to subscribe $5 a year towards the same subject. Then as to the Bandmen, it is absolutely necessary to import a few new men particularly clarinet and Oboe players, and this can only be accomplished by our manufacturers and other employers finding positions for these men. This may require the exercise of some degree of unselfishness but surely that is a characteristic for which we will not be in want if I have heard it stated that Bandmen are not always satisfactory employees, especially as their engagements necessarily take them from home occasionally and also keep them out late, thus rendering them less fit for the next day's work, but any considerations of this nature will not be allowed to prevail against the paramount importance of obtaining talent in the only way feasible.

I venture to hope that this subject will receive the consideration to which it is entitled, it is well worthy the serious attention of an enlightened community not to mention the Mayor and Council, and I am sure its importance to the public is sufficient excuse for the considerable space I have occupied.

Yours, etc.,
PI

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE

Mr. John Wyke, of Ashburham, Missing since last Thursday.

Mr. John Wyke, who resides in Ashburham with his son, Mr. B. M. Wyke, has been missing since last Thursday. Mr. John Wyke, who resides in Ashburham and although diligent search and persistent enquiry has been made to ascertain his whereabouts not the slightest trace or clue which would tend to solve the mystery has been secured.

The missing man, who is about 70 years of age, has been for some time past laboring under the delusion that an uncle of his who died a great many years ago left him a farm, and he has at intervals been stating his determination to locate and take possession of the property.

On Wednesday last he announced to Mrs. Wyke that he would certainly have to go and "look up the farm."

Naturally Mrs. Wyke paid very little attention to the remark, she having heard him make the same statement frequently, and when the old gentleman left the house the following forenoon, about 11 o'clock, nothing was thought of the occurrence. It is not until the day after yesterday that the family returned that night brought to mind the remarks of the previous day thoroughly alarmed the family. A search was at once instituted, but up to the present time not the slightest trace of the missing man has been discovered.

Mr. Wyke does not anticipate that anything serious has befallen his father but thinks that he has simply wandered off into the country in search of the farm left him by his uncle. He is, however, very anxious to discover his whereabouts and will be exceedingly grateful for any information that will lead to the location of the old gentleman.

The missing man is 5 feet 8 inches in height, and wore, when last seen, a dark tweed suit and buck cloth gaiters over his boots. He is totally deaf.

When the delusion in reference to the farm first manifested itself he thought the property would have been located in Prince Edward County, but latterly, however, he thought the farm was situated some two or three miles out of town.

57TH RIFLE MATCHES

Well attended. Yesterday and some splendid scores made.

The annual rifle matches of the 57th Batt. were held yesterday at the ranges and were well attended.

The weather was exceedingly unfavorable for high scoring. It rained almost continuously all day, and the light was exceedingly bad.

The official record of the scores was not in shape for publication—at least so Major Edwards informed our reporter—and we are consequently unable to give the names of the prize-winners in this issue.

Major Edwards won the general match by a score of 71—one point more than the winning score last year.

SPORTING NOTES

What is Going on in Local and Outside Sporting Circles.

ROUND THE RING.

Tommy Ryan has signed to meet the winner of the Billy Smith-Andy Walsh bout which takes place before the great New York Athletic Club tonight.

Kid Lavigne is said to have consented to meet Joe Gans in Baltimore between the dates of Sept. 20 and 25.

According to the English papers, Peddler Palmer is a two-to-one favorite over Billy Rufford, when he is to box next October.

Erne, with his sparring partner, F. Zimpher, and a corps of attendants, is working like a fiend for his bout with Rufford in Buffalo on the night of Sept. 12, and now scales at about 121-2 pounds. Erne's hands which have in many of his bouts troubled him more or less, are perfectly strong at present and he anticipates no trouble from them in the coming contest.

The Goldstone party seemed mightily pleased over the result of Saturday's mill at Toronto. Hymie sent many wires to Buffalo, all saying that he had Popp going when the police stepped in. Hymie must have had a mistaken idea of the force of his own blows. Many remarked during the course of the mill that Goldstone, boxing fairly, if he could do so, would make a good match for Kitty.

John Corbett, who arrived Saturday in New York, met Kid McCoy at another town sporting resort, and arranged to fight their postponed battle on Oct. 15 at Buffalo. Corbett left for Ashbury Park at night and will begin training on Monday. McCoy will return to Saratoga. He asked whether he should retire from the ring, Corbett said—"I have decided to quit the ring after the fight, win or lose."

BASEBALL.

They are not losing the chances of having double-headers and Sunday games these days on his own grounds, when the crippled Cape comes his way.

Three victories since this table was last appended gives Montreal a good record, but looks like an uncertain lead, and we may now take off our hats to the director-general of the game. As Springfield took a game from the Barons on Saturday and Toronto started in like scoring straight victories from the Stars there is a good chance of the Yankees finishing in second place. Here is the standing of the clubs:

Montreal.....57
Wilkes-Barre.....54
Toronto.....53
Buffalo.....52
Providence.....47
Ottawa.....46
Springfield.....45

The Shamrocks and Cornwall met in the senior championship series on Saturday afternoon, and the Cornwall were defeated, only two games out of the nine played.

The Young Capitals and Montreal lacrosse teams met on Saturday on the M.A.A.A. grounds to play off the first match of the three-cornered tournament for the championship of the Inter-Provincial League, and the Montrealers were victorious by the score of 4 goals to 3. The play was not by any means up to championship form. Both teams showed very little combination play, and if Montreal were to play the Cornwall in Ontario, they will have to practice a little in passing the ball on the home end of the team.

The Peterborough-Ontario match on Friday promises to be a hot event. "Mickey" O'Connor, it is said, will not play with the Oritillas that day, for reasons best known to himself.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Happenings in Town and District During the Past Twenty-four Hours.

—A tramp occupied a cell in the police station last night.

—Constance Adams is enjoying his vacation down the river.

—The Town Council meets in regular session to-night.

—Regular meeting of the Board of Education to-night.

—Saturday's market was well attended.

—Many of the cottagers at Stony Lake have closed up their houses and returned to town after the season.

—Miss Margaret O'Hara, of Central India, is now in town on a furlough, delivered a very interesting address in St. Paul's church last night.

—While workmen employed by Mr. Allen, who is at present occupying the cottage on Mr. R. C. Strickland's Island, near Juniper Island, at Stony Lake, were digging a hole for a flagstaff the other day, they came upon the skeleton of a man buried about two feet below the surface. The skeleton was in a almost complete state of preservation, and, judging from the perfect condition of the teeth, must have been the remains of a young man. This is not far from the island where a couple of years ago two Indian skeletons were discovered. Mr. Allen had the body reburied in the ground and decided to put in the flag pole at some other place.

BISHOP O'CONNOR

of Peterborough, recommended for the Catholic Archbishopric of Toronto.

It is stated that at the meeting of the clergy of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Toronto and several Bishops held on Wednesday last, it was decided to recommend the names of Bishop O'Connor of Peterboro, Rev. Vicar-General McCann, of Toronto, and Rev. Dean Harris, of St. Catharines, from which a selection will be made of a successor to the late Archbishop Walsh. It will probably be some time before the Vatican makes the selection.

Down the River

Say, the summer is passing and you have not been down the river for the prettiest sail in this province. Or, perhaps, you have been down and promised yourself the sail again. Well, remember that Capt. Martin is again in charge of the North Star, and that this popular steamer will run daily trips to Rice Lake points. The steamer will leave the wharf at 8.15 a.m. each day except Saturday. On Saturday she leaves at two o'clock in the afternoon. The best of attention is received on the North Star.

the words which had arrested her attention

A MIDDLE-AGED GENTLEMAN OF wealth and position is desirous of opening a correspondence with a lady of education and refinement, with a view to matrimony. Address Alpha, Herald office.

"Well," mused Miss Sophia, drawing a long breath, "I really wish I dare do it. There can't be any harm in trying, anyway. Wouldn't Aaron be astonished if I should get married, after all? I don't know why I shouldn't, I am sure," she said, tossing her head, as much as to say, who dare contradict her! An hour later found Miss Sophia on her way to the postoffice, with a letter hidden in her pocket, which made her heart throb strangely every time she thought of it.

The letter was sent, and an answer anxiously awaited, which came in due season, addressed to "Angelica," in rather stiff, unnatural hand, she thought, but then her correspondent might be disguising his handwriting, as she had heard. Miss Sophia now made frequent excursions to the postoffice, and one day she returned home in quite a flutter, and ran up to her room at once, where she again perused the letter which she had read while walking slowly home along the quiet country road.

"Oh!" murmured Miss Sophia, "oh, dear! what shall I do? I am all in a flutter to think of seeing him so soon, for he wants me to appoint a meeting, and of course I must. As soon as possible," he says. Dear me! how anxious he is to see 'his own Angelica,' as he calls me, and I'll own to myself I'm just as anxious to see him. I do wonder what he is like! He must be nice, anyway, for he writes such charming letters; it is really delightful to read them."

A few days subsequent to Miss Sophia's colloquy, on a beautiful, bright May morning, she donned her most becoming apparel, and quietly leaving the house, made her way to the one hotel of which the village boasted, where she called for a private parlor, and sat down to await, with what patience she might, for the coming of her correspondent. A few moments of anxious expectancy, then the door slowly opened, and some one entered, closing it behind him.

Miss Sophia, peering through her thick veil, saw a handsome stranger, but—could she believe her eyes!—her brother, Aaron Allen! He approached her.

"Angelica!" he said, softly.

Miss Sophia threw aside her veil, and sprang to her feet.

"Aaron Allen!" she cried, "what are you doing here?"

"Why? why? I stammered Mr. Allen, utterly confounded by this sudden denouement. "You here?"

"Yes, I am here, Aaron Allen, and I want to know what you mean by addressing me by that name?" demanded his sister.

"What name?" asked Mr. Allen, utterly bewildered.

"Angelica," answered Miss Sophia, blushing furiously, in spite of herself.

"Oh! I made a mistake in the person—that's all," replied Mr. Allen, blushing in his turn. "I'd like to know what you're doing here, Sophia."

"That's my business," she interrupted, sharply. "And now I want to know who it was you mistook me for?"

"Well, Sophia, I might as well tell you that I am engaged to be married," said Mr. Allen, sheepishly, "and came here by appointment to meet my intended."

"And I am also engaged," stammered Miss Sophia, "and am here to meet my intended."

"Who is your intended?" demanded Mr. Allen, a fearful suspicion beginning to dawn on his mind.

"I have known him by the name of Alpha," she replied.

"By Jove! Sophia, that's my name," "What?" shrieked Miss Sophia: "you Alpha?" and she burst into a fit of hysterical tears and sobs.

"And you are Angelica?" asked Mr. Allen. He needed no answer, "Thunderation!" Sophia, what a confounding pair of fools we have been!" ejaculated Mr. Allen. "I think the best thing we can do is to go home, and live as we have done for so many years, and let matrimony alone for the future."

And Miss Sophia thought so, too.—Grace Jewell.

THINKING ALOUD.

A Story Which Brought Lord Dudley and Formed a Friendship.

One of the early of Dudley, who was addicted to the practice of thinking aloud, found himself in a very awkward predicament on a certain occasion, if a story told of him may be credited. He was to spend the evening at the home of a friend and ordered his carriage early, so he had a long drive back to his own home.

WHAT SHE MOST RESENTED.

She could readily forgive and forget. Most anything but this.

She swept into the office of the manager with cyclonic perturbation. Anybody could see from the haughty superiority of her manner that if she was not yet a star she fully intended to be one. In her hand was a newspaper, which she laid on the desk before the manager.

"Now, really, Miss Frostleigh," he said somewhat impatiently, "I am not responsible for what appears in the newspapers about you. I can't do anything more than say I am sorry you should have any trouble. That's all anybody does for me when I get into debt."

"Have you read that cruel article about my husband applying for a divorce?"

"Yes—that is to say, I glanced over the headlines."

"You can at least tell me where I can find the editor."

"Now, take my advice and keep away. It won't do you the least bit of good."

"But don't you think I have a right to complain?"

"Of course. It was too bad. I have no doubt it was a base calumny to say you cut his allowance down to $13 a week."

"I could have borne that," she murmured.

"And I can understand it was very annoying to have it said that you put him out of a cab one night and made him walk three miles to the depot."

"That was not the cruellest part of it, though."

"And it was naturally embarrassing to have it asserted in cold type that in a fit of jealous pique you knocked him down and then jumped on him."

"Do you think the papers in all of the cities printed that?" she inquired.

"In all probability they did. I'm sorry for the worry it must cause you."

"That wasn't all!" she exclaimed.

"I know. What you refer to is the insinuation that he is your seventh husband."

"That isn't the worst either," she said, with a heartbreaking sob. "They spelled my name wrong!"—Detroit Free Press.

WARTIME RECOLLECTIONS.

The Old Soldier Tells of His Going Away and His Home Coming.

"My last recollection of the camp in which we were mustered in," said the old soldier, "was of my mother. We had been in camp for days, for weeks, in fact, filling up the regiment and drilling and getting equipped, and getting ready generally. Finally we were mustered in, and the next day after that we started."

"It was nightfall when we fell in for the last time in the company streets of our first camp and marched out and formed on the color line. There was a great crowd there, relatives and friends and sightseers come to see the regiment off. In front of my own company I could see my father and mother, come to see the last of their boy before he went to war. I was the apple of my mother's eye. I knew that, and I had expected to see her break down completely when the regiment marched away, but she stood as firm as a rock."

The French Peasant.

The French peasant has an independent means of existence. He owns the soil he tills. If he employs laborers, they at least will own a house and garden and hope to own a plot. The English villager is either a small tradesman or a laborer. A garden which he cultivates but does not own is, as a rule, the extent of his possessions. There are two classes in an English village, and these may be subdivided into various religious sects. There is only one class in our French commune—a fact which has a material bearing upon the social economy of the community. Every inhabitant of the commune is a proprietor of something, and all are bent on saving yet, with all their individualism, they combine for common and mutual interest. This is illustrated by the organization of the syndicate for buying of wholesale prices. They unite for the cultivation of the soil, leading each other horses and making up teams. Every commune has a field, which is common property and where, on payment of a trifling fee, animals graze. After the harvest all the fields become common property, and the grain and the other details are allowed to remain at large.—Contemporary Review.

A Consideration of the Scientific Reasons Given For Its Presence.

Mr. John Speir, writing to The Scotch Farmer on the subject of "strange milk," says: "Bacteria pass a most important part in all our milk, and as bacteriologists who have attended their attention to strange milk have arrived at the same conclusion—that it is caused by bacteria. These bacteria, which have also brought to light the fact that several forms of bacteria may cause strange milk, and that strange milk cannot be produced without infection. In Norway and Sweden a class of 'strange milk,' called 'large milk,' is sold as an article of commerce, and this milk is said to be produced by feeding the cows on a particular plant. This milk, however, did not, however, produce such an effect, and at the present time all evidence seems to point to every case being the result of infection."

The bacillus which is supposed to be the principle cause of strange milk has been found by Gullibau to retain its vitality in September in a sample of milk to which it had been inoculated in March. It is generally supposed to live on the floor, walls and air of the byre, on the udders and bodies of the cows, and on the vessels which hold the milk or by which it is carried. It is said to be very difficult to kill, and nothing but the most scrupulous cleanliness in everything from the cow to final delivery of the milk, including milkers' hands and clothes, will get rid of it. While in Switzerland in 1894 at the conference of the British Dairy Farmers' Association, I had a conversation with Professor Freudenreich on this subject, and he said that the bacillus of this complaint was probably more common in Switzerland and Norway than in any other country. At one of the conferences in Bern he showed those present samples of milk, all from one pure source twelve hours before, each of which had been inoculated with a different cultivation of some bacillus causing trouble in the dairy. He dipped his pencil into the milk to which a cultivation of this bacillus had been added, and when lifted up, the milk, by simple adhesion, was drawn out into a string one to two feet long. Later on, in his laboratory, I had an opportunity of seeing other samples of good and bad bacteria, which are commonly found associated with dairymen, and heard from him the extreme difficulty of ridding a byre or dairy of this bacillus.

With warm weather enables this bacillus to increase, it should also give your correspondent a favorable opportunity of thoroughly disinfecting his whole premises, cows, utensils and people. Lime wash, with some strong disinfectant, should be freely used; the dairy utensils should be thoroughly steamed or boiled longer than usual, for several days successively; the cows' udders and bodies should be washed with some weak disinfectant; the clothing of the milkers and those handling the milk should be entirely renewed; and the milkers' hands washed after every cow. If these precautions are carefully carried out, the mischief may reasonably be expected to be got rid of.

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Frenchmen Know the Secret—Grows Flowers, Grapes, Strawberries and Vegetables Showing Extraordinary Vigor When Electricity is Applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effects of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires a foot or two away and then, when artificially stimulated by an electric current is blossomed far more vigor than is a normal condition.

With these data to work upon the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making delicious grapes, which is a very unusual thing to happen in France.

Pears, beans and maize grew with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with bacteria were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current. The resulting crop was uneven in character, according as one particular section received more or less of the electric current. With the powerful electrical machines much more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

The new invention is called the geomagnetism, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surrounded with a spiral of fine copper wire designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connects with a copper wire (also insulated from the pole), which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given area has been increased 50 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetism is used are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume also when stimulated in this manner. The exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that such action takes place. Some hold that it acts by aiding the plants to assimilate the acids of the atmosphere, while others think that it favors the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil.

The experiment can be tried on any farm or flower bed so long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without giving any protection.

It is estimated that a geomagnetism sixty feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. At the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

Excellent Liquid With an Extraordinary Name Dr. Marmorek Has Made.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, paronychia and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the peculiar and lengthy name of Anti-streptococcic. It has been seen at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a thin, colorless liquid, resembling water in all its most every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it as yet in existence—little more than a tiny vialful, indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused pretty nearly all Parisian section of it is least which take an interest in medical affairs and in the science of curing disease—into making frequent inquiries and regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that he is best on every hand with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and sufferers, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and the medical fraternity for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for so acting is his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxin cure, when the institute was besieged by anxious crowds demanding the new remedy, which had large sums of money for even a little of it. The doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply of it on hand, the crowd returned and upbraided the Pasteur physicians violently, calling them unhuman and brutes. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly Work of the New Bullet.

Dr. Benjamin Baker, in a paper on "War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but 'the part is always pounded; fragments are frequently carried out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulled out, and the line of management and damage beyond repair.' It may not unreasonably be contended, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life everyone a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet even at a mile's distance, and further, by making victims and vanquished suffer equally, and the cost of killing a man to be inconspicuously greater than of wounding and damaged beyond repair." It may be unpopular to all the army leaders of the world will ever be able to make, however much they may endeavor to disguise the truth.

Most fascinating invention of the age. Always ready to entertain. It requires no skill to operate it and reproduces the music of bands, orchestras, vocalists or instrumental soloists. There is nothing like it for an evening's entertainment. Other so-called talking machines reproduce only records of cut-and-dried subjects, specially prepared in a laboratory, but the Gramophone is not limited to such performances. On the Gramophone you can easily make and instantly reproduce records of the voice, or any sound. This is constantly a new and interesting and clear and brilliant.

Gramophones are sold for $10 and up. Manufactured under the patents of Bell, Edison, and Gramophone. Our establishment is headquarters of the world for Talking Machines and Talking Machine Supplies. Write for catalogue.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Ashburnham Waterworks.
Work will be commenced on the Ashburnham Water Works system this morning.

Death of Daniel Kennedy.
Word was received in town yesterday of the death of Daniel Kennedy, clerk of Campbellford. The funeral will take place to-day at 2 p.m. Mr. Kennedy was chairman of the Campbellford School Board and was one of Campbellford's most prominent citizens.

DEATH OF A PIONEER.
John Harper, of Norwood, passed over to the Great Majority, at the advanced age of 80 years.

Another of the pioneer residents of East Peterborough has passed away. In the person of John Harper, of Norwood, who died at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. M. Nichol, at Sturdee, Monday, at the advanced age of 80 years. The deceased had earned general respect during his long residence in the county and the news of his death will be received with regret by a large circle of friends.

He was born at Coshill, County Cavan, Ireland, in the year 1818, and when 18 years of age emigrated to Canada, locating in Toronto; then a struggling hamlet containing some 300 or 400 inhabitants. Here, for a year or so, he worked at his trade as a carpenter, and then removed to Springfield, in the township of Cavan, where he built a church, which is still in use at the present time. While living at Springfield he married Mary Ann Macdonald, the daughter of a Highland Scotchman, and he and his father-in-law took the contract for the carpenter work of St. John's Church, in town, which they performed to the entire satisfaction of the church authorities. Shortly after the completion of the St. John's church contract he removed to the township of Belmont, where he took up farming a few miles north of the present village of Havelock. Belmont was then a howling wilderness and the few settlers in the township were separated by miles of trackless forest. After enduring all the privations incident to pioneer life at that time, and having out a home in the forest, he disposed of the property to his brothers, James and George, and removed to Keele's Mills—now known as Norwood—where he was among the first settlers.

Here he launched out again as a builder and contractor, a business which he followed actively up until ten years ago when he retired. There is scarcely a church or public building in the entire district that has not been built under his supervision.

In religion deceased was a staunch Presbyterian, and for nearly sixty years was an elder in the church at Norwood.

He was also an enthusiastic Orangeman, and, while living in Belmont, instituted the first lodge organized in East Peterborough. On removing to Norwood in the early thirties he and his nephew, the late Jas. McWilliams, father of Mr. J. B. McWilliams, Past County Master, established "old 34," as it is called, at Norwood.

Deceased's father was a Waterloo veteran, and served under the Duke of Wellington at the Peninsula War. His grandfather was a Scotchman, and when a young man "went off to the wars" in the Netherlands, and was the custom of young ladies in search of adventure in that age. Later on he returned to England with William III., Prince of Orange, and took part in the campaign in Ireland, which was practically ended by the Battle of the Boyne. The sword used by deceased's grandfather at the Battle of the Boyne was in the family until quite recently.

The funeral took place on Monday afternoon, and was conducted under the auspices of the Orange Order—the Rev. Sumner and Stillman officiating—the latter conducted the service at the house while the former read the impressive ceremony of the Order at the grave. The pall bearers were Messrs. W. E. Rosburgh, Robert Burgess, J. Cumming, Jas. McKie, R. Nichol and Charles Nichol, all elders of the church of which deceased was a member and also an elder.

He leaves behind an honored name and a reputation for integrity and public spirit.

Capt. and Adj.

KILLED BY A TRAIN

John Wylie, Who has Been Missing Since Thursday, was Killed by a Train

In yesterday's issue the Times noted the mysterious disappearance of Mr. John Wylie, of Ashburnham, giving full particulars of the occurrence.

Yesterday afternoon it was learned that the unfortunate man had met a terrible death by being struck and run over by the Grand Trunk train en route to Belleville shortly after noon. The accident took place near Keene station and it is supposed that the old man was killed instantly though fuller particulars could not be obtained.

It is probable that Mr. Wylie has been wandering about the country in a demented condition since his disappearance though his whereabouts could not be ascertained before. It was not feared that he had met with any serious injury and the sudden and shocking nature of his death will be greatly regretted.

Brewery Picnic.
On Wednesday, Sept. 7th, the employees of the Calcutt Brewing and Malting Company will hold their annual picnic at Jubilee Point, per City of Peterborough. There will be games of all kinds at the Point, and also a baseball match between Millbrook and the West End Base Ball Clubs for a silver cup. Butcher's orchestra on board for dancing. The steamer leaves Peterboro at 8 a.m. All are invited.

ASHBURNHAM COUNCIL

Monthly Financial Statement Accounts—Rate for Street Lighting not Yet Settled

Ashburnham Council met last night in regular session.

There were present Messrs. Adams and Councilors Craig, Rutherford, and Johnston.

The minutes of the preceding meeting were read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Peterborough Light and Power Co., re rate for street lighting, as follows:

To the Reeve and Council, Ashburnham.
Gentlemen.—The matter of your street lighting has been again considered by our board, and we are anxious to have the matter finally settled, and feel sure that in this one desire coincides with your own. We cannot accept a proposition which would result in our charging your village a less price proportionally than we charge the town of Peterboro. We are willing to make the same proportionate rate as is paid by the town, providing the village makes the same proportionate increase in the number of lights used, but we cannot make a better proposition than this for twelve clock lights. If you do not wish additional lights we cannot offer you as large a reduction in price, but would make a new agreement at $55 per lamp. This is the best we can do, and we would be obliged if you would let us know at the earliest moment whether you can accept these terms.—Respectfully,
J. W. HARRIS, Secretary.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS

Coun. Craig moved, seconded by Coun. Johnston, that the street inspector be instructed to repair sidewalks on Concession street, opposite Mrs. Milla property, and also the crossing on Elm street and Stewart streets on north side, and sidewalk at C.P.R. on Stewart street on south side.—Carried.

With reference to the communication from Peterboro Light and Power Company, re street lighting, the Council decided to await upon the company with a view to a definite agreement being arrived at.

BURGULARS FRUSTRATED

Conceivable Plunderers of Ashburnham, Prevented the Robbery of Mr. Kerr's Store

Conceivable Plunderers of Ashburnham is a wide-awake official and since he has taken up the baton has inspired into evil-doers in that burg a wholesome fear of the law.

Last Sunday night he noticed a couple of suspicious looking rascals hovering around the town hall clock, and determined to keep his weather eye open. About midnight he discovered these same men, whom he had lost sight of for a few minutes, in rear of Mr. Kerr's grocery store, endeavoring to force the entrance by way of the back door. Although he made a brave attempt to capture them, they proved too nimble for him, and effected their escape.

Mr. Fitzgerald feels confident that the pair are professional crooks, and that had he not discovered them just when he did Mr. Kerr would to-day be mourning the loss of considerable cash and stock.

NO QUORUM

Last Night's Meeting of the Town Council Declared Off-Majority of Councilors Out of Town

The regular meeting of the town council, called for last night, did not take place owing to lack of a quorum. The majority of the Councilors were out of town.

Those present were Mayor Davis and Councilors McWilliams, East, Denne, J. M. White and W. H. White.

The specifications for the additional mowers required were considered in detail and amended where thought advisable.

It was decided to advertise for tenders for the work at once, the whole work petitioned for to be treated as one section, and trust to the council ratifying the action of the minority.

By pursuing this course the loss of much valuable time will be avoided. A meeting of the council will be held at as early a date as possible, as there is an immense amount of business on hand which requires attention.

FRIENDS PREVAILED

A Nervous Toronto Woman Walked the Floor During the Night for Hours at a Time—She Makes a Statement.

TOBONTO, ONT.—"I was troubled with nervousness. It was impossible for me to keep still and if the spells came over me during the night I had to get up and walk the floor for hours at a time. My blood was very poor and I was subject to bilious attacks. My feet would swell and I was not able to do my own housework. I treated with two of the best physicians here but only received relief for a time. I became discouraged. One day a friend called and advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I laughed at the advice but I was prevailed upon and procured one bottle. Before I used it all I began to feel better. I took several bottles and also several boxes of Hood's Pills. Now I can eat and drink heartily and sleep soundly. Hood's Sarsaparilla has entirely cured me and also strengthened me so that I now do all my own work. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all sufferers from nervousness, weakness or general debility." Mrs. H. P. PARK, Degraff Street.

The Philippines
TO BE ANNEXED BY THE UNITED STATES
Such is the Report Current in Europe—12,000 Prisoners Including Spanish Troops and Civilians; Undergoing Great Hardship

Madrid, Sept. 7.—During the Roman and Republican attacks upon the Government in the Chamber to-day regarding the conduct of the war, some very noisy scenes occurred, the occupants of the public galleries joining in, until there was such a tumult that the Ministers were almost inaudible. A London, Sept. 7.—The Vienna correspondent of the Times says: "According to the Political Correspondence, it is believed in Paris diplomatic circles that the United States has decided to annex the entire Philippine archipelago and it is suggested there that Spain is now resigned to a surrender of the islands for a consideration. 'Perhaps this must be regarded as a feeble' but it takes the wrong view in supposing that there could be any bargain between the United States and Spain. Much will depend upon the testimony of General Merritt and the other officers who are going to Paris. It is believed here that Admiral Dewey also will be called to Paris, and that the council of these officials will exercise a strong influence in favor of annexation."

MAY ANNEX LUZON.
London, Sept. 7.—The Hong Kong correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: "Americans living in the Far East are unanimously in favor of the annexation of Luzon, which so far as finance and trade are concerned, forms the main portion of the Philippines. Spain might retain the rest of the archipelago of which Luzon is the principal part of value, as for instance, Peking and Cebu."

"They, the Americans, are convinced that Germany has arranged with Spain for the purchase of Palawan and Sulu Islands. The exodus of Spanish families, priests and friars from Manila continues. They all appear convinced that Spanish rule in Luzon is at an end. The monastic order, anxious on account of their large properties in the interior are endeavoring to dispose of them. They would welcome American or English authority."

PRISONERS' LIVES ENDANGERED.
"Considerable anxiety exists regarding the ten thousand to twelve thousand prisoners, including Spanish troops and civilians, women and children in the hands of the Filipinos. Some of them are undergoing humiliations, hardships, and circumstances may arise which would endanger their lives. Efforts should be made by Spain and the United States jointly to secure their ransom. While in Manila, the touching friction with the natives leaders. So far I do not believe it serious, but careful treatment is certainly necessary in order to prevent possibility of rupture."

SEIZING SMUGGLED CIGARS
Wholesale Violation of the Customs Law Discovers
Ottawa, Sept. 6.—All over Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia today law and Revenue officers are searching the stores of tobacconists and grocers and the bar-rooms of hotels for contrabanded cigars, which make up one of the biggest seizures of smuggled tobacco ever brought into Canada.

The goods were made in Porto Rico, and were landed somewhere around Halifax, but just where the Revenue officials have not been able to learn. They first made their appearance in the grocery store of A. E. Lawlor of Halifax, and from there were distributed over the Province of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario. So well and systematically goods were distributed by express and freight over the Intercolonial and other railways, and the payments collected by draft through the banks. The first seizure of goods was made by Edward Foxworth, the well-known Toronto preventive officer, at Hastings, Ont., and so well did he follow up the clue that he secured not only the name of Lawlor, the distributor of the cigars, but got a list of all the people to whom the stuff had been sold and the amount they purchased.

It is a case of one of the biggest smuggling exposures ever made in Canada.
CANDIA IN FLAMES
The Turke Fire the Town—British Marines Lead
Candia, Sept. 7.—The Turks set fire to the whole town of Candia. The only war ship there at the time of the attack was the British gunboat Hazard, which landed a party of marines to assist the 120 British troops there.

HOW THE BOMBING STARTED.
London, Sept. 7.—Sir A. Biliotti, the British Consul at Candia, who went to Candia on board the British battleship Camperdown cables to the Foreign Office, saying that the rioting at Candia was caused in the following manner:—A British soldier on guard at the tax office was suddenly stabbed in the back and he dropped his rifle, which exploded, killing a Mussulman. The firing then became general, and a party of twenty British bayonets from the British Torpedo gunboat Hazard was almost annihilated before the sailors could reach their ship. In addition

ARTFUL DODGERS
Are Our Townspeople, but Country Folks Come to Grief in Dodging Obstructions on the Streets
To the Editor of The Times—
Dear Sir,—Any one passing along George Street on Saturday must have been impressed with the fact that our country cousins are not such artful dodgers as the city folk. What with the raising and lowering of the new sidewalks, the low awnings and the litter of store goods strewn along the walks, pedestrian traffic became at times embarrassing, if not impossible, and occasionally presented comical situations. In one instance, two burly fellows, while dodging the wares and darning to evade the awnings, between Routleys and Shorley's, fell foul of each other, which by the time they reached Turnbull's culminated in one of them being knocked down and out in the first round. Now this is not as it should be. If, as I see by a former communication to your paper, there is a by-law against placing goods or wares on the street, the same falls on the policemen, instead of the Council, and therein stated, for not enforcing the by-law against the like. It is not the Council is indirectly to blame in not insisting on the policemen doing their duty when pay day comes around or else forfeit their salary for the term of their delinquency.
Yours, etc.

Mr. J. Thompson Patterson, secretary of New York, editor of the Insurance Connellor, was in town for a few days the guest of his sister, Mrs. A. W. Patterson, of Bonaccord st.

Mr. T. J. Crowe, of Kingston, Col. Sergt. of No. 14th Battalion, has been rusticated at Stony Lake for the last week, returned to town last evening on his way home. He reports a splendid outing and lots of fish. His old comrades in town were all pleased to meet Tommy. Mr. Crowe leaves on the Belleville train for Kingston this morning.

Monday Past—Mr. Alf. Terrill, of Peterboro passed through town yesterday returning from Balthurton, where he spent a few days. He says the half has not been told in reference to the Balthurton mines, and the prospects are undoubtedly very good. On Sunday while a funeral was passing down the main street of the village, a party, started by the noise, flew through Mr. Frost's store window, and Mr. Dan Keilatt was promptly on hand and secured the bird, which Mr. Terrill enjoyed for his supper.

Cornwall, Sept. 7.—A few minutes after noon yesterday pier No. 2 of the bridge spanning the St. Lawrence suddenly crumpled and fell away into the swirling torrent, and it was followed with a mighty crash by the centre span and the span next to the American shore. Fourteen people were killed and sixteen injured, several fatally. The centre span dropped 90 feet, straight into the river, and then fell over towards the east, and now lies on the bottom of the river, unburnt, and plainly visible to anyone in a boat above it. But two men were working on it, and they were fortunate enough to escape with a few bruises. But on the other span the scene was a horrible and surprising description. The men were working on the flooring of the bridge, and it was among these workmen that the greatest fatality occurred. They were literally crushed beneath the heavy iron work of the bridge and traveler, and their corpses now lie at the bottom of the hungry river, in a terribly mutilated and deformed. Jno. W. Smith, the manager of the Phoenix Bridge Co., at Cornwall quickly had his entire force on the scene, and after the first and most necessary duty of rescuing the wounded had been performed, the work of removing the debris was immediately started.

WORKMEN WENT DOWN
The moment the crash came workmen, Indians and in fact everyone within reach were on the scene, and soon the river fairly swarmed with boats and lugs on their errand of help. Many a horrible mutilated man was quickly rescued, and as soon as it was reasonably certain that every living creature on the wreck had been taken off the tug Beaver started for Cornwall with its mangled load of sufferers. As was met at the wharf by a special car of the Cornwall Street Railway, and soon a line of the injured were tenderly placed in the Hotel Dieu Hospital, and every physician within reach was quickly summoned to the scene. For several hours the operating room was supplied with patients. At latest account the seven injured are doing well, but several are, it is feared, mortally wounded. The latest estimate of killed given by the Phoenix Bridge Co. is fourteen, and it is unlikely that this number will be reduced, but there is a possibility that the fatalities will exceed this estimate.

The cause of the sudden crumpling away of the pier is generally thought to have been the action of the water pressure. The concrete foundation, A. The piers have been put in on a concrete foundation, and per No. 2, which went today, had stood the test of the years. The only admissible theory, therefore, seems to be as already stated—the action of the swift current upon the concrete. An investigation, which in all probability will soon be held, will determine the cause of the accident satisfactorily.

THE TORONTO VICTIM
Patrick Murphy, the only victim of the tragedy, who, as far as is known, belonged to Toronto, was brought up in that city, and lived here until about three years ago. He worked for a number of years for the Street Railway Company as a driver when the horses were used, and as a motorman after the electric service was installed. About three years ago he came disenchanted with his position, and went to Niagara Falls, where he worked for two years on the construction of the new suspension bridge. After this work reached completion Murphy remained in Niagara Falls for a time, having employment in a factory there. He then went to Cornwall, and worked on the bridge there. His father, Patrick Murphy, Jr., lives at 130 Bathurst street, and the news of his son's death, which came through a telegram from Patrick Johnson, superintendent of the Phoenix Bridge Co., proved a great shock for the aged gentleman. The deceased had four sisters and a brother, and was born 84 years of age. The telegram from the bridge superintendent stated that the body had not been found, and a reply was sent asking that if it immediately forwarded to Toronto where recovered.

WHEN THE TROLLEY COMES TO TOWN.

Along the best business and do the job up town. For at least we have a trolley running through the town.

The trolley stop their laying and wonder at the sight. For the way the cars go shooting is a revolution quite.

The old town doesn't seem the same. It's mighty bright and gay. And every one can celebrate its resurrection day.

Two hundred years ago, and buried good and deep, but now it has awakened from its long sleep. And every hour of the day the cars run up and down.

And every one is tickled now the trolley's come to town.

There's two new horns going up, excitement everywhere. And a mild form of parents seems to permeate the air. The bundles to be delivered have surely taken root. While real estate has risen to fifteen cents a foot.

And all the wimpy folks have bought a brand new muslin gown. For they're bound to cut a figure now the trolley's come to town.

—Hartford Times.

AN EERIE EPISODE.

It was at a masquerade at Galinier's studio in one of the old Roman palaces. There were music, the tripping sound of dancing feet, laughter and the unintelligible hum of conversation mingled in a gay medley.

Carson, an American, a new arrival in the city and a stranger to that colony of sculptors and painters, had been accidentally separated from the friend who brought him in the crowd shortly after his entrance to the ballroom.

He was wandering listlessly among the merry makers, quite regardless of their glances and laughter at his expense. Tired at length of his aimless peregrinations, he turned aside from the glaring lights and beat to the shade and coolness of the balcony.

The wide casements at the end of the room were open and gave an unobstructed view of the kaleidoscopic scene within. A divan near the balcony offered a place for repose, but it was not until he was seated that he was aware of the presence of a lady. She occupied the farther end of the divan and was partially concealed by the drooping tree ferns and palms with which the balcony was decorated. She moved slightly in her nest of tricolored cushions, and her fan fell with a slight clatter upon the stone floor.

Carson picked it up and gave it to her with a courteous bow. She thanked him, speaking in English, with just the slightest Italian accent.

"I fear that I am intruding, signora," he said.

"Not so. The balcony is free to all who come. There can be no intrusion." She reached up her hand as she spoke and pushed aside the feathery branches that swayed between them. Then he saw that she was young and very fair to look upon.

Her face was decidedly English. She wore an indescribable swathing garment of soft texture that was gathered up closely about her neck and fell to her feet in long, clinging folds—strongly suggestive of a Bernhardt costume. Two beautifully shaped arms were bare to the shoulder, and the small hands that lay in her lap looked as though they had been modeled in wax.

She leaned back, resting her head upon the stuccoed pillar, her fan waving languidly to and fro.

"Permit me," said the American, taking the dainty lace and ivory trifle from her hand and fanning her gently. She smiled a gracious assent, and then began talking.

It was so warm in the ballroom and one grew so tired dancing, she said. Did the gentleman dance? Perhaps he was not acquainted with many ladies—a stranger in Rome? Was he an artist or a sculptor?

"Neither, signora. I am an attaché."

"From what country—England?"

"No—America."

"America! Ah, that marvelous land!"

She chatted on in an open, friendly manner until a boy of tired dancers invaded their retreat. Among them was his friend Tarro.

"Great heavens, Carson! Where have you been? I have looked everywhere for you. Everybody is unmaking, and it is time for supper. No doubt you are starving. Come, I have secured a table, and you are to meet some charming women. What have you been doing here all alone? It was exceedingly stupid in us to get separated."

"I have not been alone," replied Mr. Carson. He glanced around, but the lady was gone.

"Not alone? Why, who was with you?"

"The lady. Did you not see her when you came?"

"A capital, my dear boy. I saw no lady. No, you are there mourning, staring in a most sentimental manner at that Moorish lantern hanging over there. Come along. They are waiting for us."

They lingered long over their supper. There were merry, high pitched talking and much laughter, but Carson was not in a state of mind. His motherly heart glowed with over the company, and once he started and turned sharply in his chair at the low voice of a woman who, with her escort, passed close beside him.

There tried to rally him on his abandonment, but his brow contracted furiously, and he nervously suggested a supply of flowers that lay by his plate. He was not sorry when the ball was over and he found himself on the pavement outside of the palace.

A cab was waiting, but without knowing why he declined to accompany his friend, saying he preferred to walk to his hotel. He wandered along slowly, with bowed head, absently staring at the dim shadows cast by the waning moon. As he was passing across the Piazza de Firenze he heard a low voice speaking:

"So we meet again!"

He halted. She, his new acquaintance, was beside him.

"Signora! You here at this hour and alone? Where are your friends?"

She smiled. "You will walk with me to the street below, will you not?"

"Certainly. But your friends—their carelessness is criminal."

They walked through the square and down several streets almost in silence. Presently she stopped before the entrance of a house.

"Here, signor!" she said.

Almost simultaneously she swayed forward and caught his arm, at the same time uttering a smothered cry.

"You are hurt!" he exclaimed anxiously. "You have twisted your ankle on those wretched stones."

"I fear so." She pressed her hand upon her bosom and looked into his eyes with mute appeal.

"You cannot walk." He stooped and gathered her up into his arms. "I will carry you. Which floor?"

"The fourth," she replied, her face flushing at the light of the early day fall upon it.

On the second flight ascent was not so easy. Her weight grew heavier, and the head that had now fallen on his shoulder pressed like a ball of iron, her arms were relaxing their clasp and lay against his neck with startling coldness. She seemed to be letting herself go, and at each step grew heavier in proportion.

He was no longer carrying a limping maiden, but something burdensome and horrible—something that was bearing him down and suffocating him with a sensation as though his chest was bursting.

On the third landing he felt her slipping.

"Signora," he faltered.

He sought to renew his hold, but the burden, now a dead weight, slid from his arms, and she fell with a heavy thud to the floor.

"What noise is this?" called a masculine voice in Italian.

Carson began a hasty explanation to the man, whose head protruded from a partially open door.

The man came forward and bent over her.

"She does not belong here," he said. "She is a stranger. She is pale as death. Unfasten her clothing. She must have fainted. Where is the janitor? The fool! He never is here when he is needed. Call him, signor, and send for a physician."

His hasty hand broke the knot of ribbon that confined her bodice. With a wild exclamation he instantly loosened his hold on her dress and started backward. The full throat and white bust were exposed. There were deep bluish purple bands around the throat and a gaping dagger wound, dark with coagulated blood, on the snowy bosom.

Their cries aroused the janitor, who hastened to call the police. Presently he returned, panting up the stairs, accompanied by an officer. Carson drew aside the curtain, and the bright light of day fell upon the body.

"Holy Virgin!" cried the policeman as he saw the dead woman.

"Can you identify her?" asked Carson.

"Yes," returned the man. "She is the woman who was found murdered on the Corso night before last. How came she here?"—M. M. Halm in Argos.

De Lesseps Statue.

M. Fremiet has finished the head of the enormous statue of the late Comte Ferdinand de Lesseps which is to be placed at the entry of the Suez canal. The canal project is to be represented standing, covered with an Arab headdress, and pointing toward the new waterway opened up to navigation. On one of the sides of the pedestal—which is to have a granite foundation—will be a medallion containing the portraits of the khedives who patronized the canal.

Selling Corned.

Next to the power of standing outside oneself and looking at me as other folks see me the most remarkable is this of (by the insight of genius and imagination) becoming you. The first makes one sometimes only too reasonable, too humble, the second warms the heart and enriches the soul, for it gives the charm of selfhood to being and ourselves.—Jean Ingelow.

His Wife Won.

A Georgia man, who was unpopular in his community, insured his life for $2,000. He took the policy home to his wife and said:

"Maria, here's a life insurance document for $2,000."

"Thank you, dear," said his wife. "How are you feeling today?"

"Not well," he replied, "and I don't think I am long for this world, and I want to say to you that when I die it is my wish that you devote $1,000 of the money to defraying my funeral expenses."

"Marry on me," exclaimed the wife, "why do you want such an expensive funeral?"

"I'll explain. I'm perfectly satisfied that nobody will attend my funeral, and I want to hire people to go to so much a head. I'm going out today and see what arrangements I can make for my funeral on that forthcoming metropolitanly occasion. If they won't come, please, say—I'll just hire 'em on give 'em a splendor on you for the money."

He went forth and at midnight returned with a doctored log.

"Maria," he said, "it's my wish. You can have the whole $2,000. Just go to my funeral yourself."—Atlanta Const.

Pier No. 2 Crumbled and Fell Away and Two Spans Crashed into the River—Toronto Was a Victim

THE DEAD.

Cornwall, Sept. 7.—A few minutes after noon yesterday pier No. 2 of the bridge spanning the St. Lawrence suddenly crumbled and fell away into the swirling current, and with it crashed a mighty crash by the centre span and the span next to the American shore. Fourteen people were killed and sixteen injured, several fatally. The centre span dropped 90 feet straight into the river, and then fell over towards the east, and now lies on the bottom of the river, unhurt and plainly visible to anyone in a boat above it. But two men were working on it, and they were fortunate enough to escape with a few bruises. But on the other span the scene was horrible and surprising. The men were working on the flooring of the bridge, and it was among these workmen that the greatest fatality occurred. They were literally crushed beneath the heavy iron work of the bridge and traveller, and their corpses now lie at the bottom of the hungry river, probably horribly mutilated and defaced. J. W. Sawyers, the manager of the Phoenix Bridge Co. at Cornwall, quickly had his entire force on the scene, and after the first and most necessary duty of rescuing the wounded had been performed, the work of removing the debris was immediately started.

WORKMEN WENT DOWN.

The moment the crash came workmen, Indians and in fact everyone within reach were on the scene, and soon the river fairly swarmed with boats saving their errand of mercy. Many a horrible mutilated man was quickly rescued, and as soon as it was reasonably certain that every living creature on the wreck had been taken off the tug Beaver started for Cornwall with its mangled load of sufferers. His crew met at the wharf by a special car of the Cornwall Street Railway, and soon all the injured were tenderly placed in the Hotel Dieu Hospital, and every physician within reach was quickly on the scene. For several hours the operating room was kept supplied with patients. At latest accounts the seventeen injured are doing well, but several are, it is feared, mortally wounded. The latest estimate of killed given by the Phoenix Bridge Co. is fourteen, and it is unlikely that this number will be reduced, but there is a possibility that the fatalities will exceed this estimate.

The cause of the sudden crumbling away of the pier is generally thought to have been the action of the water on the concrete foundation. All the piers have been put on a concrete foundation, and pier No. 2, which went to-day, had stood the test of the last winter without perceptible damage. The only admissible theory, therefore, seems to be an already stated—the action of the swift current upon the concrete. An investigation, which in all probability will soon be held, will determine the cause of the accident satisfactorily.

THE TORONTO VICTIM

Patrick Murphy, the only victim of the tragedy, who, so far as is known, escaped to Toronto, was brought up in the city, and lived here until about three years ago. He worked for a number of years for the Street Railway Company as a driver when the horses were used, and as a motorman after the electric service was installed. About the year ago he became dissatisfied with his position, and went to Niagara Falls, where he worked for two years on the construction of the new suspension bridge. After this work reached completion Murphy remained in Niagara Falls for a time, having employment in a factory there. He then went to Cornwall to work on the bridge there. His father, Patrick Murphy, sr., lives at 139 Bathurst street, and the news of his son's death, which came through a telegram from Patrick Johnstone, superintendent of the Phoenix Bridge Co., proved a great shock for the aged gentleman. The deceased had four sons and a brother, and was himself 34 years of age. The telegram from the bridge superintendent stated that the body had not been found, and a reply was sent asking that it be immediately forwarded to Toronto when recovered.

CANDIA IN FLAMES

The Turks Fire the Town—British Marines Land

Candia, Sept. 7.—The Turks set fire to the whole town of Candia. The only ship there at the time of the outbreak was the British gunboat Harard, which landed a party of marines to assist the 180 British troops there.

HOW THE RIOTING STARTED.

London, Sept. 7.—Sir A. Billoitt, the British Consul at Candia, who went to Candia on board the British battleship Camperdown, cables to the Foreign Office, saying that the rioting at Candia was caused in the following manner:—A British soldier on guard at the tax office was suddenly stabbed in the back and he dropped his rifle, which exploded, killing a Mussulman. The firing then became general, and a party of twenty British blue-jackets from the British Torpedo gunboat Harard was almost annihilated before the sailors could reach their ship. In addition a detachment of 45 British soldiers were driven from their quarters near the telegraph station, and many of them were wounded. The total casualties, so far as known, are twenty killed, and fifty wounded. The fate of the Christians in other towns is uncertain; but it is feared that only those who succeeded in obtaining refuge in the court houses have been saved. The British Vice-Consul, Mr. Calceburno, was burned to death in his house. The fires have been extinguished, and the town is now comparatively quiet.

SEIZING SMUGGLED CIGARS

Ottawa, Sept. 8.—All over Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, day inland Revenue officers are searching the stores of tobacconists and grocers and the bar-rooms of hotels for contraband cigars, which make up one of the biggest seizures of smuggled tobacco ever brought into Canada.

The goods were made in Porto Rico, and were landed somewhere around Halifax, but just where the Revenue officials have not been able to learn. They first made their appearance in the grocery stores of A. E. Lawlor, of Halifax, and from there were distributed over the Province of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario. So well and systematically goods were distributed by express and freight over the Intercolonial and other railways, and the payments collected by draft through the banks.

The first trace of the goods was secured by Edward Floody, the well-known Toronto preventive officer, at Hastings, Ont., and so well did he follow up the clue that he secured not only the name of Lawlor, the distributor of the cigars, but got a list of all the people to whom the stuff had been sold and the amount they purchased.

MAY ANNEX LUGON.

London, Sept. 7.—The Hong Kong correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: "Americans living in the Far East are unanimously in favor of the annexation of Luzon, which so far as finance and trade are concerned, forms the main portion of the Philippine Islands. Spain might retain the rest of the archipelago, of which only portions at present are of value, as, for instance, Paday and Cebu."

"They, the Americans, are convinced that Germany has arranged with Spain for the purchase of Palawan and Salu Islands."

"The exodus of Spanish families, priests and friars from Manila continues. They all appear convinced that Spanish rule in Luzon is at an end. The monastic orders, anxious on account of their large properties in the interior are endeavoring to dispose of them. They would welcome American or English authority."

PRISONERS' LIVES ENDANGERED.

"Considerable anxiety exists regarding the ten thousand to twelve thousand prisoners, including Spanish troops and civilians, women and children in the hands of the Filipinos, some of them are undergoing humiliations, hardships, and circumstances may arise which would endanger their lives. Efforts should be made by Spain and the United States jointly to secure their release. While in Manila, I found a rigid censorship on messages touching friction with the native leaders. So far I do not believe it serious, but careful treatment is certainly necessary in order to prevent possibility of rupture."

How the music comes from a Graphophone cylinder is a mystery that adds much to the fascination of the machine. The songs of the Graphophone are literally songs that sing themselves. The Graphophone is marvellous as an entertainer. The Graphophone might be described as all musical instruments in one. You can get from it any kind of music you want, vocal or instrumental. It is the perfect talking machine; for entertainment at home it has no rival as its repertoire is unlimited. Furthermore it costs less than a cheap musical instrument. HERBERT W. SCHMIDT, Toronto, Ont.

A Prominent Physician.
A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tablets with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthropist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tablets, and cause it to be put up in the form of a batchup and distributed among the poor."

Under Investigation.
The largest retail drug store in America is that of Huggins & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tablets were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tablets is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of them, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When one of them begins to notice that a permanent cure for him is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.
An elderly lady living at Furthman Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tablets for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tablets recommended very highly in the New York Herald, I decided to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $5 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tablets has saved me a great deal of money, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who quickly objected to their mother giving a testimonial which would prove for some in the neighborhood, but to do this the elderly lady agreed: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I can see I take great pleasure in recommending the Tablets to any one who is troubled as I was. The fact about my case in the paper makes some other person's story more likely to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I am confident." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

OUT OF THE FIRE.

The little town of Graham was thrown into considerable excitement when it was reported that George Stapleton, one of its leading citizens and most prominent business men, had fallen for the large sum and had committed suicide in consequence. Grave charges had been whispered against him for some months in connection with some of his operations in the business world, and now had come the ruin which all Stapleton's efforts were powerless to avert.

There were but few who ventured to raise a question of Stapleton's errors, or offer a word of kindly human sympathy to his heart-broken widow and son. These pointed out the fact that his bookkeeper and clerk had been in the habit of embezzling large sums of money, and his frequent absence from the city on business, had mismanaged the affairs of the firm for some time, precipitating the ruin of the house, which all Stapleton's efforts were powerless to avert.

It was known that the bookkeeper,
James Gillin, had thrown up his position suddenly, some months before the final crash, and betaken himself to parts unknown, but those who had lost money by the failure would hear of no excuses, and much bitterness of sentiment prevailed even among those who had no direct loss to complain of,
but who, merely looking on the surface of things, passed a condemnatory verdict in general.

Some days after the funeral, Mrs.
Stapleton sat one morning in the dining-room of her once happy home, gasping blankly out at the sunlit scene presented from the window. Her pale, haggard face and sombre attire looked out of keeping with the bright summer day, and she seemed to realize it, for she lowered the curtains. There was a slight noise at the door of the room, and she half turned in the great armchair, his chair, into which she had thrown herself, and tried to smile—a poor, frozen attempt at a smile—as her son Laurence entered the room.

He had a crumpled newspaper in his hand. There was a stern look about his boardless mouth and chin, which gave him a strong resemblance to his mother. The pictured face of the dead husband and father which looked down upon them from the wall bore traces of temperamental weakness that was looked for in vain in the frank clear-cut face of his son. He was but a youth, scarcely more than eighteen years of age, but there was already promising of grand manhood about him. His mother thought, as she lifted her weary eyes and surveyed the supple young figure and handsome face of her boy.

He stood with his back to the mantel, facing her for some moments in silence, evidently seeking to stifle some inner feelings. She saw that something was amiss, but waited for him to speak. His voice vibrated with anger and pain, as he said, with a gesture towards the newspaper, which he had thrown aside:

"I suppose you know something of what they are saying about him, mother."
"Yes, I know," she rejoined sadly.
"They do not understand the circumstances of the case. Your poor father's greatest fault was too great a trust in others—in Gillin."
"The unprincipled villain!" exclaimed Laurence, fiercely. "Would that I could meet him face to face and deal with him as he deserves!"
"Little mother," he continued in a softer tone, "we will make the best of things. We must give up this place to the people who have lost money by the failure. I know he would wish it.
We will begin the world anew, you and I, penniless to be sure; but you shall never know want as long as there is work in the world for the hands and brain of a willing man."

"I have been thinking," said Mrs.
Stapleton, whose face had brightened a little at her son's brave, manly words,
"that it might be better for us to leave Graham—better for your future, I mean, dear."

"I don't think so, mother. Let us stay if we can and live down the misfortunes that have come upon us. I don't like the idea of flying before disaster and unmerited condemnation. I would much rather remain here; but if you prefer—"

"No, no, Laurence, I was but thinking of you," she interrupted.
"So it was understood that they were to remain in Graham, where the widow reflected, they had yet a few friends who retained the kindest feelings towards them; and soon after they moved into a small but comfortable cottage in the suburbs of the town, where they were themselves as comfortable as possible under the circumstances, and took up the battle of life from this new look so much lighter."

Early one morning Laurence made his appearance in the office of Herbert Marston, the head of the leading manufacturing business in Graham, and requested employment of some kind that would enable him to support himself and his mother. Marston had been his father's friend, and had stood by them through all the times of affliction and adversity. He surveyed the young fellow with an admiring, almost fatherly gaze, as he put a few questions to him relative to the matter of employment.

"You would not object to a little hard work, I presume," he presently said, with a searching glance into his young friend's face, and then at his shapely, well-kept hands.

"No, sir; you may put me at anything within the limits of my strength.
I am not asking for a sinecure, but will earnestly endeavor to fulfil any duties that may be assigned me, whether requiring effort of head or hands, or both."

A pleased smile came over Marston's face at this reply, and it was soon decided that Laurence should take his place in the works at an early day. He left the office feeling hopeful for the future, and resolved that he would make his way up the ladder of success if there were yet virtue in human effort.

Success generally follows unremitting effort. Three years that followed young Stapleton's advent into the business world he justified all beliefs, and hope centred upon him by his friends. By the time he had attained to man's estate he had become an important factor in the concerns with which he was connected, and Marston felt that he had done a good thing for himself when he secured his services.

He is the most remarkable young man I have ever seen," he declared to his wife and daughter. "His character has developed exactly in accordance with my expectations."

Helen Marston, a lovely girl in her teens, looked up brightly.

"I have always admired Laurence's courage," she said. "Why does he so seldom come to see us, papa? He is more than welcome here."

"I fancy he keeps pretty busy; his mother tells me he studies every evening. But I'll speak to him about it."

"Oh, no," cried Helen, with a vivid blush. "He must please himself in the matter. No doubt he will come when he feels inclined." And she hastened to change the subject, leaving her father a wife puzzled by what he considered her contradictory words.

Again and again was Laurence promoted by the firm until he became foreman of a large division of the works, and found himself, at the age of 24, the recipient of a handsome salary. There were some remonstrances when Marston made choice of so young a man for a position requiring in its incumbent so much judgment and practical knowledge. But he replied to them with characteristic bluntness and emphasis:

"That young fellow," said he, "knows more about machinery, even the most complex, than any other man in the place. Do you suppose I would have kept on promoting him for no good cause? And, by the way, he has been working for nearly two years on an invention of his own that should be succeed in carrying out his ideas. It is destined to work a revolution in one branch of our business. The saving of material alone under its operation would amount to thousands annually."

It was true that Laurence Stapleton stood on the eve of making a great mechanical discovery, over which he had worked and studied for many long months, and upon which his hopes were becoming more and more fixed.
For should he succeed did it not mean wealth—the ability to pay every dollar of that old indebtedness? He had always dreamed of some day being able to clear his father's name entirely from every hint or shadow of reproach. It meant also comfort for his mother's declining years—his noble, patient mother, whose life had been so stricken with sorrow and misfortune.

And, last of all, did it not promise happiness for himself? His face grew bright and tender as his thoughts turned to fair, sweet Helen Marston, she who had been the admiration of his boyhood and was now the secretly worshipped idol of his manhood. Not that she would look upon wealth as a necessary qualification in a lover—he knew her better—but he was too proud to go to Mr. Marston with empty hands and ask him to revive him as son-in-law. And so he struggled and worked on in silence, while other successors to Helen's hand came and went at her father's house.

Helen had always been a great favorite with Mrs. Stapleton, and in her visits to the cottage she sometimes met Laurence, and if her eyes sought his at times in watchful questioning when she called him on having im-saken them, as rarely did he call he feared to believe what they seemed to say. On the subject of his own hopeless love, however, he was silent.
And so he worked and waited, hoping for the day when he would be free to seek the woman he adored and win her for his own.

Thus matters stood when one morning Laurence surprised Mr. Marston by bursting into his private office with an unusual show of animation and almost boyish precipitation.

"Come," he cried. "Come and see it! It is wonderful—it is perfect!"
Marston tried to question him, but the young man half dragged him from the room, repeating, "Come and see it!" And Marston followed him to an apartment adjoining the main wing of the works.

A singular-looking machine stood on a rough table, to which Laurence directed his attention. It was a working model of the invention over which he had labored so long, and he now began to illustrate to his employer its perfect successful working.
Marston, looking on, was struck with the marvellous ingenuity of the machine, and realized that it was designed to be the means of fame and riches to his friend. He took the young inventor by the hand and warmly congratulated him with every expression of pleasure.

"That will bring you wealth and fame, my boy," he said, as they were leaving the room. "But we shall lose you. I suppose—in the works I mean—and I have come to depend on you as though you were my son."

Laurence impulsively seized his hand.
"Mr. Marston—my friend and benefactor—if only I might become your son in reality! This has been the sweetest dream of my life. May I seek Helen and plead for favor now that there is hope of my having something to offer her?"

"Something to offer?" repeated his friend, blankly. "Then, collect your wits a little. Do you mean to say that you love my daughter, and she has refused you because of your poverty?"

"No, no," replied Laurence. "I have never mentioned my love to Helen, though surely she must know something of the state of my feelings. How could I seem to take advantage of your and her kindness to me by offering myself as her husband, she who may love me so much higher."

"I see—I see!" said Mr. Marston, thoughtfully. "I understand just how you felt, my dear boy. And you love Helen, and want her for your wife, eh?"

"How much?"
Laurence. "I am unworthy of her—as almost any man would be. Yet—"

"Oh, yes, just so," interrupted the older man, with a slight smile. "Never mind that, Laurence, but go to her as soon as you will. You have my good wishes for your success. You are a gentleman, sir, and I shall be glad to claim you as a son."

Two months later Graham society was thrown into a state of excitement by the announcement that Helen Marston, the daughter of the millionaire manufacturer, had married her father's foreman, Laurence Stapleton, who was himself on the high road to fortune.

Before the end of the year Laurence had paid up the last dollar of his father's debts, bought back for his mother her old home, and built a small but handsome residence for himself and Helen. As time passed, and the world saw that Dame Fortune continued to smile upon the Stapletons' many of the friends so called, who had turned their backs upon them in the days of their poverty and struggles, came guttering round them again. But the young couple did not forget the past so easily, and the young wife understood her husband and sympathized in them to such extent that the returning favor of the world was accorded a very cold welcome.

My story is a simple and uneventful one; but it covers a moral also often lost sight of in this day and generation—that only by unremitting and honorable industry can a man achieve lasting success.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Council Meeting Tonight

A meeting of the town council is called for to-night at 8 o'clock, sharp. Every member is expected to be present as the session will be an important one.

Who's Entitled to Vote

Who's entitled to vote at the Plebiscite continues to puzzle people generally. The new Dominion Franchise Act, fully explained in the House by a member of the Government, is not positively understood. It is well that it doesn't make much difference anyway—nobody seems to care who votes or who doesn't vote.

Spurting His Ankle

An employee of the Dickson Co. shingle mill, John Wilson, of Fenelon Falls, a borderer at the Temperance House, sustained a bad sprain of the right ankle Wednesday afternoon by having his foot twisted between two logs. The injuries were very painful. Mr. Wilson was removed to the Temperance House and Dr. Brown dressed his wound.

Down the River

Say, the summer is passing and you have not been down the river for the prettiest sail in this province. Or, perhaps, you have been down and promised yourself the sail again. Well, remember that Capt. Martin is again in charge of the North Star, and that this popular steamer will run daily trips to Rice Lake point. The steamer will leave the wharf at 9:15 a.m. each day except Saturday. On Saturday she leaves at two o'clock in the afternoon. The best of attention is received on the North Star.

An Explanation

The Times has, we are informed, been accused of giving currency to a rumor that a prominent and respected citizen of our town had been arrested in Toronto, charged with misappropriating the funds of the Peterboro Natural Gas and Coal Oil Company. We desire most emphatically to deny the allegation. This journal has always been noted for doing its duty without fear or favor, always bowing to the line, regardless of where the chips may fall, and it has, therefore, a pleasing duty to perform in making it clear that nothing to do with setting the rumor upon referred to about a rumor which, by the way, has not in it a particle of truth. The gentleman referred to has returned to town, and is prepared to interfere with the defamers with a club. If this explanation is not satisfactory we will write another.

More A-Postrophe Weddings

Rev. C. E. McLeod, of the Milmore Baptist church, Wednesday, united in the holy bonds of wedlock Mr. Nathan Taylor, of Bridgewater, and Miss Helen Bond, of Coburg. The ceremony was performed at the residence of Mr. G. W. Powell, Douro. The bride was assisted by Miss Clara Powell, of Coburg, and to Mr. R. Heard, of Bridgewater, fell the duties of best man. A large number of beautiful presents was a feature of the interesting occasion and after the usual wedding breakfast the newly wedded pair, followed by the cordial congratulations of their numerous friends.

A quiet wedding took place on Tuesday afternoon at the residence of Mr. John Campbell, 73 Smith st., when his second daughter, Miss Jessie Campbell, was united in the holy bonds of wedlock with Mr. J. C. Lansing, of Detroit and formerly of town. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Libbie Campbell, and Mr. George Billings, the bride's uncle, was the groomsmen. Rev. Dr. Turance was the officiating clergyman. Mr. and Mrs. Lansing left in the afternoon for Detroit, where they will reside. Many friends will extend to the young couple their hearty congratulations.

PETERBOROUGH'S CORUNDUM

Sufficient to Supply the World—200 Pounds From Bottom Township to be Exported on at Toronto

Mr. M. A. Snyder, President of the Chicago Wheel & Manufacturing Co., recently paid a visit to the Bureau of Mines, where he had a long discussion in regard to the deposits of corundum in Hastings, Renfrew and Peterborough counties. Mr. Snyder is an extensive user of emery and corundum in the manufacture of wheels and other articles of an abrasive or polishing nature. His attention had been drawn to the recently discovered corundum in eastern Ontario, and he had been on the ground looking over the corundum belt. About the same time Dr. Coy, an associate of Mr. Snyder, also went over the ground. Their object was to ascertain in what quantities the mineral was to be found and to see to what uses it could be put in the manufacture of their articles. When asked his view regarding the extent of the deposits in Ontario, Mr. Snyder said: "My impression is that there is corundum enough in Ontario to supply the world. Its range is extensive; the outcrops are frequent, and there must be an immense quantity of corundum there." As to the quantity of the mineral, he said that was a total which could only be settled by practical and thorough tests with wheels and other articles, and this would need time. Some samples which he had seen had a soft appearance. But of course they were probably to some extent affected by the atmosphere. The only way in which representative samples could be obtained was by sinking on the deposit and taking the mineral from a depth at which it would be free from weathering and other softening influences. If after such a trial the Ontario deposits were found to possess all the properties of the first-class articles they were certainly valuable.

As to the uses to which corundum might be put, Mr. Snyder said its principal use was in the manufacture of wheels for grinding smooth surfaces upon objects of iron, etc., such as knife sharpeners, wheelstones, pulleys, buffing cloths, etc. It comes in grains of various sizes, which are cemented together by various substances, usually trade secrets, but they are put through a process of verification. The emery is an impure form of corundum, and is a good deal of impurities, and is used for coarser grades of work.

A sharp competitor is corundum, a silicate of carbon, which is made by fusing together carbon and a pure quartz sand in the electric furnace. This is extremely hard and cuts well, but is more expensive than corundum.

It has been suggested that the corundum of Ontario might be used as an ore of the production of aluminum. It is much richer in alumina than the material now employed. A large outlet would thus be afforded for the mineral if it were found suitable for smelting into aluminum.

The Department of Crown Lands is to receive proposals for the purchase of corundum lands until September 15. The conditions of sale will provide for actual development on a considerable scale, and preference will be given to those tenders who agree to erect the largest and most complete works for treating corundum and the manufacture of articles from it. The indications are that an industry of considerable extent will be established in the Province, with corundum as a basis.

Separate School Board

The regular meeting of the Separate School Board was held Wednesday evening, there being present Chairman Quinlan, and Messrs. McGrath, Foran, Dr. Mohr, Kyle, Hickey, Gosselin and Sheehy. Ven. Archbishop Casey, Lord Sulistrenski, was also present.

Accounts were presented from the Register Co., $1; The Record Co., $1; M. McFadden, $90; A. H. Stratton & Co., $9.57.

The account of A. H. Stratton & Co. was referred to the Finance Committee, the other accounts were ordered to be paid when certified.

Payment of $1.25 made to J. T. O'Connell for repairs was confirmed.

Communications from several teachers to fill the vacancy in the convent school were received.

The Board went into committee of two whole for the purpose of considering the applications, with Mr. McGrath in the chair.

On motion of Messrs. Hickey and Kyle the Property Committee were instructed to have a porch placed at the lobby of the school, and also to get estimates for repairs at the Murray Street school.

The Board then adjourned.

LOST HER BEARING

Perhaps Some Peterborough Citizens Might Help this Lady Out

Miss Jessie McEwan, of Smith's Falls, a partly lady of middle age, without much knowledge of city methods, went to Toronto on Monday night, and was met at the station by a man who told her all the hotels were full, and that he would give her accommodation. She went with him, and took along her baggage. She remained at his house until Wednesday, when she took a car to the Exhibition. Each time the conductor came near her she dropped five cents in the box, and the trip cost her 30 cents. At night she took a car to return, but she got mixed as to her locality, and on alighting from the car could not find her lodging house. After wandering about for some hours she was taken up charge by a policeman, and she slept on the sofa in the station room at police headquarters. She does not know the street or the number of the house where she lived.

The man of the house was a carpenter from Peterboro, who worked on the new court house, and had a nail run into his foot some time ago. His wife's name was Ida, and in front of the house was a large tree, and there was also a tailor's sign across the way.

Inspector Stark has detailed a detective to attend to her case. She left two values at the missing house.

ACCEPTS THE DECISION

Canadian Pacific Railway Accepts the Decision of the Interstate Commission

The date of cheap railway passenger rates are rapidly drawn into a close and our citizens will soon have to pay regular fares. An official circular has just been issued by the Canadian Pacific railway accepting the adverse decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding its claim to differential rates. While regretting that it did not have an opportunity to present its case on this point more fully, the Canadian Pacific receives the verdict of the commission as eminently just, especially in the case of an American body dealing with a foreign corporation. The company states that it will accept without question and will be governed by the decision of the commission, while taking care that it rates will be on the basis of those which prevail by any other route. It also states that the tariff covering traffic affected by the decision restoring anti-helium rates as far as practicable in existing conditions will be filed by the C. P. R. before the 25th inst.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Mr. Wm. Willbrooke, of New York, is in town on a visit to friends.

Mr. P. W. Owens has returned from a visit to New York.

Mr. G. J. Sherry, of Norwood, was in town yesterday on legal business.

Mr. F. M. Thompson, of Montreal, is the guest of Mrs. C. Elliott, 597 Water street.

Mr. R. J. Lane has returned from a trip to the North-West, where he has spent several weeks.

Mr. Fred. Ray has returned after spending a few days in Toronto taking in the Fair.

Miss Kate Barrett left yesterday for an extended visit to her sister in Detroit.

The Messrs. Haultain have returned from visiting friends in Coburg and Port Hope, and are again occupying apartments at the Phelan House.

Lindsay Post: Mr. and Mrs. Fleming, of Peterboro, who have been the guests of Mr. Fred. Taylor, Kent st., have returned home.

Mrs. J. H. Brandon, of Fenelon Falls, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Phoebe, spent a day in Peterboro on their way home from a prolonged visit to Portland, Me., and other watering places on the sea shore.

Dr. Greer and Mr. George Ames are the representatives appointed by Court Stanley to attend the annual meeting of the High Court, A.O.P., for Eastern Ontario, which is in session in Peterboro.

Mr. W. H. Anthony is in Toronto attending the annual banquet of the Red River Expedition Association. Of all the Peterboro contingent of the Expedition, Mr. Anthony is the only local living member.

A representative of The Times happened to drop in to see Mr. Nicholson, the well-known hairdresser of Toronto, whose place of business is 208 College street. Mr. Nicholson was in business Peterboro 20 years ago, and has many friends here, who will be glad to know that he is well and doing splendidly.

Campbell's Cheese Market

Seven factories out of nineteen bargained for the sale of their cheese at the weekly meeting of the Campbellford Cheese Board on Tuesday night, the result no doubt of a decline of one eighth of a cent as compared with the sales two weeks ago. Whitten and Lowry offered 7 7/8 cents and Bailey 7 3/4. At these prices Whitten secured 440 boxes, Lowry 90, and Bailey 30. Altogether 1560 were offered. Six buyers were present. No Belleville quotations were given. The following factories were represented:

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Happenings in Town and District During the Past Twenty-Four Hours

—The hottest day recorded at the Toronto observatory since 1854—41 degrees was last Friday, 2nd inst.

—The name of the new office known as Newcomb's Mills, about midway between Oshawa and Brighton, has been changed to Oland. The new name was adopted on the first of this month.

—Two election trials will be heard in Coburg, first of East Northumberland coming first on Friday, Sept. 23, at 1 o'clock, and that of West Durham on Thursday, Nov. 3, West Durham is the last date on the list.

—It is a long time since the butter-nut trees produced so large a crop as to be found this season. In some localities a bushel can be gathered in a very short time, and both boys and squirrels will store away an abundance for winter use.

—The superannuation fund of the Methodist Church in its satisfactory condition, amounting to $231,000 and invested in excellent securities at an average rate of 5 1/2 per cent. The beneficiaries are 218 clergymen, 186 widows and 90 children.

—A period of fine, warm weather for fall, with a prevalence of westerly and south westerly winds, is what the weather-wise predict for September, October and part of November. Rainfalls will not be frequent, and it may be safe to look forward to a somewhat dry period.

—Lindsay Post: Inspector Errett, of Peterboro, is in town today, his business being to inspect and measure local steam yachts. Lindsay having been made a part of entry by the Dominion Government, steamers and yachts will now have to be registered with Mr. Wm. Lowndsbrough, collector of customs.

—The Toronto Herald: Last week Mr. Joseph Tully, grocer, was compelled to discontinue business in consequence of his inability to meet the demands of creditors who were pressing him for payment, and the stock will be sold and accounts collected for their benefit. Mr. Tully came here from Peterboro about four years ago, and seemed at times to be doing a good trade, but it was insufficient to meet all liabilities, the aggregate of which was amounting to a large sum. He left here last week for the North-West.

Rivals in War

INSURGENT LEADERS HOSTILE TO AMERICANS

Situation is Strained—Gen. Aguinaldo's Forces Patrol the City of Manila and Encourage Lawlessness in Every Direction

Manila, Sept. 9.—The attitude of the Philippine insurgent leaders is daily becoming more dangerous. So open is their opposition to the American authorities that the situation is strained, and reconciliation may be difficult. What makes the situation more troublesome is the undiminished rivalry between the followers of General Aguinaldo, the self-proclaimed dictator, and General Emilio, who covets the honor which Aguinaldo had acquired. General Emilio is in command of the insurgent troops situated south of Manila. He uses them in a way that will be most annoying to Aguinaldo, and at the same time makes every effort to show his utter disregard of the American officials. His forces continue to patrol the city, encouraging lawlessness in every direction. They are constantly annoying the American troops, who are engaged in the difficult task of preserving order.

OPENLY DISPLAYS HOSTILITY. Aguinaldo's course is no less annoying. He no longer attempts to conceal his hostility to the officials who represent the United States, and yesterday issued an order prohibiting his soldiers from entering the American lines. This course was probably deemed necessary in order to prevent them from becoming so well informed toward Americans as to destroy his power by repudiating his leadership. The attitude of the rivals cannot fail in the end to injure the cause of Philippine independence. Certainly it will prevent the presentation of a strong case before the Philippine Commission in behalf of the Philippines.

THOUSANDS OF SICK SOLDIERS. Gen. Porto Rico, Sept. 9.—Illness among the United States troops here is increased. There are now more than 25 per cent. of the men unfit for duty. Within a radius of a few miles from Ponce there are one thousand there are 30 per cent. of the men down with the fever, principally typhoid. The City of Ponce has arrived with medical supplies and 40 nurses. The surgeons here are handling the patients as well as possible. Considering the conditions, the percentage of deaths is small. Convalescents, however, have the climate to contend with, and after the fever has left them the patients fail to recover their strength. They should be sent north at once. Need for transports for convalescents and for hospital ships is imperative. If there is more wet weather the condition will become much worse.

Before his departure General Wilson announced his approval of the findings of the military commission in the trial of the "Cortio firebugs." Jose Burgos and Ramon Vega were each sentenced to five years of hard labor, and Leonardo Colon and Juan Martinez Florinera to two years each at hard labor. The prisoners have been placed in the prison of Ponce.

SEE WANTS POWER. Madrid, Sept. 9.—The following statement has been made by an important Spanish official: "Senor Silveira, the leader of a section of the Conservative party, has been elected president of his party, although he is fully aware of the difficulties of the situation. He is doubtless prompted by the desire to obtain power. We will do all in our power to realize his desire with short delay. The country will then see how soon the man who is now posing as a Liberal will be transformed into a deposit dictator."

General Polavieja has handed a copy of his manifesto to the newspaper men but the censor forbids its publication. He also forbids its transmission by telegraph. It is probable that the general intends to read it to-day in the Cortes, and it is certain the Government will prevent him from so doing and will insist upon a secret mission.

SAGASTA TO RESIGN. Madrid, Sept. 9.—The Liberal to-day again makes the assertion that Premier Sagasta will resign so soon as the Chamber adopts the peace bill.

NO REFUGEE IN FRANCE. Perpignan, France, Sept. 9.—The authorities here are taking steps to drive out the numerous Spanish refugees who have been seeking refuge in France since the recent call to the colors of Spain of one hundred thousand men, of which number twenty thousand are said to be intended for the Philippines. A lively Carlist propaganda is in progress at Cordogne and the Pyrenees, under the auspices of the friars who returned from the Philippine Islands. Well known Carlists have held frequent meetings there.

RESULTS OF CUT RATE WAR. It Has Caused Heavy Losses of Revenue to Trunk Lines. New York, Sept. 9.—The Times says: One of the results of the Canadian Pacific Railway's acquiescence in the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission that that railroad is not entitled to a differential in its relations with American lines, is expected to be a cessation of passenger rate cutting between New York and Chicago. The Canadian Pacific purports to restore to the standard basis on September 22. General passenger agents of the American trunk lines expect to see the through rates from New York to Chicago and St. Paul restored to the regular figures at the same time.

A BOON TO WEAK ROADS. The only excuse that some of the weaker American trunk lines have had for cutting west-bound passenger rates during the past few months has been to "get even with the Canadian Pacific." This warfare, however, has caused heavy losses of revenue to some of the trunk lines, and it has produced some extraordinary situations. The New York Central, Pennsylvania, and Erie, which have maintained rates strictly, have grimly watched the shrinking of their through passenger business, while a "weak line" like the West Shore, quoting a reduced rate of $15 to St. Paul, with a rebate ticket, has more than doubled its through business. The return of the through passenger traffic for the month of July showed that the West Shore road carried 990 passengers from New York to Chicago, and points beyond, while the Pennsylvania line in the same time carried only 556 passengers. Even the New York Central, with its double connections westward, carried only 221 more through passengers than the West Shore.

BIDDING AGAINST THEMSELVES. The recent sharp competition between the New York Central and the West Shore for passenger traffic has caused much surprise, and some amusement, in view of the recent consolidation of the Vanderbilt railroad into the New York Central. The West Shore, which is owned by the New York Central, in one instance, the West Shore cut under the New York Central figure $1 a passenger, when a cut of two cents would have secured the contract and added many dollars to the Vanderbilt revenues.

DEATHS FROM NOSTALGIA. Secretary Alger Says They Occur Among United States Troops. Washington, Sept. 9.—Secretary Alger will leave on a tour of inspection of the army camps throughout the country, going first to Camp Meade, Pa., and thence to Detroit. Now that the active war operations have closed the Secretary feels free to express certain views entertained by the President and himself respecting the plans for the treatment of the soldiers and touching the persons upon whom responsibility should be placed for some matters of complaint. In this connection he says: "The argument that have been ordered mustered out will be maintained. The regiments that have been designated by the President to remain in the service will have to be strictly enforced. The men composing the army will be treated as soldiers. They will be shown every possible consideration, and their health will be preserved. The officers commanding regiments and companies will be held strictly accountable for the sanitary condition of the camps. The great complaint of soldiers is home-sickness, and the great deal of this has been caused by the immoderate publication in the sensational newspapers. Some of it is also chargeable to the fact that the men entered the camp with the expectations that their services would be very short. Every experienced officer knows that a great many of the soldiers are homesick. Following the depression that ensues upon homesickness come other ailments to which the homesick soldier falls an easy victim, and it is impossible to check their course."

RELIABLE AND PERFECT. Diamond Dyes the only Scientifically Prepared Dye-stuffs for Home Use. Expert color scientists have often asserted that the Diamond Dyes are the only perfectly pure home colors produced in the world. The popular Diamond Dyes, have long ago, bunched in the thrones of our country all madder tints, logically combined and dyed as at present done with the Diamond Dyes, simple though the process is, would quite astonish our grandmothers.

Dyes with the grand qualities and extended reputation of the Diamond Dyes are commended themselves to all intelligent and intelligent women. They are the brightest, strongest and fastest and the easiest dyes to use. The Diamond Dyes, like all other perfect preparations are very largely imitations are in every one's wardrobe and adulterated mixtures, rosy and goods and positively dangerous to health.

For your autumn dyeing work use the Diamond Dyes; refuse all other makes that your dealer may ask you to try.

ORILLIA vs. PETERBOROUGH

Yesterday's Lacrosse Match Ends in a Free Fight—Orillia the Aggressor

The Peterboro and Orillia Lacrosse teams met yesterday afternoon on the P.A.A.A. grounds, Ashburnham, to play what was to have been the final match in the North-eastern District series, but which degenerated into a series of rough and tumble fights and concluded with "free for all" with everybody in it.

The Orillia players certainly were the aggressors and it was not until after the Peterboro's had borne all manner of rough usage that they turned on the aggressors from the north and paid them back in their own coin with compound interest.

The Orillia's are noted throughout the entire district for rough play and foul tactics on the field, but yesterday they eclipsed all previous records and earned a name that will haunt the memory of every spectator who witnessed the game until his dying day.

When the grand finale occurred the game stood 2-2 in Orillia's favor, with Peterboro raining shot after shot on their goal and everything coming our way. The Orillia's were conscious of their position. Defeat stared them in the face and to avoid this they provoked quarrels which finally resulted in the game being abandoned.

Referee Jackson, as soon as comparative order was restored, called on the teams to proceed with the match. Peterboro lined up but Orillia wouldn't face the music and the match was accordingly awarded to Peterboro.

The teams were comprised as follows: Orillia—Hanley, goal; O'Connor, point; Churchill, 1st defense; Dunn, 2nd; Thompson, 3rd; Boyd, centre; Curran, 3rd home; Wilkinson, 2nd; Armstrong, 1st; Grant, outside; Watson, inside. Peterboro—Dobbing, goal; Lynch, point; Brown, cover; Glover, 1st defense; McCale, 2nd; Melchough, 3rd; King, centre; Hogarth, 3rd home; McCale, 2nd; Phelan, 1st; Lipsett, outside; Mooney, inside; Dolan, field captain; Riley, umpire.

Referee, Mr. Jackson, Seaforth.

BEFORE JUDGE WELLER

The 5th Batt. Band and Mr. F. W. Miller in the Division Court Yesterday

The 5th Batt. Band and Mr. F. W. Miller were in the Division Court yesterday, before His Honor Judge Weller.

Mr. Miller claimed a large portion of the money paid the band by the town for playing in the park during the summer months. The members of the band, while considering Mr. Miller's demands exorbitant, rather than have the matter go to the court, offered to settle. Mr. Miller refused the band's offer and the matter went to court.

The case occupied nearly half the day and Mr. Miller got judgment against the treasurer of the band for some $83—he to pay six-sevenths of the costs and the band one-seventh. The amount Mr. Miller recovered is less than the sum tendered him by the band in settlement some weeks ago.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Mr. A. J. Waldull, of Toronto, was in town yesterday.

Mr. H. S. Ferguson, of Stirling, was in town yesterday.

Mr. E. Cope and, of Toronto, was in town yesterday.

Mr. John White, Campbellford, was in town yesterday.

Mr. G. L. Dixon, of the firm of Dixon Bros., was in town yesterday.

Mr. Wm. Quinn, manager of the Bell Telephone Co., for Lindsay, was in town yesterday.

Mr. A. C. Ardah, of the Bank of Toronto, Toronto, has been placed on the list of the Peterboro trustees.

Mr. Jas. Kelley, of Buffalo, formerly of Peterboro, is in town on a visit to his parents, Rubidge st.

Mr. John Thorne, of Bay city, Mich., an old Peterboro boy, is spending a vacation in town with his friends.

Lindsay Post—Mr. Thos. Parrington and daughter, Miss Ellen, of Cambridge, passed through town to-day on their way to visit Mount Pleasant and Peterboro friends.

Norwood Man Married at Orillia

Orillia News-Letter.—A very pretty wedding took place Wednesday morning at the residence of Mr. John Hammond, Coldwater street, when his second daughter, Miss Maud Munnich, was united in holy wedlock to Mr. William Watson, of Norwood.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Canon Geesey, rector of St. James' Ave. church, who looked charming in a boat white blue travelling suit, was attended by Miss Maud Jones, of Kansas, while Mr. Charles Hammond, brother of the bride, supported the groom.

The hospitality of the groom was evidenced by the many handsome and costly presents he was the recipient of from his numerous friends in town and at Toronto, where she has resided for some years, among them being a handsome silver lamp from the employees of the mint department of the P. & O. Co. and also a handsome form in silver, also from Toronto.

The happy couple after a honeymoon in Toronto and Buffalo will reside in Norwood.

Pete bore People in Trouble

1 Toronto News.—There were several Exhibition visitors in trouble. Arthur Kingston and Chas. Rabby, from Peterboro, have been arrested for walking on the Grand Trunk tracks. They explained that at Peterboro it was no harm to walk on the railway tracks. Their tickets were good until next Monday, and a fine of $1 and costs for four days was imposed.

John Thompson, alias of Peterboro, was sadly disfigured. One eye was lost and his expression was dejected. His cash had run out, and when he undertook to buy some more he was arrested. He was allowed to go home.

A Cheap Trip

Arrangements have been made by which dinner will be supplied passengers on the City of Peterboro at Jubilee Point, Core's Landing or Idyl Wyld. Boat leaves Peterboro daily at 9 a.m. Fare for return trip to any of the above points, including dinner, 25 cents.

The Weight No Criterion.

It is impossible to estimate the weight of the food required by a comparison with the weight of the animal. The airy tests at Chicago demonstrated that we did not affect the quantity of food consumed. Some of the Jerseys ate more food than the short horns, although the latter were more larger in size.

Dr. H. H. Henshaw, who is considered one of the greatest of canine scientists, claims that the bulldog's brain is relatively larger than that of the spaniel, which dog is generally considered to be the most intelligent of the canine race, while the bulldog's affection is never to be doubted.—Quoting

Free Medical Advice

You need a doctor many times when you don't call one. You suffer pain in fifty ways and yet you don't call the doctor, because you hope that the pain "will go away after a while." And, too, you know by experience, that that first visit of the doctor is generally followed by many others, with the inevitable consequence of a big bill "for professional services." You don't know what to do for yourself or what to take. But suppose that you could get free, absolutely free, the advice of one of the most in the United States! You can. The physician is right here. He has an office in the building, he has a staff of correspondents to assist him, and anyone and everyone, who needs medical advice is invited to write to him. If it's baby's health or mother's or the health of any member of the family you may write about it, sure of a careful reading of your letter, sure of a conscientious diagnosis of your case.

Eminent Physicians

Sure of a Cure

If cure is possible. Every letter will be held as a strictly confidential communication. Remember these facts.

We offer you medical advice from one of the most eminent practitioners in the United States, whether our medicines suit your particular case or not. We offer you this advice at the cost of the two cent stamp which it will take to bring your letter to our office. Address: The Medical Department, Dr. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 10, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Police Court.
A charge of using abusive language was enlarged at yesterday's morning's Police Court until next Tuesday.

Two Fire Alarms.
The Fire Brigade were called out twice yesterday evening. The first run was to the gas house and the second to the residence of Mr. J. Hay's on McDonald st. In neither case was it found necessary to turn on the water. The damage was trifling.

No Band Concert.
The rain last night prevented the 57th Batt. Band from giving their usual weekly concert in Victoria Park. The boys have had a steady summer's park playing—last night and the Friday night previous being the only nights missed during the entire season.

New Books.
The following new books have been placed upon the shelves at the Public Library—
The Final War, by Tracy
The Crucifixion of P. Strong, Sheldon
The Queen's Cup, by Henry
John of Strathmore, by Chetwood
Rose a Charlotte, by Sanders Bar Ladyship's Elephant, by Wells Torn Sail, by Haine Materfamilias, by Cambridge
John Marmaduke, by Church
Black Cat, vols. 3 and 4.

The Town Stone Crusher.
The town stone crusher, manufactured by the Wm. Hamilton Mfg. Co., has been forwarded from the works and set up on the lot owned by Messrs. Chubb and Rush, between Charlotte and King streets, near the creek. Employees of the Light and Power Co. were yesterday engaged in placing the wires and making connections for the transmission of electric power to the machine and it is expected that it will be set at work in the course of a few days.

Down the River.
Say, the summer is passing and you have not been down the river for the longest mile in this province. Or, perhaps, you have been down and promised yourself the sail again. Well remember that Capt. Martin is again in charge of the North Star, and that this popular steamer will run daily trips to Rice Lake points. The steamer will leave the wharf at 8.15 a.m. each day except Saturday, and on Saturday she leaves at two o'clock in the afternoon. The best of attention is received on the North Star.

Rugby Football Club.
The local Rugby Football Club has been reorganized, with the following officers:

All of which is respectfully submitted.
H. DENNE, Chairman.

The report was adopted.
On motion of Councillor Denne, the town treasurer was instructed to pay Mr. S. Belcher, town engineer, $105 on account.

LEGAL.

The Legal Committee presented the following report:

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:
Gentlemen,—Your Legal Committee beg leave to report as follows:

1. Your Committee recommend that a cheque for $15 be issued to Messrs. Dennistoun, Peck & Stevenson to settle the claim of Mrs. Brough for an accident on Water street at the post-office.
2. Your Committee also recommend that the Clerk be instructed to write to the Grand Trunk Railway Company and notify the company to fence on both sides of their line passing through Lot 11 south of Towne and west of George streets.
3. Your Committee instructed the Town Solicitor to take such steps as are necessary to protect the river (the above) crossed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that the railway company would not obtain the ownership by right of possession.

All of which is respectfully submitted.
J. B. McWILLIAMS, Chairman.

The report was adopted.
COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The Committee of the Whole Council presented the following report:

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:
Gentlemen,—Your Committee of the Whole Council beg leave to report as follows:

1. That your Committee, after having received offers from different firms and heard their representatives, ordered a rock crusher from the Wm. Hamilton Co., at $125. The crusher is to be a No. 5 Blake crusher, unmounted, 24 feet elevators, with screens and everything complete, and to be tested before being accepted.
2. We also recommend that the Street and Bridge Committee be authorized to ask for tenders for bridges over the creek on Sherbrooke, Dithousie, Denegal and Smith streets.
3. We further recommend that the sidewalk on the north side of Charlotte street from George to Aylmer streets be the only granite sidewalk constructed this fall.

in now under contract, and that the work of construction it is given to Messrs. Dolan & Sons provided they can complete it early enough this fall, and if they cannot that it be left over until next year.

4. That the granite sidewalk on George street from King street to the C.P.R. station be made eight feet wide. All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. M. WHITE, Chairman.

The report was adopted.
Councillor McWilliams stated that he understood that wooden abutments were to be used in the construction of the new bridge. He considered it better to have permanent bridges, and he decided to favor concrete piers. These would prove more durable and satisfactory in every way. Councillors Dawson and Meldrum agreed with Councillor McWilliams that it would be nonsense to erect wooden abutments for iron bridges. Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Dawson, that town engineer be instructed to prepare plans and specifications for stone and concrete abutments for the new bridge, and that tenders be notified of this amendment.—Carried.

Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Dawson, that town engineer be instructed to prepare plans and specifications for stone and concrete abutments for the new bridge, and that tenders be notified of this amendment.—Carried.

Councillor W. H. White moved, seconded by Councillor Robertson, that bridges be constructed the full width of the street.

Councillor White contended that the ratepayers did not vote money to build the full length of the street.

The Mayor stated that the width of the bridges had not yet been decided upon, and as it was an open question he thought for the present it would be advisable not to press the question. The matter could be settled at Monday night's meeting of the Council.

Councillor White, in view of the Mayor's explanation, agreed to let the motion stand.

FIRE, WATER AND LIGHT.

The Fire Water and Light Committee presented the following report:

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:
Gentlemen,—Your Fire, Water and Light Committee beg leave to report and recommend the following rules for the regulation of the fire hall:

1. James English, chief grabberman, and in charge of the fire hall by order of the Council. He will, therefore, be held responsible for all work being properly and promptly done, for the hose being in good order, for the bell, engine, waggons and other appliances being kept clean and in good order.
2. The drivers are subject to the orders of the chief grabberman while on duty at the hall. They are, therefore, required to carry out his instructions promptly and thoroughly, and any disobedience or neglect must be at once reported by him to the Chief Engineer or Assistant Chief.
3. The waggons must be cleaned immediately after returning from a fire, if in the daytime, and if at night they must be cleaned first thing in the morning.
4. The chief grabberman must ensure that the feed for the horses, immediately before plying and carry all keys used in connection with the hall.
5. The drivers on duty in the hall must have the managers filled with hay when the horses at work outside are brought in.
6. The stable and hall must be cleaned every morning before nine o'clock.
7. The horses in the stable must be drilled each morning at nine o'clock. The harness must be buckled on at each drill.
8. The chief grabberman must attend each fire and attend to the hose, engine and other appliances in charge.
9. The chief grabberman must be continuously on duty at the hall, unless he receives leave of absence from the Chairman of the Committee.
10. The chief grabberman shall have charge of the order of the hall, must keep it clean, inside and out, change the water in the boiler at least every two weeks, and keep it in first-class order in all respects. Every two weeks he shall make a written report of the condition of the engine to the Chairman of the Council.
11. The driver on duty at the hall in the morning shall go to dinner at 11.30 o'clock and return at 12.30 o'clock. The chief grabberman shall go to dinner at 12.30 o'clock, and the driver who was on outside duty in the morning shall go at 12 o'clock.
12. The front doors of the hall shall be kept open from 9 a.m. till 9 p.m. on each day from May 1st to October 1st.
13. After 9 o'clock each day the chief grabberman and driver on duty at the hall shall wear parade uniform.
14. The Chief Engineer shall have power to suspend the chief grabberman or driver for any dereliction of the rules, or neglect of duty, and he shall have authority to fill temporarily the place or places so made vacant, and he shall report such suspension on the day it is made to the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee. The Chairman shall summon a meeting of the Committee to receive and deal with the report.
15. The Chief Engineer shall make a written report to the Chairman of the Committee every two weeks as to the condition of the hall, stable and apparatus.
16. Your Committee also recommend that these rules, and the whole regulations and the place or places so made vacant, and he shall report such suspension on the day it is made to the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee. The Chairman shall summon a meeting of the Committee to receive and deal with the report.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. M. WHITE, Chairman.

The report was adopted.

Councillor J. M. White moved, seconded by Councillor Allen, that the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee be authorized to procure the necessary tools for the fire hall for repairing hose.—Carried.

SEWERAGE.

The Sewerage Committee presented the following report:

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:
Gentlemen,—Your Sewerage Committee beg leave to report as follows:

from Charlotte to Simcoe streets, McDowell street from Water to Jackson streets, and Belmont avenue from Homewood avenue to Hunter street. We found these petitions sufficiently signed and recommended that they be granted.

We also instructed the Town Engineer to take the necessary levels and to prepare plans and specifications for the construction of these sewers. All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. H. MELDRUM, Acting Chairman.

The report was adopted.
Councillor McWilliams stated that at the council meeting on Tuesday evening he had drawn the attention of the councillors present to a grave injustice the working men of the town were laboring under. Corporation contracts were let without the slightest provision being made to guarantee the interests of the laboring man, and this state of affairs should be remedied. He had taken the liberty of writing the City Engineers of London, Toronto and Hamilton, with a view to ascertaining the practice of these cities in this respect, and in each instance found from the information received that the laboring men in those places were protected by a clause in the specifications securing them a tested rate per day. He then quoted the protecting clauses in use in those cities, and said that he could see no reason why the laboring men of Peterboro should not be placed on an equal footing with their brethren in the cities. In the present contract for granite walks workmen were receiving $1 dollar a day, while the corporation laborer—perhaps working on the same block—received $1.25. The Corporation should be protected from the rapacity of greedy contractors, and he was prepared to do his utmost to gain this end.

Councillor Dawson expressed himself as being in favor of the proposal. He also believed that the working day should be reduced to nine hours.

After some further discussion it was moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Dawson, that the specifications for the additional sewers to be constructed, contain a clause making it compulsory for the contractors to pay their laborers $1.25 for a nine-hour day, and that not more than six months be employed on corporation works.—Carried.

The motion was passed with the understanding that the opinion of the town solicitor be secured as to its legality.

BY-LAWS.

Councillor Dawson introduced a by-law to prevent the discharge of water from buildings on the streets. It received its several readings and was passed.

Councillor J. M. White introduced a by-law providing for a $200 grant to the West Peterboro Agricultural Society, which received its several readings and was passed.

RESOLUTIONS.

Moved by Councillor Dawson, seconded by Councillor Denne, that Mr. Redmond's taxes be remitted.—Carried.

Moved by Councillor Allen, that a culvert be constructed on Water street, opposite Mr. Green's residence, to carry off the surface water, and that the earth, etc., on the street east of the National Hotel be levelled.—Carried.

Councillor McWilliams drew attention to the expenditure of a $125 per week for keeping the market square clean and thought that this amount might be saved if the merchants on the square conformed with the provisions of the by-law regarding the disposal of refuse, etc.

Councillor Denne stated that this expenditure was occasioned by farmers feeding their horses on the market square.

Councillor McWilliams referred to a newspaper controversy in reference to the presentation of the Royal Humane Society Medal to Mr. George Wallace and explained his connection therewith. The Mayor at first wished the presentation to be deferred, but after he (Mr. McWilliams) had stated the circumstances the Mayor had agreed to make the presentation.

The Mayor said that Councillor McWilliams' statement was correct, and that he had intended making the presentation at the council meeting on Tuesday evening last, but as a quorum failed to materialize the affair had been deferred off.

On motion of Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor J. M. White, it was decided to make the presentation at the next regular meeting of the Council.

After the Street and Bridge Committee had been instructed to make a few minor street repairs the Council adjourned.

AN INDIAN CRADLE SONG.

Swing thee low in thy cradle soft,
Deep in the dusky wood!
Swing thee low and swing aloft—
Sleep as a papoose should,
For safe in your little birchen nest
Quiet will come and peace and rest,
If the little papoose is good.

The coyote howls on the prairie cold,
And the owl hoots in the tree,
And the big moon shines on the little child
As it slumbers peacefully.
So swing thee high in thy little nest
And swing thee low and take the rest
That the night wind brings to thee!

Father lies on the fragrant ground,
Dreaming of hunt and fight,
And the pine leaves rustle with mournful
sound.
All through the solemn night:
But the little papoose in his birchen nest
Is swinging low as he takes his rest.
Till the sun brings the morning light.

THE DERELICT.

BY CHARLES R. LEWIS.

I was second mate of the American brig Ruby, bound from Java to New York, and all had gone well with us for a fortnight, when accident brought about a curious adventure. Just as night was closing down, with the brig sailing along on an even keel and the breeze steady, I swung myself upon the rail to get a look at what seemed to be a raft floating past us. I may have been overcareless or a rope may have given way, but of a sudden I found myself in the water. The man at the wheel witnessed my mishap and gave the alarm and threw me the life preserver always ready for such an emergency, and I had no doubt of being picked up within ten minutes. I had seized the float when down thundered a black squall from out of the west, and next moment it was as dark as midnight and the sea all in a chop. I felt that it was all over with me then. The men would be lucky to bring the brig through the fierce squall without thinking of me. Indeed, if she had had 100 men on board instead of 12, they would not have dared to lower a boat. I got just one glimpse of the craft as she shot away into the darkness and then began to work to get the life preserver under my arms. I was buffeted and knocked about in the most confusing manner, and had the squall lasted five minutes longer I should have been drowned on the surface. It passed away as suddenly as it came, and ten minutes later the sea had calmed down, and I was floating with my head well out of the water.

I had gone overboard at about 7 o'clock in the evening. For the first three hours my hopes and fears made me alert, but by and by I felt a dull languor and was only half conscious of what was going on. An hour after midnight I was suddenly aroused from what seemed to be a troubled dream. I was bumping against something hard, and my first idea was that I had been cast ashore. It took me several minutes to shake myself together and make out that I was alongside the hull of a vessel. It was hard to credit the fact, but fact it was, and when I realized it I had scarcely more to do than lift up my hands and seize the low rail and draw myself inboard. I had found a derelict brig.
Both masts were gone close to the deck, much of her bulwarks swept away, and I knew by the feel of her that she was waterlogged. I took one glance over her and no more, but dumped myself down on the deck and was asleep in five seconds. When I opened my eyes, the sun was an hour high, and a big albatross was poised directly above me and not 50 feet high. It did not take me long to master the details of the wreck.
In the first place, she was loaded with Australian redwood and could not sink beyond a certain point; next, she had been floating about for months and months. There was some wreckage on her decks, but masts and yards and booms had gone clear off her as they fell. She had settled down until her scupper holes were only a few inches above water, but owing to the buoyant cargo she could not sink deeper.
As a sailor I made her out to be a French craft, and later on I discovered that she was the Maria of Brest. She was a small craft, carrying a crew of eight or nine men, and was a fore-castle ship instead of having a deckhouse for the men. The cabin or cook's galley had gone overboard with the rest, but the doors of the cabin and the scuttle to the fore-castle were tightly closed. The brig had been wrecked aloft in squall or gale and had at the same time sprung a leak. Whether her crew had been washed overboard or taken to the boats there was no means of telling until I had made an investigation below.

The first thing was to get something to eat and drink. After a few minutes' work I broke open the cabin doors and got into the pantry. There was wine in plenty, as might have been expected, and I soon came across some meat and biscuit in tins. I wanted water, but there was none to be had, and so, taking what I could lay hands on, I went on deck and made a fair meal. When this had been concluded, I returned to the cabin for an overhaul. All the charts and nautical instruments were there, nor had any of the spare clothing of captain or mates been taken away. I found the logbook, and though I could not read French I made out the latitude and longitude last recorded. As near as I could figure it out the brig was then midway between Australia and the Cape, and the date was nearly seven months old. She had drifted to every point of the compass, but must have drifted nearly 2,000 miles to the north to reach the spot where I found her. It was noon before I began an examination of the lazarette to see how I should fare for provisions. I found flour, wine, table water, preserves, boxes of blacuit, choice bacon, codfish and other articles in liberal quantity—enough to last one man for months. Forward of the cabin
I found a storehouse, in which were several barrels of beef and pork, with four barrels of coarse flour, dried fish, beans, coffee, tea and other articles of food for the men. Forward of this were the water casks, a dozen or more, and all full. When I came to examine the fore-castle, I found boots, slippers, sea-vesters and other belongings of the crew, to prove that they had not gone away in the boats. Indeed I was sure before I had half concluded my investigation that every man had perished when the brig was wrecked. It was night before I had finished, and I tum-bled into the captain's berth and never slept more soundly. You may think it queer that during the day I had carefully glanced around the horizon and given no thought to rescue, and that I went to bed with a contented mind, but sailors are prone to take luck as it comes, good or bad. I had made a miraculous escape and was fairly safe on the wreck, and there was nothing to worry over if not taken off for weeks. Interested as I was in overhauling the stranger, I would not have tossed up a penny to be taken off by a passing vessel.

When morning came again I made a more thorough investigation of the cabin. In rear of the captain's stateroom I chanced upon a closet which had escaped me the day before, and here I made a great find. There was about $1,000 in French gold and notes, $1-300 in English goldpieces and exactly $7,000 in goldpieces just struck off at the Australian mints. The money was in two tin boxes, but whether it belonged to the ship, her captain or to other people I could not determine. It was a big fortune to a poor sailor, and I remember that I acted very foolishly over the find. I counted it over and over again, and when I at last realized that I was rich I rushed on deck, with a wild hope of seeing a mail close at hand.
But for the money I believe that the long days and nights which followed would have been rather contentful for me, isolated as the situation was. I had plenty to eat and drink, there was nothing to break my sleep, the wreck might drive where she would, but there was no danger of her going down. The discovery of the money was followed by a hope of rescue, and this again by worry and anxiety. I wanted to go ashore to enjoy my wealth. I feared that when rescue did come I should be robbed. I conjured up a thousand senseless fears, and the upshot was anything but beneficial. I have spoken of the general situation in a careless way. As a matter of fact, being a navigator, I took observations regularly when the weather permitted and picked off the drift of the wreck on the chart. On the average the weather was fine, but there were days and nights when gale and sea tum-bled the waterlogged craft about until only a sailor could have lived through it. Instead of lifting her the waves ran over her, and at such times the decks were two feet under water and the cabin was flooded. The cargo was afloat with the water in the hold, and as the wreck rolled and pitched the timbers rubbed together and produced noises which would have frightened landmen into fits.

I kept an accurate reckoning, and I had been on the wreck just 49 days when I caught sight of my first sail.
No doubt ships had passed and repassed me by day and night, but I could set no signal by day and from the first I slept all through the night. This sail was discovered early one morning, coming up from the south, and her course was such that she must see me. I had put the money into bags and the bags into bundles of clothing in view of a rescue, and therefore had nothing to do but wait. The stranger, which proved to be an English merchantman bound for India, but considerably off her course, was within four miles of me and had set a signal to gladden my heart when a big whale suddenly broke water close to the wreck. He was followed half a minute later by a second, which attacked him with great fury. The monsters put up a terrific battle, lashing and biting each other and kicking up a sea like a gale of wind. They at first drew away from me, but after a few minutes made a circle which brought them back.
What I had feared from the first came to pass after a quarter of an hour. Half blinded by pain and fury, or feeling itself overmatched and desirous of getting away, one of the whales suddenly whirled about and came for the wreck head on. He was fully 80 feet long, and he came like a moving mountain. I made sure of my hold as I saw him coming, but he struck the wreck on her port side with such force that I was thrown across the deck and into the sea beyond.
I heard the crash of planks and timbers, was tossed about by the waves, rubbed against the whale as he sounded and reached the surface to find the wreck a hull no longer. It was simply a heap of floating debris. The strange ship drew nearer, lowered a boat, and I was picked up as I clung to a plank. The money was gone, all else but the timbers which composed the cargo had disappeared, and my adventure, surprising as it had begun, had ended in a manner strange enough to satisfy even the most imaginative novelist. I was carried to India by the rescuing ship, and I know that the French consul at Calcutta set inquiries on foot regarding the fate of the crew of the Maria. What they amounted to I never learned, but have always felt satisfied that all perished when their craft was dismasted. But for the fight between the whales I believe the brig could have been pumped out and sailed into port, but fortune is a jade who robs Jack Tar far oftener than she smiles upon him.

DEATHS FROM NOSTALGIA

Secretary Alger Says They Occur Among Soldiers in France

Washington, Sept. 9.—Secretary Alger will leave on a tour of inspection of the army camps throughout the country, going first to camp Meade, Pa., and thence to Detroit. Now that the active war operations have closed the Secretary feels free to express certain views entertained by the President and himself respecting the plans for the treatment of the soldiers and touching the persons upon whom responsibility should be placed for some of the complaints. In this connection he says: "The argument that have been ordered mustered out will be mustered out. The regiments that have been designated by the President to remain in the service will have to remain. As soon as we have mustered out 100,000 more or less, we must reorganize the army—every brigade, division and corps—and put them into comfortable camps until such of them as are needed are needed as with-drawn from service in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. In these camps with the experience of the past to guide us, sanitary conditions will be strictly enforced. The men composing the army will be treated as soldiers. They will be shown every possible consideration and their health will be preserved. The officers commanding regiments and companies will be held strictly accountable for the sanitary condition of the camps. The great complaint of soldiers is homesickness, and the great deal of this has been caused by the inconsiderate publication in the sensational newspapers. Some of it is also due to the fact that the men have been kept in the camps with the expectation that their services would be very short. Every experienced officer knows that a great many men die of homesickness. Following the depression that came upon homesickness, the soldier's mind is so affected that the best soldier falls in a way victim, and it is impossible to check their course."

RESULTS OF CUT RATE WAR

It Has Caused Heavy Losses of Revenue to Truck Lines

New York, Sept. 9.—The Times says. One of the results of the Canadian Pacific Railway's acquiescence in the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission that that railroad is not entitled to a differential in its rates with American lines, is expected to be a cessation of passenger rate cutting between New York and Chicago. The Canadian Pacific purposes to restore rates to the standard basis on September 23. General passenger agents of the American trunk lines expect to see the through rates from New York to Chicago and St. Paul restored to the regular figures at the same time.

A BLOW TO WEAK ROADS.

The only excuse that some of the weak American trunk lines have had for cutting west-bound passenger rates during the past few months has been "get even with the Canadian Pacific." This warfare, however, has caused heavy losses of revenue to some of the trunk lines, and it has produced extraordinary situations. The New York Central, Pennsylvania, and Erie, which have maintained rates strictly, have grimly watched the shrinking of their through passenger business, while the "weak line" like the West Shore, quoting a reduced rate of $15 to St. Paul, with a rebate Chicago, has more than doubled its through passenger traffic for the month of July. The West Shore road carried 100,000 passengers from New York to Chicago, and points beyond, while the Pennsylvania line in the same time carried only 655 passengers. Even the New York Central, with its double connections westward, carried only 221 more through passengers than the West Shore.

BIDDING AGAINST THEMSELVES.

The recent sharp competition between the New York Central and the West Shore for passenger traffic has caused much surprise, and some amusement, in view of the recent consolidation of the Vanderbilt railroad interests. The West Shore is practically owned by the New York Central, and in one instance, the West Shore cut the New York Central figure $1 a passenger, when a cut of two cents would have secured the contract and added many dollars to the Vanderbilt revenues.

Repellents from the Milk

One of the troubles of the dairy farm, and, in fact, at the creameries and the factories, says Mr. W. H. Potts, is the ever present nuisance, the fly, and this is more accentuated during the summer months. Flies will get into the milk buckets and milk cans if special precautions are not adopted to exclude them. At the creameries and factories the receiving vat stands open and affords ample opportunities for flies to perpetrate mischief. With our advanced knowledge of dairy and other bacteriology we are not aware that this element forms a distinct menace to the purity of our dairy products. Dr. Schultz, the eminent bacteriologist of Berlin, has submitted to a series of most careful and conscientious examinations, and his results and conclusions are simply surprising. The fly's foot is shaped like the mouth of a trumpet. The circular portion secures a grip on a flattened surface. The vacuum being complete, sucking the trumpet-shaped foot is hollow. The fly is thus secured, and a fly can walk up a perpendicular pane of glass as readily as it can travel over one lying horizontal. In the hollow portion of the trumpet-shaped foot is a space which forms a reservoir for bacterial life. The doctor found microbes in the feet of about 30 per cent of flies caught in the country and in the city about 40 per cent. In the hollow of one foot alone he discovered over 100 microbes. It is known to all how flies will walk over and revel in filth, dirt, dead flesh and other vile matter. The fly retains the objectionable germ life, which is the cause of putrefaction. On getting into the milk they convey to or inoculate it with a reservoir for bacterial life, which affects a flavor and aroma detrimental. We should guard against this evil and freely recognize the importance of keeping the flies out of the milk or cream.—Exchange.

BURGLARY TRIP THROUGH ESSA

Sensational Story of Fourteen Year Old Lily Ferrier

Barrie, Ont., Sept. 9.—This morning in the Police Court Lily Ferrier, aged fourteen years, narrated a sensational account of two night's burglary trip through Essa with John Donaldson, who has been her sweetheart since July 12. She told how at eight farm houses in the vicinity of Ivy she had held a horse and wagon at the midnight hour while Donaldson went in and stole preserves, pork, butter, bread, plums, etc., all of which had been stored at James Handy's, where Lily's mother is housekeeper. At the last of the 8 houses she said Mr. Donaldson skipped out, being frightened away by an approaching rig, which contained Constable Reid, of Ivy, and two men in pursuit of the thieves.

DONALDSON AT LARGE.

They at once arrested the girl, and took charge of the load of stolen goods, she was put in goal here and this morning demanded for a week for sentence, which the magistrate informed her would be severe. The girl's mother pleaded guilty to having stolen goods, and knowing there were stolen goods, and was also remanded for a week. Donaldson, who is a Central Prison bird, and has an unenviable record, has not yet been arrested. Handy, who owned the horse and rig, and in whose house the goods were found, was sent up for trial.

Bad Flavors in Milk

Under the auspices of the Stewartry Dairy Association Mr. Kirk, lecturer in charge, delivered a notable lecture on "Bad Flavors in Milk," at the North British Agricultural. The main argument of the lecture was that bad flavors in milk were the inevitable results of dirt which had been introduced into the milk either directly through a want of sufficient cleanliness in handling the milk or indirectly through the cows drinking dirty water or eating contaminated food. Dirty buildings, dirty udders, dirty milkers, dirty dishes, dirty dishevels and dirty water supplies, argued Mr. Kirk, were the causes which produced a prolific crop of bad flavors in cheese. Flavors in milk, whether good or bad, were living flavors, as they were due to bacterial organisms. Fifth of any sort was the one and only breeding ground of the harmful bacteria producing bad flavors in milk or cheese, as to the bacteria, when once they had got an entrance into a medium so favorable for their development as milk, multiplied with inconceivable rapidity it follows that the slightest speck of filth introduced into milk will inevitably mean the introduction of a rapidly increasing colony of infective noxious germs.

Cure of Consumption

Dr. H. P. Bryce, secretary of the Provincial Board of Health, has received from the officials of the International Conference of State Boards of Health, important recommendations having in view the prevention of consumption, adopted at a recent meeting in Detroit, which recommendations he is sending to the Minister of Education and the local Boards of Health throughout Ontario. The recommendations are—1. Having all schools and colleges placed under medical supervision, with regard to ventilation, overcrowding and over-pressure in studies. 2. Having all hotel, boarding houses, and workshops where consumptives may be employed placed under medical supervision and inspection. 3. Urging all state legislatures to devote philanthropy in the establishment of homes or sanitariums in some portion of their districts.

Ottawa College and Ed Glendon

Ottawa, Sept. 9.—It is now stated that Ottawa College's big scrimmage, which has won fame on the football field for many seasons, will remain intact this year. It is reported that Glendon, who finished his college course last spring and was expected to be absent from the team this fall, will not be able to withstand the excitement of the contests for "gridiron" and will return for the football season. It is thought that Glendon's return will be an extra inducement to Eddie Gleason to stay and captain the College team if he is reinstated, and every effort will be made with this end in view. It is something more apparent every day that this year's college team will be one of the strongest that ever appeared in the garnet and gray uniform.

As a Cure for Stammering

Alphonse, Sept. 9.—John Clark, of Prague, has invented what is acknowledged to be an important improvement in the form of an electrical apparatus for railways. The invention causes the ringing of an automatic electric bell attached to the engine when danger is threatened by an approaching or passing train. The discovery renders certain signal stations unnecessary, and notifies danger to the engine driver without obliging him to attend to signals while driving. The cost of fixing and maintaining the invention is insignificant.

LONDONER IN HAVANA

The New York Sun is anything but a faithful sheet, according to the testimony of Mr. Otto Brenner, of the firm of Valence & Co., cigar manufacturers, who returned to London Monday last from Cuba where he has been purchasing Havana tobacco for that great Canadian product, the Valence cigar. The Sun some time ago went out of its way to say that when General Panto left Havana for New York the other day, he did so in the most quiet manner he knew how, taking with him about a million dollars or so of some one else's money. Now, Mr. Brenner, who was in Havana when Gen. Panto left, and was one of the party which witnessed his departure, says the well-known Spanish officer in Havana, including Captain-General Blanco, were at the quay to wish him bon voyage; and if the worthy General who failed to connect at Santiago, was engaged in the task of carrying away money which did not belong to him, he certainly chose a very bare-faced method of doing it.

These Spanish officers, by the way, are not, in Mr. Brenner's opinion, the inhuman monsters the yellow press of the great American nation has pictured. They are—and Mr. Brenner has seen nearly all of them—affable, kindhearted, and in every respect gentlemen; and in a mixed party it would be hard to distinguish them from so many outlandish Englishmen. Mr. Brenner and General Panto were passengers in the same steamer from Havana to New York, and during the passage the former had an opportunity to form a very high estimate of the Spaniard as a man.

Mr. Brenner's trip from Key West to Cuba is one he will not soon forget. It was made in a tug boat. Upon his arrival at Key West he found the place in the midst of a yellow fever scare; all regular steamers to Cuba had been stopped; the only way to get across was by chartering a tug boat, an expedient he lost no time in employing.

In Havana everything is quiet. The city is waiting for the arrival of the steamer which is to decide the fate of Cuba. Trade in the city is entirely local, no outside supplies having arrived since the blockade was lifted. Within the city's fortifications, 40,000 Spanish soldiers are hanging about eating their heads off, smoking cigars and taking life easy as only Spaniards know how. Speaking of these soldiers, Mr. Brenner says he believes the Americans could never have taken Havana; the vast fortifications surrounding the city are well-nigh impregnable, and defended by nearly 100,000 men, their capture would have meant a loss of life the contemplation of which makes one sick with horror.

Havana has not yet recovered entirely from the effect of the blockade. When Mr. Brenner reached the city, eggs were 30 cents each and bread was $2.50 a loaf. The wealthier classes of course did not feel the evil effects of the line that Admiral Sampson drew so tightly about the town; but among the lower classes the suffering must have been acute. Indeed, the condition of the country outside of the city is pitiable. Mr. Brenner made one or two trips toward the interior, and was shocked with the evidences of misery and desolation that met his eyes. The conclusion he reached is that it will be seven years at least before prosperity returns to the unhappy island. Not a yoke of oxen, without which no ground can be broken for crops, exists in the island; they have all been seized by the Spanish soldiers for food, and the condition of the poor Cubans is miserable in the extreme. What the result of this wide spread devastation will be is hard to predict. The Spaniards in Havana, one and all, desire annexation and the wealthier classes of the Cubans are perhaps equally eager for union which would mean prosperity to the island. What the masses think of it, time will show.

Mr. Brenner says the import and export duty of 20 per cent on tobacco imposed by the Spaniards is still in evidence. It had no effect on Mr. Brenner, however, because he went to Havana for tobacco and tobacco he had to have.

The twisted steel skeleton of the Maine still rears itself above the water in Havana harbor; but there are now other steel skeletons on the sea bottom to keep it company.

That the music comes from a Graphophone cylinder is a mystery that adds much to the fascination of the machine. The songs of the Graphophones are literally songs that sing themselves. The Graphophone is marvellous as an entertainer. The Graphophone might be described as all musical instruments in one. You cannot from it any kind of music you want, vocal or instrumental. It is the perfect talking machine; for entertainment at home it has no rival as its repertoire is unlimited. Furthermore it costs less than a cheap musical instrument. A NEW SHELL

Walter T. Forbes, of London, New York, and Atlanta, has just submitted to the authorities in Washington, a curious looking ten-inch shell which he claims will destroy an entire fleet of ships at a single shot. Mr. Forbes is known throughout this country and England as a chemist, inventor and mechanical engineer.

In appearance the shell is very much like a gas tank in use at a soda water fountain. Indeed, that is almost what it is, only the gas used in this is hydrogen instead of carbonic acid, and the pressure per square inch is some 5000 pounds instead of only a few pounds per square inch. The idea of employing it for purposes of war, Mr. Forbes claims, is original with him. His secret lies in his manner of exploding it.

Hydrogen can only be set off by fire. No shock or jar will do it. This fact was a difficulty and an advantage at the same time to Mr. Forbes, when the idea of such a shell first suggested itself to him. On account of the tremendous internal pressure he could not use either a fuse or a percussion cap, and it cost him many weeks of thought to solve the problem. He says he has solved it, and solved it perfectly, and that now, if his shell strikes anywhere in the vicinity of the object aimed at annihilation is sure.

According to his figures, the 5000 pounds pressure, when the shell strikes, is instantly multiplied two hundred fold, giving the incredible explosive force of 1,000,000 pounds. Mr. Forbes claims that inasmuch as his shell weighs only about one-tenth as much as other shells of corresponding size, it can be fired a greater distance and at less powder cost. He also says the shell can be made for about one-twentieth the cost of other shells.

Government experts will test the invention, he says, the middle or latter part of this month. Mr. Forbes has received notification to that effect.

WOMEN IN THE ARMY

It may be safely assumed that no woman is wearing the blue and shouldering a rifle with the American volunteers in the present war. The methods of physical examination employed in the selection of volunteers preclude such a possibility.

Physical examination during the civil war did not amount to much more than the recruiting officer's eye measurement of the applicant's inches. If the applicant approximated five feet in height, and was not obviously blind, half lame, or deaf and dumb, instant admission to the ranks was given. The wonder does not, therefore, seem so great that a considerable number of women actually sided with the Union army during the civil war. A majority of these adventurous women enlisted on the Union side, and their sex in most cases was only revealed when they were wounded in action. There were no doubt a great many more women who enlisted in the Northern army as men than the records show—women, who, having escaped wounds and defection, were mustered out at the close of their enlistments or at the conclusion of the war without their sex becoming known to their officers or comrades. It seems almost incredible that some of these women, whose cases are well authenticated, should have carried out their deception with such success under difficult circumstances, but the fact remains that very few of them were discovered to be women through their poor acting or their soldierly roles.

A Washington man who has been in the War Department for forty years and during the civil war kept a record of all the cases that came to his notice wherein women were discovered under arms in both services, Federal and Confederate, gave the reporter access to his "Women Soldiers," scrapbook the other day, and the following stories are presented as showing that the girls of the early sixties aspired to more venturesome work in war than that of nursing sick or wounded soldiers.

A girl of 22 named Frances Bink, who is described as of "about medium height, with dark hazel eyes, brown hair, rounded features and feminine voice and appearance," enlisted, with her brother, in the Sixty-fifth Illinois Home Guards shortly after the beginning of the civil war. She and her brother were orphans. In enlisting the girl assumed the name of Frank Miller. She served three months and was mustered out without the slightest suspicion of her sex having arisen. Her brother was killed in action soon after he enlisted. After receiving her three months' discharge, the girl Frank Miller re-enlisted in the Union army, this time in the Nineteenth Illinois. She was taken prisoner in a battle near Chattanooga. In attempting to escape she was shot through the calf of the right leg. The Confederate soldiers who picked her up searched her papers and discovered her sex. The Confederates respected her sex and gave her a separate room in the military prison at Atlanta. The girl claimed that during her captivity she received a letter from Jefferson Davis offering her a lieutenant's commission, if she would serve in the Confederate service. She, however, was not established. The girl had no home and no relatives, but she said she preferred to fight as a private soldier for the stars and stripes than to accept any commission up to that of lieutenant general in the Confederate army. She was finally exchanged. She said, upon reaching the North, that her captors tried to extort from her a promise that she would home and not enter the service again.

"I was very much run down, having been sick for several months. I had been trying different remedies which did me no good. I would have severe spells of coughing that would leave me prostrate. I was told that my lungs were affected, and my heart and kidneys were in a bad condition. In fact, it seemed as though every organ was out of order. I felt that something must be done of order. My brother advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I procured a bottle and began taking it. Before it was half gone I felt that it was helping me. I continued its use and it has made me a new woman. I cannot praise it too highly." Mrs. BURKHILL, 217 Ossington Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

"Go home," she replied. "Go home, and my brother, the only relative I had in the world, killed by my side at Pittsburg Landing. I've got no home to go to, and I would not go to it even if I had one, until the war is over."

The betrothed of a young Ohio girl had enlisted and she determined to join him. She was inspected, accepted and sworn in with the rest of the company. The company marched to Jackson, Ohio, and drilled there for several days when the girl was sent with the Third Ohio Regiment to Camp Dennison, near Cincinnati. Here she assisted in all the duties of forming a new camp, handling lumber, doing sentry go, etc., for a couple of weeks, when, ascertaining for the first time that there were two Camp Dennisons, and that her betrothed was stationed in the other one, near Lancaster, Pa., she went to her commanding officer, Colonel Morrow, and requested to be transferred to the Camp Dennison in Pennsylvania, giving as her reason that she preferred to associate with Americans, and that most of the men in the outfit to which she was attached were foreigners. Colonel Morrow, a shrewd man, discovered the girl's sex and dismissed her from the camp.

A girl named Fanny Wilson enlisted in the Twenty-fourth New Jersey in order to follow her sweetheart, who was a member of the same regiment into the field. He knew nothing of her action but she saw him every day and came near to being assigned to the same mess tent with him. The Twenty-fourth New Jersey fought through the first camp in Western Virginia, the girl soldier carrying herself bravely. Then the regiment was ordered before Vicksburg. The girl's lover was wounded and, without revealing her sex, Miss Wilson nursed him. She made herself known to him just before he died. The girl herself became ill when her lover was laid away, and, with a large number of sick and wounded, was sent to Cairo, Ill. Here her sex was revealed and, upon her recovering, she was dismissed from the service. The girl was thrown upon her own resources in Cairo and at first she seemed to be engaged in a ballet girl. Then she went to Memphis and enlisted again, this time in a cavalry regiment, the Third Illinois. Her sex was discovered after a couple of weeks. She was stopped by the guard and arrested for being a woman in man's clothing. She was taken to the office of the commanding officer, it being suspected that she might be a Confederate spy, but she made it clear that she was a good loyal Federal soldier. She was provided with an outfit of woman's clothes and sent back North.

A young woman named Mary Owen, of Danville, Missouri county, Ill., enlisted in order to be with her husband, a soldier of the war, who was violently opposed to her marriage. The couple were married secretly and the young wife donned the United States uniform, enlisted under the names of John Evans in the same company with her husband, endured all of the hardships of the camp and the soldier's life. She saw her husband fall dead by her side and returned home wounded. Her sex was not discovered while she was in the service. She was in the service for eighteen months, took part in three battles and was wounded twice, both times in her arms. She drew her wounds herself in order to preserve the secret of her sex. She was a Welsh girl and pretty and clever.

The GRAPHOPHONE

Most fascinating invention of the age. Always ready to entertain. It requires no skill to operate it and reproduces the music of leading orchestras, vocalists or instrumental soloists. There is nothing like it for an evening's entertainment. Other so-called talking machines reproduce only records of cut-and-dried subjects, specially prepared in a laboratory, but the Graphophone is not limited to such performances. On the Graphophone you can easily make and instantly reproduce records of the voices of any sound. Thus it constantly awakes new interest and its charm is ever fresh. The reproductions are clear and brilliant.

Graphophones are sold for $10 and up. Manufactured under the supervision of Mr. T. M. Edison and Mr. N. G. Van der Grinten in New York.

Liver Trouble

When the yellow flag of quarantine is hoisted over a dwelling it means disease and danger. So when the yellow flag flies in the face—when the cheek is sallow and the clear white of the eye is dyed saffron—there is danger. It is liver trouble. The liver is one of the most important organs of the body. On the proper discharge of its functions depend human health and happiness. When the liver fails of its duty, poisons at once begin to generate, and other organs of the body become involved. Never neglect the liver if you value health. If you are suffering from liver trouble, begin at once the use of AYER'S PILLS and you will find prompt relief and permanent cure.

"I was so weakened by liver trouble that I could scarcely lift my head. While in this condition I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and finding almost immediate benefit, continued their use until I was cured of my complaint."

The Prohibition Plebiscite

Quebec is to give us a surprise when the prohibition plebiscite is taken, according to the estimate of Mr. M. Anger, of Sherbrooke, Que., before the executive of the Dominion Alliance. That Province is being fully organized by the temperance people. The reports from various districts throughout Ontario are also of an encouraging character looking towards temperance workers.

In Committee of the Whole

The Town Council met in Committee of the Whole Saturday evening for the discussion of a proposal from one of our leading manufacturing firms who propose materially enlarging their premises. As the present stage of the negotiations it is not considered wise to give the matter publicity. Those present were Mayor Davis, in the chair, and Councillors McWilliams, Cobb, Allen, J. M. White, W. H. White, Hunt, Deane, Robertson, Hamilton, Dawson and Meldrum.

No Change Likely

There is no likely to be any changes in the game laws as a result of the opinions of the sportsmen of the province. Some time ago the Game Warden sent out to all the deer hunters a pamphlet asking their opinions regarding the protection of deer. Those in the east of the province were almost solid in the belief that deer should be shot in the water, while the west and north were almost as strong in the opinion of their opinion that no deer should be killed in the water. The Game Department, we learn, also believe that deer should not be killed in the water, and the law will in all probability stand.

A few recommendations were made for the extension of the season, and the number of deer taken, but they were not sufficient to warrant any change.

Burns and Lightning

Mr. B. B. H. Warkworth, writes as follows: A number of papers have commented upon the fact "that so many barns throughout the country have been struck by lightning and burned," and asked for a remedy. It is a subject that many have long noted and thought upon, but to one has as yet suggested a remedy with the angle exception of the lightning rod men, and we all know their reasons. Now, I have never heard or known that any barn has been struck or burned. All farmers know that no matter how dry grain or hay is when put into the barn, it will sweat more or less; this sweat forms a gas, which invariably arises to the top. We know this, for if we salt the bottom of a mow the top also becomes salty. Now, I believe that lightning has an affinity for this gas, and that the gas, if confined in the top of the barn, draws the lightning.

PETERBORO' LABORING MEN

The Protection Councillor McWilliams Motion Proposes According Them

How it is Done in Toronto, Hamilton and London—The Best Points in the Several Protective Clauses in These Cities to be Combined for Use in Peterborough—A Praiseworthy Movement

In Saturday's issue our readers will notice in the report of the regular meeting of the Town Council that Councillor McWilliams introduced a resolution which provides that laboring men employed on corporation contracts shall be paid at the rate of $1.25 per day of nine hours; and that none but citizens, resident in the town at least six months, shall be employed on public works.

Mr. McWilliams has gone to a good deal of trouble to have this important matter placed before the Council, and The Times is pleased to learn that the resolution was carried.

The protective clauses in use in forms of contract in Toronto, London and Hamilton, as ascertained by Mr. McWilliams, are as follows.

contracts the clauses are as follows: 53. The contractor shall pay to all workmen employed upon this work the minimum wage of fifteen (15) cents per hour, and if he fails to do so, the city may pay any balance necessary to make up this amount, and charge it to the contractor. The contractor shall also be governed by the requirements of Bylaw 3206 of the City of Toronto, the provisions of which by-law are hereby made part of these conditions.

54. All broken stone used in this work must be broken within the limits of the City of Toronto, excepting only that the contractor may use stone crushed at the quarries by workmen who are residents of the City and are married men; the pay-rolls for such stone-crushing to be returned monthly to the Engineer with a statutory declaration by the contractor that he has fulfilled these conditions.

55. The contractor shall employ only citizens who have resided in the City for a period of at least six months.

IN HAMILTON.

the following provisions to protect the working men are inserted in all contracts: 1. The workmen employed in the performance of this contract shall be paid the current rate of wages on their several trades, and shall be required to work only during the hours established for the trades in which they are employed. In no case shall the wages to laborers be less than fifteen cents per hour.

2. In case the contractor shall pay to any of the workmen employed upon said work a less rate of wages than a herein stipulated for the City Corporation may pay to such workmen the difference between the wages as paid and the current rate of wages herein agreed to be paid, and may deduct such difference from any monies agreed to pay by the City Corporation under this contract, and the contractor shall be bound to make good such difference to the City Corporation.

3. The workmen to be employed upon the work to be done under this contract shall, as far as possible, be residents of the City of Hamilton, and the contractor shall be bound to see that the contract shall be sent out of the City of Hamilton to be done, if the same can be satisfactorily done there, nor shall any portion of the articles hereby contracted for be made elsewhere than in Hamilton, if the same can be satisfactorily made there, and the City Corporation shall have the right to reject such work, or any portion of it, or to make such deduction from the price thereof as the said City Engineer shall determine if this contract is not complied with.

IN LONDON.

the enactments in this connection take the form of a by-law, which contains the following clauses:

1. Every contract hereafter made made the corporation of the City of London, which shall require in carrying out the same as the employment of mechanics, workmen, or laborers by the contractor or contractors, shall pay to all mechanics, workmen and laborers to be employed by him or them in the execution of the said contract the prevailing union rate of wages for such work as the said mechanics, workmen or laborers may be engaged upon, and the said rate of wages prevailing at the date of the specifications accompanying the tenders for such work, and the said rate of wages prevailing at the date of the said specifications shall continue to be paid until the completion of the said contract.

2. The decision of the Engineer for the time being of the Corporation of the City of London, in case of dispute as to the rate of wages to be paid under this by-law, shall be final and conclusive upon all parties to the said contract, and every contract shall contain a provision to that effect.

3. In case any contractors fail to pay to any mechanic, workman or laborer employed by him in the execution of any such contract as aforesaid the rate of wages hereinbefore provided the Corporation of the City of London may, if claim be presented in writing to them within thirty days after the completion of the contract in respect of which the claim is made, pay to such mechanic, workman or laborer any balance necessary to make his wages the amount hereinbefore provided and may deduct the same from any monies payable by the Corporation to the contractor, and every such contract shall contain a clause so enabling the Corporation of the City of London to pay and deduct any such balance.

LIFE IN THE KLONDIKE

Graphically Described by a Former Resident of Peterborough County

How the Men who Have Struck it Rich Live—Millionaires in Huts—The Accidental Gold in the Klondike Estimated at $700,000,000

The following letter—delayed in transmission—has been received at this office from Mr. John F. Smith, who formerly resided in the township of Oshana, but who came three years ago left here for British Columbia and finally drifted into the Yukon gold fields. It will be found extremely interesting reading.

Dear Sir,—Many of the readers of the Times have no idea of what life is out here, and my old friends in and around Peterborough are only poorly informed as to the wealth that exists in this golden country. Nothing has struck me so much as the ludicrous disparity between the wealth of many of the miners and the miserable conditions under which they live.

George Cormack, probably the wealthiest man in Dawson City, who could at any moment write a cheque for a million dollars, and yet remain a rich man, is living in a hotel in which you wouldn't house your dog. It consists of a single room of rough-hewn logs smeared inside and out with mud, and with a tiny opening of 2 ft. square, by courtesy called a window.

Here the millionaire digger sat hundreds of hours last winter, huddled in darkness, with lucid intervals created by a single guttering candle. This economy in light is, however, intelligible when I tell you that to burn a single candle at a time through one long Klondike night costs $5.

Another miner who lives like a pauper in the company of a quarter of a ton of gold dust, is Barney Flinn, of Hunter Creek. Barney simply dare not take away his gold to bank it for fear that he might lose his claim; and it is stored away to the value of $130,000 in oil cans, discarded boots, and dirty blankets.

Two years ago, Clarence Berry, of whom you may have heard was earning five dollars a week as a laborer on a ranch. Last August he and his pretty and plucky young wife took $150,000 worth of dust to San Francisco bank and it is estimated that one of his claims alone will bring him at least $50,000 dollars a year for the next six years. He might retire to-day, after two years' work with a million of dollars to his credit.

He has been equally lucky in his speculation in town lots; and I know as a fact, that he is drawing $1,050 a year from a large number of lots, for which he paid $100 a piece eighteen months ago.

One of the cleverest women in Dawson is Mrs. Fishery, who, three years ago, was cook in a small hotel in California. She was induced to accompany her brother to the diggings, and to occupy her time during the long winters, took with her a large quantity of crocheting. With this she began to make stockings, which were eagerly purchased at $20 a pair. Her first savings were in real estate, which quickly grew to ten times the value she paid for it. With her increased capital she took to monopolizing and various forms of speculation, until to-day the ex-cook can put her hands upon $100,000.

Of course there has been a great deal of high play in Dawson City during the winter. The greatest winner was Jim Daugherty, a splendid fellow, well over 6 ft. Jim thought nothing of risking half a hundred-weight of gold on a single game of cards, and once asked 80 lbs. of dust on one throw of the dice. Like so many reckless men, fortune smiled on him, and he is already almost among the millionaires.

Crooks have, naturally, been terribly high. I remember a single box of candles last winter was sold for $150, or at the rate of $1.25 each; and one miner refused an offer of $100 for a small can of coal oil.

On my journey down from Dawson to Dyea I met at least 15,000 men, drugging towards the Yukon; and from one part of the Chitroot Pass counted no fewer than 200 tents of immigrants. Many of the gold-bugs were in a shocking state of destitution and suffering; in fact, the whole of my journey down was a long trail of dying men. Thousands were suffering from scurvy and frost-bites, and several fine fellows had to be taken back to Dyea to have limbs amputated.

However, if the half has not been told of privation and suffering, it has also not been told of the wealth of the Klondike. I fully expect the miners will take out of $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 worth of gold this summer; and it would be safe to estimate the value of the accessible gold in the 700 square miles of the Klondike district at as many million dollars.

With kind regards to my old Peterborough friends and the promise of another letter later on, I am,

Yours very truly,

JON F. SMITH.

SPORTING NOTES

What is Going on in Local and Outside Sporting Circles

BASEBALL.

Toronto, Sept. 10.—The final of the Eastern League season has arrived, but the position of some of the clubs can be altered by the result of to-day's contests. Montreal wins the championship, with Wilkes-Barre, Toronto and Buffalo as the bunch in the first division. Toronto is the only team that has finished two years among the first four. Montreal takes the pennant with the smallest percentage of victories on record. Everyone recognizes Toronto's splendid feat of losing five men like McGinn, Dinen, Wagner, Smith and McAlle by the draft and then landing in third position. Here is the record:

	W.	L.	Pct.
Montreal	67	48	.583
Wilkes-Barre	61	48	.559
Toronto	63	54	.538
Buffalo	61	57	.516
Providence	56	59	.487
Syracuse	51	63	.448
Springfield	48	62	.436
Ottawa	52	70	.426

LACROSSE.

The C.L.A. season opens from present prospects will likely be re-opened and the Tecumseh-Elms, Seaford and Orangeville given a chance to break away in another hard finish. The Toronto men have won their Georgetown contest, and if successful in having their Seaford game of last Saturday disallowed, a good deal more lacrosse will be seen yet. Of course the Islanders and Orangeville have to play their protested match of June 25 over again, and the ultimate champions of the western division will oppose with Peabody or Orillia. The way the present race stands shows Seaford in the lead.

	W.	L.	Pct.
Seaford	6	3	.667
Orangeville	3	1	.750
St. Catharines	4	0	1.000
Tecumseh	3	1	.750
Georgetown	3	1	.750
Peabody	3	1	.750

The C.L.A. teams are already looking for a players for next season. The Orangeville Buffaloes claim to have secured "Ted" Dowdy, of the St. Catharines Athletics, and in all probability the Seaford Shore, of the Capitals. High McConaghy is once more in the game, and last week played with Owen Sound at Warrenton. The visitors met defeat by five straight games.

Lacrosse is becoming quite an attraction in Rochester, N.Y., and since the visit of Peterborough a local team, the game has taken on immensely. Lacrosse men generally are looking for a further official announcement from President Lennox regarding the proposed tour by a representative C. L.A. team to the west. Some curiosity is expressed as to the present state of negotiations.

THE BAND.

President Crowe of the 57th Batt. Band, via a Memorandum

To the Editor of The Times
Dear Sir,—In Saturday's issue of the Examiner there appears a reference to a Division Court Case—Miller vs. the Fire Brigade Band—which is misleading. The article states:

"Judgment was given for full amount sued for against Robert Beach, Treasurer of the band, and dismissed as against the Executive Committee, the judge holding that the Executive was not responsible for the treasurer's actions."

In the first place, judgment was not given Mr. Miller for the amount of his claim, as only one-fourth of the costs on Mr. Beach, while Mr. Miller has to pay the remaining six-sevenths—practically all the costs in the case. As a matter of fact Mr. Miller was tendered by the Band in settlement of his claim considerably more than he secured by rushing into court.

The statement that judgment was given against Mr. Beach, while true, is misleading. Mr. Beach simply acted in the matter as directed by the Band, and consequently, as far as he is concerned personally, is no more guilty of wrong-doing—if his action can be so designated—than any other member of the band.

As to Mr. Miller's further claim against the Band—perhaps the less he says about the matter at present the better. It is quite possible that this "claim" question may be possessed of "back-action" qualities.

300 Were Killed

IN A SERIOUS ELECTION RIOT IN THE CITY OF GUATAMALA

Government Troops Fire on the Rioters with Awful Effect—Over Three Hundred Were Killed and Wounded—Discontented Electors

New Orleans, La., Sept. 12.—The steamer Olympia, which has arrived here from Port Cortez, brings news of serious rioting in Guatemala during the elections, in which it is said three hundred were killed and wounded. The story of the rioting was brought from Port Cortez by a steamer, whose captain says that the facts were kept off the wires by the Government censorship. Although Prospero Morales had died after his capture in a cave by the Government forces his followers were ill-contented to submit to the re-election of President Estrada and, although in no shape to make a strong fight in the balloting, gathered in force at the polls, and considerable disorder followed heated personal disputes. Troops had been posted near all the polls, and when the disorder became extensive the order to fire was given. Details are lacking, but according to the story of the captain of the steamer 300 persons were killed or fatally wounded.

NEW WESTMINSTER

Burned to the Ground—People Walking Around Ruins

Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 12.—New Westminster, B.C., is a heap of smoking ruins and her citizens are wandering aimlessly about the streets, desolate and hopeless. Fire, fanned by a fierce wind, went from the water front to Royal Avenue, blotting everything out for seven streets, then spreading east and west, wiped out Columbia street, with its score of handsome business blocks. The extent of the fire is half a mile square. The estimated loss on buildings and stock is $2,500,000, and the insurance about half of that.

START OF THE FIRE.

The fire started at 11:15 at Brackman & Ker's warehouse among some saws stored in a shed that had been there for the past year.

One story is that the sparks from a passing steamer set the saw on fire. The fire started in the straw from spontaneous combustion, as the shed was closely shut at the time. The fire, spreading from there, took in all the buildings on Columbia street and Front street, from the Telegraph Hotel to the C.P.R. station, six blocks, and from the water front to Royal Avenue, back into the residential portion, seven blocks. When the fire started the steamers Gladys, Edgar and Bonard were on fire, and breaking from their moorings, floated down stream, aiding the wind in the work of destruction by setting fire to all the canneries and sheds on the river. The Bonard was scuttled to prevent her setting fire to the Royal City lumber mills and lumber. Both were miraculously saved.

ALARM AT MIDNIGHT.

At midnight citizens saw that the city was in imminent danger. There was only a puny stream of water to fight a holocaust. Chief Ackerman was away on his holidays, and Foreman Wray was in his place, and the Mayor telephoned Vancouver that the city was on fire in an hour and a quarter the entire fire brigade of Vancouver was on the scene, and two brigades pumped water from the river, abandoning the reservoir. The Vancouver boys did noble work, actually checking the fire westward at the Queen's Hotel block, and again several blocks back from there in the residential portion. In the meantime the fire had burned itself out in an easterly direction, performing strange freaks, such as leaving a Chinese shop and saloon standing where the building ten feet away was consumed.

At six o'clock the Vancouver firemen succeeded in checking the flames, the citizens having prevented their spread along the water front by tearing down a row of Chinese buildings.

PARTIAL LIST OF LOSSES.

Partial list of buildings destroyed is as follows: Front street—South market wharf, partly insured; Brackman & Ker's wharf and contents, $10,000; New Vancouver Coal Company's wharf, and contents, C.P.N. Company's wharf and contents, Shellir Canning Co., including saw-mill; Western Fishing Co's Cannery; No. 3 fire hall; Gilley Bros' wharf and warehouse; C.P.R. station; freight shed saved by efforts of J. Johnson and men, shed packed with freight.

There are two saloons left in town, the Telegraph and East End. The latter is the only church not destroyed.

The bank vaults stood the test of the fire.

BIG RAILWAY DEAL

American Syndicate Said to Have Purchased the N.C.R.

St. Catharines, Sept. 12.—Negotiations just completed with the N.C.R. result in the taking over by an American syndicate of capitalists of the Niagara Central Railway. Mr. E. A. C. Fox, the celebrated railroad promoter, and another gentleman have made an inspection of the road, and have arranged to buy Mr. Nelson out, and complete the purchase of the road. Cheques for the amount changed hands and the bargain is closed.

It is the opinion of the company that at once the present road in good repair, and also a build the road to Port Dalhousie. The road will be equipped with heavy electric motors, capable of hauling both passenger and freight trains.

Word spoken to Mr. Nelson nothing to say, though he did not deny that the story as to the sale of the road was true.

It is said that Mr. Nelson receives $1,000 over the price he tendered for the road, which would offer a position under the new company.

SOUTH ONTARIO PROTEST

Rev. John Bryden's Case Comes Before Justice Oiler and Ferguson

Windsor, Sept. 12.—The trial of the South Ontario election petition commenced at 11 o'clock this morning before Justice Oiler and Ferguson. John Bryden, secretary of the Conservative Association for the riding, was the first witness. He produced the minute book, but no other record of the Association's proceedings. The list of those present at the meeting when Oiler was nominated as witness as to the political activity of each group. In addition he was asked to name prominent and active Conservatives throughout the riding. A. M. Sharp, of Exbridge, was said to have been the organizer of the riding, and was the secretary of the Young Conservative Club, was also called.

ARREST IN NAPANEE CASE

Frank Lefebvre Had Forged Bills in His Possession

Montreal, Sept. 12.—Frank Lefebvre has been arrested at Genilly, near Three Rivers, Que., and it is evident that the arrest will have an important bearing on the coming trial of Ponton, Pate, et al at Napanee. It has already been told of the passing of some of the Dominion Bank Napanee forged ten dollar bills at Three Rivers during the recent exhibition, of the arrest and honorable acquittal of a well known Montreal saloon keeper. With his acquittal came the search for the men who were handling the bills. They had been passed on many people, and there was no doubt that a great number were in the hands of the people of the neighborhood.

Secretary Collins of the Montreal Detective Department went to Three Rivers and took up the search. He learned that an effort had been made by a man to open an account at the Hochelaga Bank. Manager of the bank (detected about twenty of the forged bills in the $1000 which the man wanted to deposit. He declined to allow the account to be opened. The stranger said that he had been advised to go to the bank by a man named Tanguay of Genilly, and from the description of a man who wanted to open the account he arrested Frank Lefebvre, who admitted that he had the forged bills, knew that they were forged and passed some of them. He said that he got them from his wife, and she in turn had received them from a bank, but declined to say which one. She is held to await enquiries.

A search of Lefebvre's house was made and $450 ing old, $200 in American bills, and $300 in Canadian bills was found. The two were taken to Three Rivers and will come before a magistrate today or Monday.

BAIL FOR MACKIE

Napanee, Ont., Sept. 12.—Judge Price of Kingston came here today by appointment to fix the amount of bail for Robert Mackie who has been confined in jail since the preliminary investigation of the bank robbery case. The judge fixed the amount of bail at $25,000 for two sureties and Mackie's own bond for $50,000. It is understood that Mackie will be here on Monday to arrange for his release.

DISASTROUS FIRE

An Arizona Town Completely Wiped Out by Fire

Prescott, Arizona, Sept. 12.—The town of Jerome, near here, was completely destroyed by fire this morning, burning at a rate of over $1,000,000 in property. Eleven bodies have so far been recovered, while a score of others are said to be in the ruins smouldering. The fire originated in a cabin and spread rapidly. The fire was confined exclusively to the business portion of the town, and the open space intervening between it, and the works of the United Verde Company saved the latter's plant. The area of the fire was confined to a narrow gulch and ravine leading to it, in which were located substantial wooden and stone buildings, the latter melting as rapidly before the flames as pasteboard. Over 130 residences, averaging in value $2,000, 250 small mercantile and other stores, saloons, etc., of all kinds, are wiped out, in short not a single business house remains. The only building to escape was the Methodist church.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED HOMELESS

The number of people who are homeless is placed at fifteen hundred, and they are being cared for by Messrs. Giroux & Allen, of the mining company. Two special trains left here for the scene of disaster, carrying tents and other material, and a meeting is being held here to raise money for the needy, of whom there are many. The loss is complete, but little insurance being written in the camp, owing to the great risk and inadequate water supply. Where the fire originated was the scene of a drunken carousal last night.

WHOLE BLOCK BURNED

Red Bluff, Cal., Sept. 12.—Fire destroyed an entire block off the finest buildings in the town today. The loss to property owners will be more than $100,000, of which the insurance is barely half that sum. The origin of the fire is unknown.

HAMMOND INDIFFERENT

W. J. Hammond Converted from Barri to Anarchist

Boston, Sept. 12.—W. J. Hammond, the British big game hunter who has been in the city here for three months for safekeeping, and is to be hanged at the gallows on Friday morning at 8 o'clock, left here this afternoon at two o'clock on the first part of his trip to the gallows. He was in charge of detectives Wm. Greer and J. S. Rogers, who, whom he was driven to the station in a cab, and was on off on the train. His trip to the gallows was a very quiet one, and he was not seen by any of the crowd. A representative of a Toronto newspaper called on him on Saturday, but though he talked about the weather and the kind of treatment he had received in the jail, he positively refused to say anything for the press. He chatted freely, however, and pleasantly, a smile frequently showing on his face. It is understood that he still asserts his innocence, but admits that his life has been a war and a double life. He is an immensely good gambler at the station, but with the Hammond was not pleased, as he does not like to be watched so closely. The silence of Hammond passed through and away on the train was simply oppressive.

If you suffer from aches, boils, pimples, or if your nerves are weak and your system run down, you should take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

PLOT STARTED IN LONDON

British Detectives Very Active in Investigating the Activities of the Anarchists and the Plot

London, Sept. 12.—The terrible news of the assassination of Emperor Franz Joseph has thrown Europe from end to end, and everywhere but one question is asked: How can society protect itself against Anarchism? Special dispatches from every capital describe the efforts produced, and the newspaper comments that police with better vigilance in the defenseless woman who shunned police and did nothing but good should be selected at the moment of the apprehending justice for the assassin's knife.

ITALY GRIEVED AND ASHAMED

Perhaps the most poignant grief is depicted in Italy, because the public mind there is touched with shame that so many political crimes have been committed by Italians. King Humbert, with his own hands wrote a telegram, expressing the deepest sympathy. The Pope wired Emperor Franz Joseph as follows: "My God give the strength of resignation to our dear son Joseph, who in so short a period has been tried by so many misfortunes. We pray that God may bestow upon the

GREAT GLEE IN BRITAIN

The Nation Rejoices Over Their Victories

VERY HOT TIME IN LONDON

Warm Weather, Lack of Rain and Scarcity of Water

Mr. Chamberlain Severely Rejoiced - He port-ended That He did not Look After Foreign Interests as He Should Have Done

London, Sept. 10.—The event of the week, the capture of Omdurman and Khartoum, has produced a feeling of exultation throughout Great Britain, which is in marked contrast with the gloomy forebodings of the past months, during which everyone has been finding fault with the Government, and it was generally believed that the country's rivals were over-matching her at every point. The completeness of the victory has had a most exhilarating effect and has undoubtedly impressed the continental nations, while the cordial praise cabled from the United States press has been much appreciated here.

BRITISH TRIUMPHS.

The understanding arrived at between Great Britain and Germany allows the former's plans in South Africa to be carried out without fear of a German-Boer alliance, and the dismissal of Li Hung Chang from the Chinese Foreign Office, following the Czar's peace proposals, is taken as evidence of the complete triumph of British diplomacy in the Far East.

Vanity Fair, an ardent supporter of the Government, in a gleeful review of the situation says—

"Looking eastward we see pauperized Russia ready to climb down at our desire."
"And last of all," continues Vanity Fair, which throughout has been most persistent in its abuse of the United States, "if we look at America we are confronted with the sight of a friendly nation ready to back us up whenever our desires are mutual. Who will say now that the horizon is no clear Old England, instead of having taken a lower place, sits on a still higher pinnacle."

NO FOOD AT A REVIEW.

While the transport and commissariat departments of the British army, as exemplified in the admirable conduct of the Sudan campaign, appear to be beyond reproach on active service, there is no lack of allegations that there was a serious breakdown during the recent army movements on Salisbury Plain. In the first place, owing to the resources of the War Office being inadequate to the demands, the contract for the catering was given to Sir Thomas Lipton, and if the reports are true the soldiers suffered considerable privation. Indeed, it would seem, some of them suffered so much that they committed offences and the military prisons in the neighborhood were so overcrowded that the officials declared they would not receive any further prisoners.

KHARTOUM A TOURIST RESORT

The tourist agencies are already planning trips to Khartoum, which this week has been demonstrated to be less than nine days from London.
Last Saturday General Kitchener dispatched Colonel Hope from Omdurman, the former Derwich stronghold on the river Nile, near Khartoum, to Cairo, and he accomplished the journey in 47-2 hours.

HOASTING CHAMBERLAIN.

A long cable interview with Mr.
Joseph Chamberlain, the British Secretary of State for the colonies, who is expected to visit the United States in his wife's parents, has been received with incredulity by the English press. The Daily Chronicle says—
"That he should have talked of a railroad through the Transvaal, from Khartoum to the Cape, or have discussed the Anglo-German understanding, or performed other feats of a like description is beyond believing. If these stories are true, then, indeed, Lord Salisbury's 'blunders' are quenched in the white light of Mr. Chamberlain's indiscretions."

BRITAIN HOT AND DRY.

Tropical weather continues here and on the continent. The thermometer in London on Thursday last registered 90 degrees, which is the record for the summer, while the returns for the past thirty years do not show any previous record above 87 for the month of September. The whole of Great Britain continue to be without rain, and the almost unbearable atmosphere in London is intensified by a sultry, white mist, which is so thick on the Thames that the steamboats had to stop running. There have been innumerable cases of sunstroke and apoplexy, and the iron works of Birmingham and the black country are closing on account of the heat. Fires are occurring among the trees and in the grass on the commons.

EAST LONDON SUFFERS.

The conditions prevailing in the East of London are specially pitiable.
There has been the usual water famine and for three weeks over a million people, to say nothing of animals have been suffering from the shortage.
The situation is daily growing worse as the water is breaking out, and as the increased rain is as scarce as the signs of snow, the supply of water has already been curtailed three hours daily and promises to be further shortened.

The heat has also been very great in Paris, where an ice famine prevails, and the French soldiers have been suffering so much that the army manoeuvres had to be abandoned.

Vicar-General McCann received yesterday from Rome an appointment as the administrator of the diocese of Toronto. This gives him a bishop-ric's power until a successor to the late Archbishop Walsh is appointed.

GEN. WHEELER'S SON

Young Cadet and a Lieutenant Probably Drowned

Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, L.I., Sept. 10.—Thomas Wheeler, and Second Lieutenant Newton D. Kirkpatrick,
First cavalry, were probably drowned
while bathing here this afternoon.
Young Wheeler was a naval cadet in his second year. He had been acting on his father's staff for some time past.
He was seventeen years of age, was a fine young fellow and had made a host of friends among the older officers. Together with Lieutenant Kirkpatrick he went to the beach to enjoy the surf bathing. The surf ran high and the undertown was very strong.
Apparently no one saw the young men drown, and it was not until about 6 o'clock that they were missed. Their clothes were found a short distance from General Wheeler's tent, close to the water.

Last night a detail of 60 men from the First cavalry was stationed along the coast to watch for the bodies that may be thrown up on shore.

While in command of Camp Wikoff General Wheeler's headquarters were located a considerable distance back from the water. It was only yesterday that his headquarters were shifted down to the beach. It was this change of location that gave young Wheeler and Kirkpatrick an opportunity to include themselves in the surf. General Wheeler's three daughters, two of whom have been acting as nurses in the general hospital and the other as a nurse in the detention hospital, are with him, grief-stricken. Lieutenant Kirkpatrick was from Virginia.

BAD ACCIDENT IN NEW YORK

Iron superstructure is blown down - Two killed

New York, Sept. 10.—A gust of wind that preceded a thunder storm here this afternoon, blew down the heavy iron superstructure of new Pier 50, at the foot of West Twelfth street, instantly killing one man and injuring ten others, one of whom afterwards died.
There were ninety men at work on the superstructure when it fell. The man killed outright was Samuel Patterson.
The wounded, James Leblond, died on the way to the hospital—Charles Buckley, Jerry Brown, J. Malone, George Ostler, George Lilly, George Callison, Michael Egan, George Conklin, William Leblond. The injured men were
The new pier is 800 feet long and is being erected by the Wilson Steamship company. The heavy iron beams and girders were up, and the roof, which was also of iron, was on. When the storm loomed up from the southwest a frenzied blast of wind rushed in under the iron superstructure, and fairly lifting it from the pier, allowed it to drop again in a mass of twisted and gnarled iron, burying the men under it. During the fall that intervened between the first roar of the wind and the sharp metallic creaking of the twisted iron could be heard the cries and moans of the wounded. The injured men made a rush for the shore end of the pier. An alarm of fire which was sent in brought out two companies of firemen, who went to work with all their might to rescue those who were under the debris.
Three men are reported missing. They are given Rutherford, Alex. E. Wan-sien and George Ramsey. These men were carpenters and were at work on the roof. They are supposed to have been blown into the river and drowned.

TRIED TO SHOOT THE QUEEN

An English Anarchist Fired at Wilhelmmina and Nearly Killed Her

Berlin, Sept. 10.—The Lokal Anzeiger says about a fortnight ago an attempt was made to assassinate Queen Wilhelmina, near Amsterdam. Province of Friesland, on the road between Castle Reijndi and Buura. A man emerged from behind a tree, and fired a revolver at Her Majesty. The bullet missed the Queen, but ploughed the cheek of a lady in attendance. The would-be antichrist was arrested. He is supposed to be an English anarchist. The strictest secrecy has been maintained hitherto so as to the affair in order not to disturb the enjoyment of the enthronement festival.

The Queen and her mother have returned from Amsterdam to The Hague, where they were received with public rejoicing an almost ceremonial. It is reported that Wilhelmmina will marry Prince Frederick of Wied, eldest son of the reigning Prince of Wied.

PRACTICAL SCIENCE

One of the Portland, Oregon, papers lately announced the arrival at Astoria of a magnificent ocean log raft which scaled between six million and seven feet of lumber, a raft which, if made of sawed lumber, would contain about twelve million or thirteen million feet. It was 600 feet long, with beam of fifty-three feet, and drew twenty feet six inches. Of cigar shape it was protected by a heavy plank bulkhead at each end, held in place by four steel cables of one and one-fourth inch diameter. It was towed by a hawser sixteen inches in circumference and 150 fathoms long, connecting with a chain seventy-five fathoms in length at the end of the raft, this chain being connected with another chain running through the whole length of the raft. In this way pulling the raft together wherever the strain came on the hawser, thus tightening the raft more securely when on the ocean.

One of the technical niceties required to be observed in boiler work for United States naval use is the prohibition of blue working without subsequent annealing. The fact is interesting, as explanatory of this rule, that what is known as a critical temperature in the working of both iron and steel is at the so-called blue heat, this being from 450 to 600 deg. F., and it is here that the iron and steel are much more brittle when cold or at redness. On iron, however, this heat does not seem to leave any bad effect, though if the piece be worked in such a range of temperature it will retain the brittleness after cooling and show a great loss of ductility as measured by the bending test, and the poorer the iron the more susceptible it is to the blue heat. The danger to steel at this heat is more pronounced than in iron, but it exists to a greater or less extent in all iron and steel ever made—is also more noticeable in a descending than in an ascending heat, and is especially marked in work having sharp corners which have been worked at the blue heat.

The name leather has long since passed from the exclusive vocabulary pertaining to animal skins and hides in their prepared state. Recently, says the Zeitung, a German inventor has brought to public notice an improved kind of asbestos material and the method of its manufacture. The asbestos is at first divided into very fine fibres of the greatest possible length, then immersed in an india rubber solution, the whole being then thoroughly intermixed until every fibre is coated with the solution, the solvent—for instance, petroleum benzene—is then evaporated. By this treatment the asbestos fibres cohere perfectly, and the mass may then be pressed into any desired form, or may be rolled. The inventor calls the manufactured product asbestos leather, and it is said to resemble leather very closely in its peculiarities and in its industrial adaptation.

The use of crude or refined petroleum by engineers is by some chemical experts condemned on the ground of their always being dangerous to corrosion in the use of such a substance, this being due to the refining which necessitates the use of sulphuric acid and the formation of what is called oil scale. This is owing to the fact that when the oils are introduced they rise and float on the top of the water and put and weaken the boiler, and the water, when impregnated with sediments and mud, boils and bubbles up through the oil scale on top, and the water becoming vaporized, it liberates the particles of mud and scales contained, these falling back upon the layer of oil upon the top of the water. Such being the case the layer of oil becomes after a while so impregnated with mineral substances that it sinks to the bottom of the boiler, forming an insulating oil scale, this being more injurious than a lime or magnesium scale.

Quite an industry is now carried on in the production of green gutta percha from the leaves of the caoutchouc tree, a product which is said to possess not only all the advantages of the article procured by incision into the stem, but even to excel it in durability, thus promising to enter largely into use industrially and commercially in a hitherto unknown way. It is not only readily prepared, but is also cheap, and does not require the expensive purification which has hitherto increased the price of the substance some 15 to 25 per cent. It is highly plastic, very strong, can be divided into the thinnest leaves, and receives the most delicate and at the same time most distinct impressions by moulding and pressing. In addition to these advantages there is the important one of perfectly withstanding the action of water and the strongest acids and even in a worn and broken-up condition is still worth one-fourth its cost of production.

Some importance is attached to a method recently brought forward by F. W. Oliver, a London inventor, for producing belting or driving bands that are waterproof, will not be affected by oils or ordinary acids or by any variations of temperature to which they would ordinarily be exposed, will not stretch in use, or slip, and possess due flexibility for working around pulleys. These characteristics are obtained by impregnating a suitable textile material of which the belt is to be composed of liquid celluloid, this material being duck or canvas; the latter is impregnated with a thin solution of celluloid, applied to the surface, so that there is a distinct penetration or saturation. The fabric thus prepared is then—if treated in large webs or sheets—cut into strips of the desired length, and the requisite number of such strips, if more than one, cemented together a strip slightly wider than double the width of these strips, and similarly impregnated, may now be folded over the core formed by the strip of strips, with its edges abutting or scarfed in the middle of the face which is to be the inner face or side of the belt, then cemented to the inclosed strips. In a belt so made the various characteristics above named are, it is asserted, all secured.

An article in Stahl und Eisen, by F. W. Luetmann, sets forth the progress made in Germany in manufacturing bricks from granulated blast furnace slag. Credit is given to Eugene Langen's ingenious plan for producing granulated slag, or slag gravel, for brick making, by passing the fluid slag through water. This process causes disintegration. Silica is separated in a soluble condition, in which it easily hardens in the air and combines just as easily with caustic lime. The single grains of the slag gravel, when compressed tightly, are bound by the soluble silica, and, when ground to a fine dust, so that the particles come into closer contact with each other, the binding by the silica therein is sufficient for the production of good building bricks. Bricks from ground slag, however, require a longer time for hardening than those produced from granulated slag. By mixing granulated slag with dust from slag which has crumbled in the air it is found that good bricks can be produced without the addition of lime, but the hardening process is somewhat slow. Hardening takes place quickest in from six to eight days with bricks to which about 10 per cent of burned and slacked lime has been added.

An interesting trial with oil as fuel was made on board the torpedo boat destroyer Surly at Portsmouth recently. There are four boilers on board the Surly, and two of these have been adapted for oil, the other two being retained for coal fuel. An overhead feed-tank supplied the oil, which had a flashing point of 280 deg. Fah., and was injected as spray. Three runs were made over the measured mile in Stokes Bay, and a mean speed of four knots was maintained, which was considered fairly satisfactory for a preliminary trial, although sixteen knots had been hoped for. This is the first time that oil fuel has been tried at sea in the British navy, and the system under experiment is said to Mr. Holden, of the Great Eastern Railway.

With reference to the synthesis of organic compounds, some very interesting work has lately been done by Dr. A. Slosser, a Belgian scientist, who is said to have produced both sugar and urea by the action of electricity on carbon dioxide and hydrogen in the former case and on carbonic oxide and ammonia in the latter case, in a Berthelot ozone tube. One volume of pure carbonic acid and two volumes of hydrogen were subjected to the action of a brush discharge for five hours in an ozone tube, when a colorless liquid formed, and later some crystals separated out, which gave characteristic reactions for sugar. Both formic aldehyde and methyl alcohol were found, showing that during the synthesis the sugar passed through these stages, and the action is compared to the formation of sugar in plants under the influence of sunlight. The urea was obtained by acting in a similar way on one volume of carbonic oxide and two volumes of dry ammonia when some drops of liquid and small crystals readily soluble in water were produced. Both chemical and microscopic tests gave characteristic reactions for urea, and although this body has been produced by chemical means before this is, we believe, the first time organic synthesis has been produced by electric action.

If we are to credit the observations made by Dr. Geo. G. Waltemath, of Hamburg, our earth is accompanied in her wanderings, not by one satellite only, as we have hitherto been content to believe, but by two. Although it seems utterly incredible that we should have to wait to the end of the nineteenth century for the recognition of the existence of this second moon, yet we must remember that numerous observations, mostly, it is true, utterly unscientific and vague, have from time to time been made recording the passage of an unknown dark body across the sun's disk. These observations were some short time back collated by Dr. Waltemath, and from the facts thus brought together he has evolved the theory of the existence of a small moon hitherto unrecognized, having a diameter of some 400 miles, with a volume 125 times smaller than that of the moon, and a mass eighty times less. In announcing his theory Dr. Waltemath predicted a transit of this body across the sun's disc for a date early in February last, and, curiously enough, he has since had his prediction confirmed from more than one quarter. He has received letters from China, where three German officers in the Chinese service observed the phenomenon, from Wiesbaden and other towns in Germany. These confirmatory observations, of course, be more conclusive—but wider theories than that of Dr. Waltemath have by the advancement of science been proved to be sober facts.

A Serious Case

Too Difficult and Complicated for Ordinary Medical Aid

Paine's Celery Compound is the Mighty Rescuer

Mr. Forsythe Says: "I am Pleased to Recommend Paine's Celery Compound; I believe it is the best medicine in the world."

Wells & Richardson Co.
Gentlemen—For two years I was in a low condition of health, suffering from nervousness, fainting spells, pain in the head, stomach troubles and loss of appetite. I was under the care of two doctors, but received no benefit from their treatment. I also used two bottles of a recommended patent medicine, but no good results came. I was then advised by a neighbor to use your wonderful medicine, Paine's Celery Compound. The use of this marvelous preparation soon produced the very best results. I am glad to report that my health is improved in every respect; I am stronger, sleep better, and my appetite is good and natural. I am pleased to recommend Paine's Celery Compound to all sick people, as I believe it is the best medicine in the world.
Yours truly,
A. FORSYTHE,

CHICAGO'S GREAT REFORM.

Chicago Journal.
The talk of an Anglo-American alliance has had a far-reaching effect in the little things of life.
Mention of it on the stage commonly brings out applause.
The demand for English periodicals at the news-stands has increased very largely, according to the dealers. Booksellers say that English histories and similar works are being sold at a much livelier rate than ever before.

The British and American flag intertwined is a common sight.
The patriotic orator has stopped talking of "the hated Britishers."
Ale is becoming a much more popular drink.
In polite society the number is increasing of those who interpose thickly in all conversation, "Ye know," pronouncing the latter word so that it rhymes with "wow."
But none of these things benefit the general public to the extent of one other custom which has sprung up. This one practice is enough to convert many to the alliance idea. It has done more to make it popular than all the others put together. Street-car conductors are now accepting Canadian money.

Diamond Dyes are the Favorites of all Wise Women Used by the Best Dyers in the World

In the coloring of cotton and wool rags and yarns for carpet, rug and wall making, Diamond Dyes are the most universally used. By their use coloring can be done in one-fourth the time and at far less expense than with the old fashioned dyes, while the Diamond Dyes are far more brilliant and durable. Diamond Dyes are fast to light, and if you use these dyes your home made carpets, rugs and mats will be as bright after years of wear, as the most expensive foreign goods. Diamond Dyes are fast to soap and water, and goods colored by them can be freely washed, will be brighter and better for it. Of no other dye is this true. When you prepare for your home dyeing work, do not be deceived by imitation packages or soap grease dyes, the Diamond Dyes are used by the best prize dyers; you use them to make a success of your work.

For Sale or To Rent.
That valuable property situated on the corner of Bathurst and Edinburgh streets, for sale or to rent. Parties intending to purchase or rent a handsome and commodious residence should not fail to inspect this place. The house is a four-story brick building, fitted up in modern style, with every convenience, such as city water, bath room, electric light, first-class "out-buildings," including stable for three horses, driving shed for six rigs, ice house, etc. There is a fine lawn and vegetable garden attached to the house, also a number of fruit trees and shrubbery. The above property will be sold cheap or leased for a term of years. For further particulars apply on the premises to J. R. Donoh.

How the music comes from a Graphophone cylinder is a mystery that adds much to the fascination of the machine. The songs of the Graphophone are literally songs that sing themselves. The Graphophone is marvelous as an entertainer. The Graphophone might be described as all musical instruments in one. You can get from it any kind of music you want, vocal or instrumental. It is the perfect talking machine; for entertainment at home it has no rival as its repertoire is unlimited. Furthermore it costs less than a cheap musical instrument. Bad for Bronchitis

but extremely good for the sufferer from that harassing disease is Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. No medicine can compare with this great remedy in the prompt and permanent aid it gives in all bronchial affections. It stops the cough, soothes the irritated throat, and induces refreshing sleep.

"I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One bottle cured me."

J. C. WOODSON, P. M., Forest Hill, W. Va.

"A short time ago I was taken with a severe attack of bronchitis, and neither physicians nor ordinary remedies gave me relief. In despair of finding anything to cure me, I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle entirely cured me."

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 13, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Police Court

Ellen Hughes and Mary Nash were summoned to attend the police court yesterday morning on a charge of participating in a disgraceful row on Wolfe street on Friday night last. Both disobeyed the summons and warrants have been issued for their arrest. The police intend pushing the matter. James Deans and E. Merrin on a charge of vagrancy were dismissed with a warning.

Appointed Administrator

Vicar-General McEwen today received a communication from Rome confirming his appointment as the administrator of the diocese of Toronto. He has all the powers of a bishop in regulating all the affairs of the archdiocese at Toronto. This authority he will maintain until he is replaced by a successor to the late Archbishop Walsh. Bishop O'Connor, of Peterboro may possibly be chosen.

Remotely Discharged

Fred Elmhurst, of Peterboro, who joined the 3rd U. S. Cavalry at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, has arrived in Montreal from Atlanta, Georgia, where he was confined for a month on suspicion of being a Spanish spy. He received an honorable discharge. Elmhurst is a son of Mr. P. Elmhurst, of Otonabee, and when the reports reached Peterboro concerning his arrest great anxiety was felt on his behalf by his relatives. Mr. John Lang, M. P., has already solicited the interference of the Dominion Government in the matter, when the prisoner received his discharge.

Lawyers Hiding Vigorously

Lawyers in the western part of the province are complaining of the Attorney-General's Department regarding the early holding of the Fall Assizes. In the same place the opening is fixed for the 13th of the legal year. The legal year is given for the preparation of cases. The lawyers say that the Fall Assizes should not be held until the beginning of October at least. Should all the courts not be able to dispose of the dockets by commencing October, they suggest the appointment of another judge to expedite matters.

Many American Guests

Few people in Peterboro realize the extent of the importance of the many popular summer resorts in this vicinity and the amount of business which is brought to the town by the proximity of these places. Laying aside all local and provincial trade, the number of visitors from the United States is really surprising. The Snowden House seems to be the favorite hotel in Peterboro of the American tourist, and this year the house has been especially popular. A glance over the register of the Snowden House since the summer season opened up to the present time shows that exactly four hundred and thirty-eight visitors from Uncle Sam's domain have registered themselves there as guests. Besides these there were almost as many who did not sign the register, so that at this hotel alone there were over seven hundred American guests this season. This gives some idea of the importance of the summer travel.

An Advertiser Over Land

The takings at the Toronto Fair this year were, approximately, $22,000 in advance of last year. The gross receipts were $97,640. The following figures, which are, as nearly correct as can be ascertained, give the daily receipts as compared with last year: Tuesday, Aug. 30, $618; Wednesday, Aug. 31, $2,925; Thursday, Sept. 1, $4,457; Friday, Sept. 2, $4,812; Saturday, Sept. 3, $5,238; Sunday, Sept. 4, $19,915; Monday, Sept. 5, $10,433; Tuesday, Sept. 6, $20,571; Wednesday, Sept. 7, $21,650; Thursday, Sept. 8, $21,650; Friday, Sept. 9, $21,650. Total, $17,640. The figures as to the attendance are not yet available, but it can be stated that they were not far short of 400,000 for the whole fair.

ROAD ROLLER PURCHASED.

At Last Night's Meeting of the Council in Committee of the Whole

The Buffalo Pitts Roller offered at $8,000, but the Council purchased the Russell Roller at $6,000—Partial Exemption for the Light and Power Co.

The Council met in Committee of the Whole last night at 7.30.

Present—Mayor Davis and Councillors Best, W. H. White, Robertson, Deane, Hamilton, Dawson, Cobb, McWilliams, Meldrum, J. M. White and Allen.

A deputation from the Light and Power Co.—Messrs. A. Stevenson, W. H. Hill, and R. Hall—appeared before the Committee in reference to the assessment of the new building proposed to be erected by the company. They asked that in the event of their building in Peterboro their total assessment be not increased, but that it remain at $29,000—the total amount of their present assessment in Peterboro and Ashburnham. Briefly, the request of the company means exemption from taxes on all their property in Peterboro exceeding in value $29,000.

Messrs. McDonald, of the Sawyer-Massey Co., Hamilton, and Dewey, of the Pitts Co., Buffalo, addressed the Committee on the relative merits of four respective steam road rollers. The arguments were practically the same as those presented some weeks ago.

The Committee then took up the proposition of the local manufacturing company—referred to in yesterday's Times—but did not finally settle the matter. It will be disposed of later at a special meeting.

The purchase of a steam road roller was again taken up. Some of the councillors were in favor of deferring the purchase until next year as it would not be actually needed before spring; others were of the opinion that the roller should be ordered now, to be delivered next May, and paid for as soon as tested and found satisfactory.

On a vote being taken this latter view of the case was found to bring the ascendant.

Councillor Best did not concur in the view of the case. He believed the English road roller was the best manufactured, and thought that new rollers should be invited.

This contention was unsupported, however, and the representatives of the two companies present were asked to present new tenders for a 15-ton steam road roller, to be delivered on May 1st, 1899, and paid for in cash when proved satisfactory.

The gentlemen retired and in a few minutes returned with the following tenders:

Buffalo Pitts Roller, $2,950
Russell Roller, 3,000
The weight of each roller was specified at 31,050 lbs.

Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Deane, that the Council purchase the Buffalo Pitts steam roller at $2,950.

Moved by amendment, by Councillor Hamilton, seconded by Councillor Robertson, that the Council purchase the Russell steam road roller at $3,000.

On the vote being taken the amendment was declared carried.

The various matters followed:

Yates—Those in favor of buying the Russell roller at $3,000—J. M. White, Cobb, Hamilton, Robertson, W. H. White and Allen.—6.

Nash—Those in favor of the Buffalo roller at $2,950—Mayor Davis, McWilliams, Meldrum, Dawson and White.—5.

Mr. Best refused to vote.

The Russell roller at a cost of $3,000 will, consequently, become an asset of the town next May.

The meeting then adjourned.

The Champion Fire

A gentleman who furnished the Evening Post with the following is easily a chief among champion liars.

"A traveller who came from Peterboro this morning reported a disgraceful row in the town last evening. The Ontario Inquirer visited that town yesterday to play the deciding match for the senior championship of the district league. According to the report given when Peterboro sports found that the visitors were winning 'busts down' they encouraged the home men to go on for 'slugging,' and a number of players on both teams received serious wounds. The game was finally adjourned and the Ontario Inquirer left the ground to catch their train, followed by a howling mob. As the station over a thousand people had gathered and the Ontario Inquirer received very rough treatment at the hands of a Peterboro toughman who was cheered and encouraged by the large crowd who were watching the disgraceful scene. And such is sport."

Obituary Notice

Miss Margaret J. Hickey, aged 32 years, daughter of Mr. J. W. Hickey, of Ashburnham, died at St. Joseph's Hospital on Sunday. The deceased had been ill with an attack of typhoid fever for some weeks and not being strong constitutionally, was unable to withstand the debilitating effects of the fever. Possessed as she was of a beautiful disposition her loss will be universally felt in this village. The funeral will leave the family residence, Lake at Ashburnham, today at 11 a.m., and proceed to the G. T. R. station, from where the remains will be taken to Port Hope for interment.

The Oshawa Sentinel-Star says: Yesterday there was laid at rest in St. Peter's cemetery one of the most respected and well known old ladies of Coburg. We refer to the late Mrs. Jane B. Moyer, relict of the late Thomas Moyer. The deceased was a native of Cornwall, England, where she was married and came to Canada over 40 years ago, and settled in Coburg. Her husband was drowned at the breaking away of the factory dam 34 years ago, where two other citizens also lost their lives at the same time. The old lady, who came in from Peterboro four weeks ago, was visiting at the residence of Mrs. W. B. Thomas, Ball street, where she died after a few days illness at the ripe old age of 74 years. Of seven children—four boys and three girls—two survive, Mrs. Edward Carr, of Peterboro and Mr. A. Moyer, of Toronto. Mrs. Moyer was much beloved by a very large number of friends, being remarkable for her kindness of heart and her geniality of disposition.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

happenings in Town and District During the Past Twenty-four Hours

—Constable McGinty shot a dog yesterday morning.

—The Ben York trio gave a free concert in the rotunda of the Oriental hotel last evening.

—Chief Roszel has a pair of boots that were picked up on the street on Saturday night. They were purchased at Neill's.

—The large stone building in Bobacreegan owned by the Orrate, and long used by a summer resort, is advertised for sale.

—The Oriental has just come out of the carriage shop refitted and repainted in a highly decorative garb of paint.

—A get-to, London prize ring rules, which occurred at the Grand Central hotel last evening, created great excitement for the time.

—James McKenna, a G.T.R. fireman enroute from Montreal to Toronto to attend the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, was killed at Morrisburg.

—On Saturday evening a cow belonging to Mr. W. Thompson, Ashburnham, was struck by a shooting train on the old Lackfield track leading into the Dickson Co's lumber yards and thrown down a high bank. She had to be afterwards killed.

—Referring to the proposal Methodist conference to establish a connectional fire insurance company, "Don't In Saturday Night" gets off the following:—"The members of the denomination will have reason to congratulate themselves in possessing cheap and reliable insurance against fire, not only in the world to come, but as well in the world in which we live."

—Mrs. Lalonde, of Brockville, looked out of her window and saw a valise floating down the St. Lawrence river near the docks. She rescued the valise upon opening it was horrified to find that it contained the body of a well-developed female infant. An inquest was opened and was adjourned for a week. The valise is supposed to belong to one of the barges at the dock.

—At a meeting of the Executive of the Coburg Association, which was held Saturday morning, it was decided that the annual convention which is this year to be held in Ashburnham, would convene on Oct. 14 and continue in session for two days. Amos, the speakers present on this occasion will be Mr. Scott of the Toronto Normal School, who will deliver several addresses on subjects to be selected and which will be announced at a later date.

—The following from the Kootenai, Kelso, British Columbia, mentions as a mine owner a Peterboro boy. Mr. Bob Stevenson, eldest son of Mr. J. T. Stevenson, of the Peterboro group, owned by H. M. Richardson, R. Pollock, R. J. Simpson, J. C. Hinton and J. M. Latham, consisting of a group of 5 claims, were leased on Aug. 13th at the head of Davis Creek. Sample assays were made yesterday by Jas. Cook, and the holders are confident they have a big property if further indications count for anything. Some gamblers appear in the lead which assayed 60 ounces in silver. A picked sample ran $81.02 in free mining gold, while an average of the lead taken over 2,000 ft. ran $26.40 in gold. The owners will run a crew of men to work at once developing the property.

Toronto's Sept. 12.—There is no excuse for the lacrosse match on Saturday. Toronto should have won, and really had won, when they went down in one of those gigantic dumps for which they are celebrated. The game of lacrosse was Toronto's 4. Nationals 2. With Toronto coming strong. After that Toronto could have taken a valuable lesson from any third team on earth, and at the end the score was Toronto 4. Nationals 4.

The game was not an excellent exhibition, and there was rough play at times.

When the Shamrocks defeated the Nationals and it was too dark to play, but consented to go out for a time. After a short time they refused to go on further.

The surprise of the day, however, was when the Shamrocks defeated the Nationals, which goes to show that the Toronto team has no corner on rackets, and such like articles, which, when properly applied, make good teams play like a dozen donkeys.

The standing now is as follows:

Capitals	Winn.	Lost	Toplay.
Cornwall	5	2	1
Nationals	4	4	0
Toronto	3	2	1
Shamrocks	2	5	1

HANDBALL

The first game in the Eastern League season in Toronto was between Rochester and Toronto. The last game in Toronto was played on Saturday, and was between Ontario and the United States.

The first game was between Ontario and the United States, and again Ontario won. The forewell performance was double headed, and out of the bunch of games Toronto picked out one.

In the first game Baker pitched, and Gordon, a local man, started to catch. The game went to Toronto by 10 runs to 2.

In the second game Williams pitched, and Toronto lost by 13 runs to 8.

The other games played on Saturday and Sunday resulted as follows:

Buffalo 7, Montreal 5
Montreal 10, Buffalo 2
Montreal 9, Buffalo 0
Providence 6, Springfield 4
Windsor 5, Syracuse 11

Secretary A. L. Richardson of the Hamilton Club was in Toronto yesterday and signed Mr. Halsey and Gains to finish the season with the Hants. Chatham plays in Hamilton today and tomorrow. On Wednesday and Thursday they go to St. Thomas, and the last two days of the week they play London in Hamilton.

Friday they go to St. Thomas.

The standing at the end was as follows:

Matinee	Winn.	Lost	Per.
Windsor	68	47	591
Wilkes-Barre	61	49	551
Ontario	64	55	546
Buffalo	62	58	516
Providence	57	59	491
Syracuse	52	63	452
Springfield	48	63	432
Ottawa	53	71	427

CYCLING

Montreal has received the world's bicycle meet for 1899. A cable was received from H. L. Donly, who represented Canada at the big meet in Vienna, yesterday, in which he says that Canada got the meet as promised, and that nearly all the crack professional and amateur riders who competed at the Vienna meet have given their words to be in Canada next year. The local committee and the Queen's Park officers are rejoicing at securing the meet, and declare they will give the foreigners the greatest reception they received. The meet will take place early in September.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES

ANARCHISTS QUAKING

Fear the Crime will Close the Last European Refuge

PLOT STARTED IN LONDON

Police Have Reason to Think that it Was Concocted in London

British Detectives Very Active in Investigating the Advocates of the Knife and the Torch

London, Sept. 12.—The terrible news of the assassination of Empress Elizabeth has thrilled Europe from end to end, and everywhere but one question is asked: How can society protect itself against Anarchism?

Special detectives from every capital describe the effect produced, and quite newspaper comments that pulverize with better indignation the anarchists and did nothing but good should be selected at the moment of the approaching jubilee for the assassin's knife.

ITALY GRIEVED AND ASHAMED.

Perhaps the most poignant grief is displayed in Italy, because the public mind there is troubled with shame that so many political crimes have been committed by Italians. King Humbert, with his own hands wrote a telegram, expressing the deepest sympathy.

The Pope wired Emperor Francis Jozsef as follows: "May God give the strength of resignation to our dear son Joseph, who in so short a period has been tried by so many misfortunes.
We pray that God may bestow upon the house of Hapsburg that peace and tranquillity which it merits by reason of its sentiments toward the Church and the papacy."

BRITISH POLICE ALERT.

The murder has caused much excitement in Anarchist circles in London.
Chief Inspector Melville has recently redoubled the vigilance of the detectives in Scotland Yard. If the detective department here be rightly informed, the assassin's name is Luchies. A relative of Luchies, prominent in advanced sections of the Anarchist propaganda, had been a fortnight ago, according to a report.

It is suggested that in consequence of the precautions taken for the protection of the Queen of Holland being so complete that no chance of success presented itself, the Anarchists may have turned their attention to the Empress of Austria, as in view of the intended jubilee celebration in Vienna, the Austrian Emperor and Empress had been specially marked out as possible victims of Anarchist vengeance.

THE REBELS IN A PANIC.

A reporter visited the principal Anarchist clubs in the west end of London. The members were clearly in a frightened condition of mind, being aware that they were subjects of close attention on the part of the detectives, who are maintaining an incessant watch on known dangerous Anarchists on the possibility that some of them may be connected in connection with the plot against the Empress of Austria.

It is fully expected in Anarchist quarters that this assassination will be made ground for a strong protest from European governments to England and the United States to take prompt international action against Anarchism. There is unquestionably a wave of feeling in that direction in England already, so that the Anarchists are quaking lest their last European refuge be closed to them.

A FEARFUL BLOW.

Geneva, Switzerland, Sept. 12.—The post-mortem examination of the remains of the late Empress of Austria has revealed that the weapon completely transfixed the heart, penetrating three and one-half inches and making a wound one-third of an inch wide. The fact that her majesty walked fifty yards to the steamer is ascribed to her remarkable will power and natural energy.

SWISS SYMPATHY.

Geneva, Sept. 12.—The body has been enclosed in a triple coffin and placed in a roomy and comfortable mortuary chamber. The walls of this apartment are veiled with black drapery, covered with silver stars, and several systems of charity are continually on their knees beside the hier, praying for the soul of the departed.
The imposing demonstration of sympathy organized by the Federal Council commenced at noon to-day. The approaches of the Hotel des Bains were guarded by gendarmes. The procession was headed by gendarmes with arms reversed. Then came four bearers, with a casket and long cloaks half yellow and half red. Their leader bore a grape-covered mace. They were followed by the members of the Government, the members of the Diplomatic Corps, and the civic dignities. Then came a great mass of the population of Geneva. In close ranks the people defiled bare-headed before the hotel, in front of the prison. In the meantime the historical bell of the cathedral of the St. Clemente clanged heavily.

The procession lasted over an hour.
The majority of the stores were closed.

FACTS ABOUT HEALTH

It is Easy to Keep Well if We Know How—Some of the Conditions Necessary to Perfect Health.

The importance of maintaining good health is easily understood, and it is really a simple matter if we take a correct view of the conditions required.
In perfect health the stomach promptly digests food, and thus prepares nourishment. The blood is employed to carry this nourishment to the organs, nerves, muscles and tissues which need it. The first great essential for good health, therefore, is pure, rich blood. Now it is certainly a fact that no medicine has such a record of cures as Hood's Sarsaparilla.
It is literally true that there are hundreds of people alive and well today who would have been in their graves had they not taken Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is depended upon as a family medicine and general regulator of the system by tens of thousands of people. This is because Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood pure. This is the secret of its great success. Keep your system in good health by keeping your blood pure with Hood's Sarsaparilla, which absolutely cures when other medicines fail to do any good whatever.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

ARREST IN NAPANEE CASE

Frank Lefebvre Had Forged Bills in His Possession

Montreal, Sept. 12.—Frank Lefebvre has been arrested at Gentilly, near Three Rivers, Que., and it is evident that the arrest will have an important bearing of the coming trial of Ponton, Pitre, et al at Napanee. It has already been told of the passing of some of the Dominion Bank Napanee forged ten dollar bills at Three Rivers during the recent exhibition, of the arrest, and honorable acquittal of a well known Montreal saloon keeper. With his acquittal came the search for the men who were handling the bills. They had been passed on many people, and there was no doubt that a great number were in the hands of the people of the neighborhood.

Secretary Collins of the Montreal Department went to Three Rivers and took up the search. He learned that an effort had been made by a man to open an account at the Hotel de la Bank. Manager Herbert of the bank detected about twenty of the forged bills in the $1800 which the man wanted to deposit. He declined to allow the account to be opened. The stranger said that he had been advised to go to the bank by a man named Tourigny of Gentilly, and from the description of the man who wanted to open the account he arrested Frank Lefebvre, who admitted that he had the alleged bills, knew that they were forged and passed some of them. He said that he got them from his wife, and she in turn said she received them from a bank, but declined to say which one. She too is held to await enquiries.

A search of Lefebvre's house was made and $450 ing old, $200 in American bills, and $300 in Canadian bills was found. The two were taken to Three Rivers and will come before a magistrate to-day or Monday.

BAIL FOR MACKIE

Napanee, Ont., Sept. 12.—Judge Price of Kingston came here to-day by appointment to fix the amount of bail for Robert Mackie who has been confined in jail since the preliminary investigation of the bank robbery case. The judge fixed the amount of bail at $25-00 for two sureties and Mackie's own bond for $5000. It is understood that Mackie will be here on Monday to arrange for his release.

BIG RAILWAY DEAL

American Syndicate said to Have Purchased the N. C. R.

St. Catharines, Sept. 12.—Negotiations just completed with, in all likelihood, result in the taking over by an American syndicate of capitalists of the Niagara Central Railway. Mr. E.
A. C. Peas, the celebrated railroad promoter, and another gentleman have made an inspection of the road, and have arranged to buy Mr. Newell out, and complete the purchase of the road.
Cheques for the amount charged hands and the bargain is closed.

It is the intention of the company is at once put the present road in good repair, and also to build the road to Port Dalhousie. The road will be equipped with heavy electric motors, capable of hauling both passenger and freight trains.

When spoken to, Mr. Newell received nothing to say, though he did not deny that the story as to the sale of the road was true.

It is said that Mr. Newell receives $1,000 over the price he tendered for the road, besides having offered a considerable sum under the new company.

Scrofula, hip disease, salt rheum, dyspepsia and other diseases due to impure blood are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

TESTIMONIALS:

The following are a few from scores of testimonials the Sergt. Major has from people who have used this preparation:

I, Henry Thomas, Street Car Conductor, residing at 180 Sumach Street, Toronto, Ont., do hereby certify that my hair was falling out for eight to ten years until the top of my head was quite bald. I tried every hair preparation on the market and could get nothing to do me any good until I commenced to use Mr. Kenny's Hair Restorer. One bottle stopped the hair falling and started a new growth. I am now using the third One Dollar Bottle, and my hair is growing thick and vigorous all over my head. I can therefore recommend Kenny's Hair Restorer as the best known remedy for restoring the hair on bald heads. I am only using the Hair Restorer since 13th October last.

H. THOMAS, Toronto.

OUT OF THE FIRE.

The little town of Graham was then a quiet, comfortable place when it was reported that George Stapleton, one of its leading citizens and most prominent business men, had failed for a large sum of money. The news was a shock to the community. Stapleton had been a successful business man for many years, and his failure was a great disappointment to his friends and the town.

ENES IN CONSTANTINOPLE

The era of roads and wheels is preceded by the era of beasts of burden, and in some countries, and especially in Turkey, the extent to which men and animals are used as beasts of burden may be seen as a measure of the civilization and of the success in overcoming physical difficulties. We saw this strikingly proved by contrasting Constantinople with Athens. In Constantinople any amount of baggage, enough for a camel, is packed on the back of an Albanian porter or "hamal," who trots away with it cheerily up the steep streets. In Athens half the population would be put into a cart. A Greek porter, however, is a creature of the middle ages; but then he makes good roads, and a horse and carriage can work in this way, the Turks are not unfavorably contrasted with some parts of Italy.

The heaviest loads are carried up the hills bounding the Lago Maggiore by men; they frequently carry enough to load a pack horse. I have seen women carrying travellers on their backs up steep hills. Women, degraded though in other ways, are rarely made to do this in Turkey. Intelligence, energy and humanity concur in lessening the load the poor women have to carry. Where these qualities are found, and wheels are soon constructed. In Constantinople the roads are very bad, and wheels are still greatly supplied by animals. The best way to get about the town is on horseback. Horses are very intelligent, and can go through narrow, steep rough streets where no wheel can go. Even the grand street of Pera, the main thoroughfare, is in places so narrow that two carriages can hardly pass abreast, and more than one footpath, which is frequently broken, and the passengers have to seek what refuge they can in doorways or by flitting themselves against the walls, if not in possession, and the Constantinople are jealous of their rights.

On this grand street there diverge all sorts of angles side streets or what run down to the shore; these indescribable, steep, crooked, dirty, rough, big, builders, big holes, and intricate windings, sharp, narrow, for stout legs, sound wind, and outlook, and all the patience a traveller can command to carry him safely; and now and then he must draw breath, to rest from a while or to avoid a calamitous result for many of these infernal-the, or something as bad, is often met by painful wrenches-ways again go. "Guard! guard!" from drivers is the warning answer to all occasions.

It is upon the whole wiser not to start. No cursing, however loud and yells, will induce the Turk to heed his passenger, he is the most typical impersonation of nonchalance in the world; his energy is passive, his strength is the inertia. Why should he make such roads for dogs and (thousand) many of these streets the carriage. The hired vehicles themselves are fair. The broughams are far better than the London growler. They are in London and Paris. They are hired by two or three horses could drag them up the hills. The drivers are mostly Greeks, and are smart enough in extorting excess fares. The most way of circulating is on horseback. Horses, with English saddles, and for hire like ours. They are pretty strong animals; they can find out where wheels cannot.

VIVAL OF AN ANCIENT JEST

The ancient jest regarding the ditto was revived in Cleveland not long ago, and it loomed little of its sparkle because of its age.

Into the office of a local manufacturer, who produces wire and the hardware specialties, an elderly stranger from out of town recently called.

"This here bill," he remarked, "is long. You've added where ye should have subtracted."

"How's that?" inquired the bookkeeper.

"You've got me charged with $20 when I don't owe you but $12," replied a stranger.

"But I don't see how you can make it out," said the bookkeeper, as he looked at the bill. "Here's one item $16 and another of $4. That certainly aggregates $20."

Well, said the aged party, "I'm perfectly willing to stand by the bill. It's my own bill, you know, and I'll pay just what it calls for."

Well, it calls for $20."

Yes, it does add up, but not subtracted."

"What in the world do you mean?"

"I mean this," said the aged party. "And he spread the bill flat on the counter. The bookkeeper glanced at it. In these are the items he read—

to Mr. Phineas T. Blank iron wheelbarrows at $4.00 each $16 wooden one do at $4.00 each $4 $20

"Kindly tell me," said the bookkeeper, "how you figure that total any lower."

The aged customer's eyes flashed triumphantly.

"Easy," he cried. "Here you've charged me for four wheelbarrows. That's all right. And then right now you say that one wouldn't do, but instead of taking off the $4, you add it. Here's your $12."

THEIR PRIVATE CLAUQUE

Two of the French singers who went this year to Covent Garden introduced the practice of having a claque present at their performances, and the device was so obvious that the newspapers expressed their disapproval of the scheme. But that did not discourage the singers, who continued to require the services of their handclappers.

The most notable offenders in this respect were M. Renaud, the baritone, and Mme. Heglon, the dramatic soprano, who came over especially to sing the role of Anne Boleyn in "Henry VIII." It was explained by a friend of the two singers that they had become accustomed to the presence of the claque of the opera in Paris, and were unable to do themselves justice when they did not receive applause at certain stages of the performance. English audiences are not demonstrative and in the case of new operas they applaud very little. The artists in their best scenes felt the need of audible recognition, having been accustomed either to the claque of the enthusiasm of some continental cities, and so Mme. Heglon and M. Renaud had to provide a claque of their own. Following the action of Director Mahler, who not only abolished the professional claque in Vienna, but also forbade the singers to send tickets to their friends in such numbers as to constitute of them a claque, the English incident has revived interest in the subject. Somebody has dug up a story about Frederic Lemaitre and Mme. Dorval, who were acting together in a play called "Pablo" at the Ambigu in Paris. They were equally popular, and they were applauded with impartial enthusiasm by the spectators. The claque was just as disconcerting in its applause of the two actors. This fact was intensely irritating to Lemaitre, who was not in the habit of sharing the favor of the claque of the audience with anybody. He rushed to the manager of the theatre, after the echoes of the applause which the claque had bestowed on Mme. Dorval had almost spoiled one of his speeches, and complained that the claque was a nuisance and ought to be driven out of the theatre. Mme. Dorval, who entered the room just at that time, said she considered it an admirable institution.

"What is the use of so much hired handclapping? Clear the pit of all those fellows, and leave the public to do its own applause," retorted Lemaitre.

"Certainly," replied the manager; "to-morrow there will be no claque."

True to his word, he discharged the hired applauders. The public that night, accustomed to be led by the claque, remained silent. Lemaitre could not endure it, and secretly engaged a claque for the next performance. Mme. Dorval was driven to distraction by the fact that all the applause went to Lemaitre, and engaged a second claque to appoint her. The other actors of the company, not accustomed to being ignored, also engaged a claque. Next morning the manager, who had been convinced that it was he who had paid them false and hired the men to applaud.

"I am innocent," he answered, "but there are now three clagues instead of one. Mme. Dorval hires one of them, M. Lemaitre hires the other and the actors pay for the third. The only advantage of the new arrangement is that I do not have to pay for any."

The claque has been for many years the subject of investigation and discussion in Europe, but it is difficult to get rid of. It is nearly as potent in Paris today as it was forty years ago, and there is little probability that it will get rid of for a long time to come. Everybody ridicules it, and declares it a nuisance and a disgrace, but it survives.

STATION AGENT REVOLTED

A dust-covered report that was unearthed the other day in the office of the purchasing agent of the Northern Pacific Railroad recalled an incident of the Villard regime that was funny.

Henry Villard came West before he had in his train a man who goes to be known as "the tailor." Why he was so called is a secret belonging to the past. Villard left him here. He did a little of everything, and what he "went" with most of the officers, because he was strong with the man at the top. It occurred to "the tailor" one day that what the Northern Pacific lacked more than anything else was uniformed station agents. The one thing that was needed to make the road a real good thing was a lovely suit on every tank tender in every pump station. He proceeded to execute his project and put them in uniform. He had queer ideas about discipline, probably acquired on the Government-controlled roads of Germany, and he asked no questions. He acted. He made a contract for the uniform and told the tailor to send him a couple of men to do the measuring and he would have the suits, height, weight and build of every station agent on the road in four days. The men were supplied him, and he sent them to the general superintendent's office and had this telegram sent—

"To all agents. Be on the platform in shirt sleeves and trousers when No. 7 train arrives."

He vouchsafed no information, but got on the train with his tailor, and the train stopped. It was rapid work, but eminently successful until they arrived at a little station up in Dakota. Then it came to a finish. "The tailor"

BIG RAILWAY DEAL

American Syndicate said to have Purchased the N. C. R.

St. Catharines, Sept. 12.—Negotiations just completed will, in all likelihood, result in the taking over by an American syndicate of capitalists of the Niagara Central Railway. Mr. E. A. C. Pew, the celebrated railroad promoter, and another gentleman have made an inspection of the road, and have arranged to buy Mr. Neelon out, and complete the purchase of the road. Cheques for the amount changed hands and the bargain is closed.

It is the intention of the company to at once put the present road in good repair, and also to build the road to Port Dalhousie. The road will be equipped with heavy electric motors, capable of hauling both passenger and freight trains.

When spoken to, Mr. Neelon had nothing to say, though he did not deny that the story as to the sale of the road was true.

It is said that Mr. Neelon receives $1,000 over the price he tendered for the road, besides being offered a position under the new company.

HOW SHE WAS TROUBLED

Sole Manufacturer and Proprietor. Beware of Imitations.

TESTIMONIALS:

The following are a few from scores of testimonials the Sergt. Major has from people who have used this preparation:

I. Henry Thomas, Street Car Conductor, residing at 100 Sumach Street, Toronto, East, do hereby certify that my hair was falling out for about ten years until the top of my head was quite bald. I tried every hair preparation on the market and could get nothing to do me any good until I commenced to use Mr. Kenny's Hair Restorer. One bottle stopped the hair falling and started a new growth. I am now using the third One Dollar Bottle, and my hair is growing thick and vigorous all over my head. I can therefore recommend Kenny's Hair Restorer as the best known remedy for restoring the hair on bald heads. I am only using the Hair Restorer since 13th October last.

AN INDIAN CRADLE SONG.

Swing thee low in thy cradle bed,
Dumb in the drowsy mood,
Swing thee low and swing thee slow—
Sleep as a poppy should.

For safe in your little birchen nest
Quiet will come and peace and rest,
If the little poppy is good.

The coyote howls on the prairie cold,
And the owl hoots in the tree,
And the big moon shines on the little child
As it slumbers peacefully.

So swing thee high in the little nest
And swing thee low and take the rest
That the night wind brings to thee!

Father lies on the fragrant ground,
Dreaming of hunt and fight,
And the pine leaves rustle with mournful sound.

All through the solemn night:
But the little poppy in his birchen nest
Is swinging low as he takes his rest.
Till the sun brings the morning light.

—Southern Workman.

THE DERELICT.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS.

I was second mate of the American brig Ruby, bound from Java to New York, and all had gone well with us for a fortnight, when accident brought about a curious adventure. Just as night was closing down, with the brig sailing along on an even keel and the breeze steady, I swung myself upon the rail to get a look at what seemed to be a raft floating past us. I may have been overcautious or a rope may have given way, but of a sudden I found myself in the water. The man at the wheel witnessed my mishap and gave the alarm and threw me the life preserver always ready for such an emergency, and I had no doubt of being picked up within ten minutes. I had seized the float, when down thundered a black squall from out of the west, and next moment it was as dark as midnight and the sea all in a chop. I felt that it was all over with me then. The man at the wheel brought the brig through the fierce squall without thinking of me. Indeed, if she had had 100 men on board instead of 12, they would not have dared to lower a boat. I got just one glimpse of the craft as she shot away into the darkness and then began to work to get the life preserver under my arm. I was buffeted and knocked about in the most confusing manner, and had the squall lasted five minutes longer I should have been drowned on the surface. It passed away as suddenly as it came, and ten minutes later the sea had calmed down, and I was floating with my head well out of the water.

I had got overboard at about 7 o'clock in the evening. For the first three hours my hopes and fears made me alert, but by and by I felt a dull languor and was only half conscious of what was going on. An hour after midnight I was suddenly aroused from what seemed to be a troubled dream. I was bumping against something hard, and my first idea was that I had been cast ashore.

It took me several minutes to shake myself together and make out that I was alongside the hull of a vessel. It was hard to credit the fact, but fact it was, and when I realized it I had scarcely more to do than lift up my hands and seize the low rail and draw myself inboard. I had found a derelict brig. Both masts were gone close to the deck, much of her bulwarks swept away, and I knew by the feel of her that she was waterlogged. I took one glance over her and no more, but clamped myself down on the deck and was asleep in five seconds. When I opened my eyes, the sun was an hour high, and a big steamer was poised directly above me and not 50 feet high. It did not take me long to master the details of the wreck. In the first place, she was loaded with Australian redwood and could not sink beyond a certain point; next, she had been floating about for months and months. There was some wreckage on her deck, but masts and yards and boats and booms had gone clear off her as they fell. She had settled down until her scupper holes were only a few inches above water, but owing to the buoyant cargo she could not sink deeper. As a sailor I made her out to be a French craft, and later on I discovered that she was the Marie of Brest. She was a small craft, carrying a crew of eight or nine men, and was a forecastle ship instead of having a deckhouse for the men. The cabins or cook's galley had gone overboard with the rest, but the doors of the cabin and the scuttle to the forecastle were tightly closed. The brig had been wrecked aloft in equal or gale and had at the same time sprung a leak. Whether her crew had been washed overboard or taken to the boats there was no means of telling until I had made an investigation below.

The first thing was to get something to eat and drink. After a few minutes' work I broke open the cabin doors and got into the pantry. There was wine in plenty, as might have been expected, and I soon came across some meat and biscuits in tins. I wanted water, but there was none to be had, and so, taking what I could lay hands on, I went on deck and made a fair meal. When this had been concluded, I returned to the cabin for an overhaul. All the charts and nautical instruments were there, nor had any of the spare clothing of captain or mates been taken away. I found the logbook, and though I could not read French I made out the latitude and longitude last recorded. As near as I could figure it out the brig was then midway between Australia and the Cape, and the date was nearly seven months old. She had drifted to every point of the compass, but must have drifted nearly 2,000 miles to the north to reach the spot where I found her. It was noon before I began an examination of the lazarette to see how I should fare for provisions. I found flour, wine, table water, preserves, boxes of biscuits, choice bacon, codfish and other articles in liberal quantity—enough to last one man for months. Forward of the cabin I found a storehouse, in which were several barrels of beef and pork, with four barrels of coarse flour, dried fish, beans, coffee, tea and other articles of food for the men. Forward of this were the water casks, a dozen or more, and all full. When I came to examine the forecastle, I found boots, oilskins, sweaters and other belongings of the crew, to prove that they had not gone away in the boat. Indeed I was sure before I had half concluded my investigation that every man had perished when the brig was wrecked. It was night before I had finished, and I tumbled into the captain's berth and never slept more soundly. You may think it queer that during the day I had casually glanced around the horizon and given no thought to rescue, and that I went to bed with a contented mind, but sailors are prone to take luck as it comes, good or bad. I had made a miraculous escape and was fairly safe on the wreck, and there was nothing to worry over if not taken off for weeks. Interested as I was in overhauling the stranger, I would not have tossed up a penny to be taken off by a passing vessel.

When morning came again I made a more thorough investigation of the cabin. In rear of the captain's stateroom I chanced upon a closet which had escaped me the day before, and here I made a great find. There was about $1,000 in French gold and notes, $1,300 in English goldpieces and exactly $7,000 in goldpieces just struck off at the Australian mint. The money was in two tin boxes, but whether it belonged to the ship, her captain or to other people I could not determine. It was a big fortune to a poor sailor, and I remember that I acted very foolishly over the find. I counted it over and over again, and when I at last realized that I was rich I rushed on deck, with a wild hope of seeing a sail close at hand. But for the money I believe that the long days and nights which followed would have been rather contentful for me, isolated as the situation was. I had plenty to eat and drink, there was nothing to break my sleep, the wreck might drive where she would, but there was no danger of her going down. The discovery of the money was followed by a hope of rescue, and this again by worry and anxiety. I wanted to go ashore to enjoy my wealth. I feared that when rescue did come I should be robbed. I conjured up a thousand senseless fears, and the upshot was anything but beneficial. I have spoken of the general situation in a careless way. As a matter of fact, being a navigator, I took observations regularly when the weather permitted and picked off the drift of the wreck on the chart. On the average the weather was fine, but there were days and nights when gale and sea tumbled the waterlogged craft about until only a miller could have lived through it. Instead of lifting her waves ran over her, and at such times the decks were two feet under water and the cabin was flooded. The cargo was afloat with the water in the hold, and as the wreck rolled and pitched the timbers rubbed together and produced noises which would have frightened landmen into fits.

I kept an accurate reckoning, and I had been on the wreck just 40 days when I caught sight of my first sail. No doubt ships had passed and repassed by day and night, but I could not see a signal by day and from the first I slept all through the night. This sail was discovered early one morning, coming up from the south, and her course was such that she must see me. I had put the money into bags and the bags into bundles of clothing in view of a rescue, and therefore had nothing to do but wait. The stranger, which proved to be an English merchantman bound for India, but considerably off her course, was within four miles of me and had sent a signal to gladden my heart when a big whale suddenly broke water close to the wreck. He was followed half a minute later by a second, which attacked him with great fury. The monsters put up a terrific battle, leaping and biting each other and kicking up a sea like a gale of wind. They at first drew away from me, but after a few minutes made a circle which brought them back. What I had feared from the first came to pass after a quarter of an hour. Half blinded by pain and fury, or feeling itself overwhelmed and desirous of getting away, one of the whales suddenly whirled about and came for the wreck head on. He was fully 80 feet long, and he came like a moving mountain. I made sure of my hold as I saw him coming, but he struck the wreck on her port side with such force that I was thrown across the deck and into the sea beyond. I heard the crash of planks and timbers, was tossed about by the waves, rubbed against the whale as he sounded and reached the surface to find the wreck a hull no longer. It was simply a heap of floating debris. The strange ship drew nearer, lowered a boat, and I was picked up as I clung to a plank. The money was gone, all else but the timbers which composed the cargo had disappeared, and my adventure, surprising as it had begun, had ended in the most imaginative novelist. I was carried to India by the rescuing ship, and I know that the French consul at Calcutta set inquiries on foot regarding the fate of the crew of the Marie. What they amounted to I never learned, but have always felt satisfied that all perished when their craft was dismantled. But for the fight between the whales I believe the brig could have been pumped out and sailed into port, but fortune is a jade who robs Jack Tar far oftener than she smiles upon him.

Wholesale Bribery Defeated John Dryden

W. SMITH, EX M.P., INVOLVED

A Witness Says That Smith Gave Him Money to "Change 20 Voters"

Sensational Evidence Produced in the South Ontario Election Case which Surprised Counsel for Calder

Whitby, Sept. 13.—Yesterday afternoon counsel for Hon. John Dryden, produced sensational evidence in the South Ontario election case and surprised counsel for Calder, M.P., who asked for delay in terms which indicated that to-day the sponge might be thrown up and the seat vacated. An offer was made, privately, it was said, to give up the seat, each party to pay its costs, but John Dryden declined to agree.

A LITTLE MYSTERIOUS.

Mr. R. G. Baird, secretary of the Young Conservative Association at Port Perry, was called on to give evidence as to who are members of that club. At a meeting of the club Mr. Calder "gave some very useful hints as to the mode of conducting our campaign, which were apparently much appreciated by the members." This is an entry from the club minutes. The club minutes also showed that the names of young Conservative committeemen in Port Perry were to remain unknown to the members. Mr. Baird did not know any reason for this mystery.

$2 FOR HIS VOTE.

John Sherin, a voter at Cedarvale, said Edwin Baker had called on him and asked him to vote for Mr. Calder. He called me up to the front room, said Sherin, and put $2 on a table. He told me that after the election he would give me more, but he never did. After I picked up the bill I went right in with him and voted.

Mr. Nesbitt then took the witness. He has been in jail twice, a few days on each occasion, but it was forgetting drunk and spending his own money. Since the court must be had only had one glass of beer with a man with a black moustache and red whiskers.

A roar of laughter greeted this. Judge Adler turned angrily to the audience and said it was a wretched exhibition of human iniquity that was being given, and that people should be and grin as it was beyond his comprehension.

BUYING CEDARDALE VOTERS.

Mr. E. Baker, the person whose Sherin had accused of bribery was then called. Mr. Hollman asked him if he desired the protection of the court for any purpose. The witness replied that he did not. "Is it necessary to tell anything?" Proceeding, the witness told of getting a list of Cedarvale voters from Secretary Burns, of meeting Mr. Calder during the election on several occasions, and Mr. Wm. Smith, ex-M.P. The latter he met several times and discussed with him the outlook in Cedarvale. Baker told Smith the vote in Cedarvale needed looking after closely. Mr. Smith asked witness if he could make a change of twenty votes around Cedarvale. Witness replied that he could do it, and Mr. Smith told him to go ahead and do it.

20 VOTES FOR $100.

At this stage Mr. Justice Oler read the provision of the law permitting a witness to seek the protection of the court when about to make some statement that might incriminate him, and Baker, with manifest relief, claimed the protection of the law. "I told Mr. Smith," said he, "that I thought twenty votes could be changed for $100. He said he would give it to me, and I was to go on and contract for the votes and he would make the amount good. He gave me $100 at that interview, and said I was to spend it at the two hotels at Cedarvale. I took it and went it at the hotels, canvassing for Mr. Calder.

"Before the election," he continued, "I met Mr. Smith at the Queen's hotel in Ottawa and he told me that he would arrange with Mr. Luke to give me the $100 next day. I went to Lewis Luke and told him that Mr. Smith said I was to have $100 for Cedarvale. Luke said he only had $40 and would give him no more. I got the $40."

A LIST OF $5 MEN.

In answer to further questions, Baker gave the following list of persons whose votes he bought for Mr. Calder with this money: John Sherin, $2, A. McGrail $5, Patrick Sherin $5, Fred McLean, $5, Wm. Hays $5, James McGrail $5, Arthur Stapleton $5, John McGrail $5.

He had also offered Mr. Morris $5 but he refused it and wanted $10. Those electors were all at Cedarvale. "I saw Mr. Smith," continued the witness, "a few days after the election, and made an appointment to meet him at the Queen's hotel, Ottawa. We went to a private room. Mr. Smith gave me an order on Lewis Luke for $30. We went over the list of voters I had bought, and Mr. Smith said that was all he could pay. I gave him a list and he took it with him. When I presented the order to Luke he said he had no money. I went back to Mr. Smith and he said it was strange; that Luke had the money, and that he, Mr. Smith, did not understand why he would not pay. I saw Luke again and he gave me the $30 in bills. That was the end of the transaction."

THE OCCUPATION OF CUBA

The Island will be Divided into Three Military Departments

Washington, Sept. 13.—One of the big questions of the week which will receive the consideration of the President and his advisers will be the organization of the army for the occupation of Cuba.

It has been practically decided to have three military departments, forming one grand military division, with a major-general of the regular army in command, who will perform the duties of military Governor. There is a possibility that Major-General Merritt may be given this joint command, though no decision has yet been reached on this point. The three military departments will be commanded, respectively, by Major-General Fitzhugh Lee, Seventh Army Corps, Major-General James H. Wilson, and Major-General Hawton, who is already in command at Santiago. These departments will have their headquarters at Havana, Santa Clara and Santiago, respectively. The troops in each will be scattered at different points throughout the island, wherever their presence may be required. It has been suggested to the President that he use volunteer troops only for his service. The plans being prepared, however, contemplate the use of all available regular troops.

THEIR PRIVATE CLAUQUE

Two of the French singers who went this year to Convent garden introduced the practice of having a claque present at their performances, and the device was so obvious that the newspapers expressed their disapproval of the scheme. But that did not discourage the singers, who continued to require the services of their handclappers.

The most notable offenders in this respect were M. Renaud, the baritone, and Mme. Heglon, the dramatic soprano, who came over especially to sing the role of Anne Boleyn in "Henry VIII." It was explained by a friend of the two singers that they had become accustomed to the presence of the claque of the opera in Paris, and were unable to do themselves justice when they did not receive applause at certain stages of the performance. English audiences are not demonstrative and in the case of new operas they applaud very little. The artists in their best scenes felt the need of audible recognition, having been accustomed either to the claque of the enthusiasm of some continental cities, and so Mme. Heglon and M. Renaud had to provide a claque of their own. Following the action of Director Mahler, who not only abolished the professional claque in Vienna, but also forbade the singers to send tickets to their friends in such numbers as to constitute of them a claque, the English incident has revived interest in the subject. Somebody has dug up a story about Frederic Lemaitre and Mme. Dorval, who were acting together in a play called "Pablo" at the Ambigu in Paris. They were equally popular, and they were applauded with impartial enthusiasm by the spectators. The claque was just as discriminating in its applause of the two actors. This fact was intensely irritating to Lemaitre, who was not in the habit of sharing the favor of the claque of the audience with anybody. He argued to the manager of the theatre, after the echoes of the applause which the claque had bestowed on Mme. Dorval had almost spoiled one of his speeches, and complained that the claque was a nuisance and ought to be driven out of the theatre. Mme. Dorval, who entered the room just at that time, said she considered it an admirable institution.

"What is the use of so much hired handclapping? Clear the pit of all those fellows, and leave the public to do its own applause," retorted Lemaitre.

"Certainly," replied the manager, "to-morrow there will be no claque." True to his word, he discharged the hired applauders. The public that night, accustomed to be led by the claque, remained silent. Lemaitre could not endure it, and secretly engaged a claque for the next performance. Mme. Dorval was driven to distraction by the fact that all the applause went to Lemaitre, and engaged a second claque to assist her. The other actors of the company, not accustomed to being ignored, also engaged a claque. Both principals went to the manager, convinced that it was he who had played them false and hired the men to applaud.

"I am innocent," he answered, "but there are now three clagues instead of one. Mme. Dorval hires one of them, M. Lemaitre hires the other and the actors pay for the third. The only advantage of the new arrangement is that I do not have to pay for any." The claque has been for many years the subject of investigation and discussion in Europe, but it is difficult to get rid of. It is nearly as patent in Paris today as it was forty years ago, and there is little probability that it will be got rid of for a long time to come. Everybody ridicules it, and declares it a nuisance and a disgrace, but it survives.

President McKinley is incensed at the report that the Spaniards in Porto Rico and Cuba are sending to Spain documents pertaining to the government and control of these islands. He has protested strongly, and announced that peace will not be declared until the papers have been returned.

Liver Trouble

When the yellow flag of quarantine is hoisted over a dwelling it means disease and danger. So when the yellow flag flies in the face—when the cheeks are sallow and the clear white of the eye is dyed saffron—there is danger. It is liver trouble. The liver is one of the most important organs of the body. On the proper discharge of its functions depend human health and happiness. When the liver fails of its duty, poisons at once begin to generate, and other organs of the body become involved. Never neglect the liver if you value health. If you are suffering from liver trouble, begin at once the use of AYER'S PILLS and you will find prompt relief and permanent cure.

"I was so weakened by liver trouble that I could scarcely lift my head. While in this condition I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and finding almost immediate benefit, continued their use until I was cured of my complaint."

Winning $50,000

The Department of Agriculture is this week distributing the sum of $70,000 to the directors of the various fairs, the majority of which are to be held throughout the province between the present time and the middle of October. The sum referred to is the annual subsidy paid by the Government in aid of the exhibitions and is being granted by many fair directors to enable them to complete their preparations.

The Spelman Reunion

On Saturday, Sept. 12, four brothers met at Hastings who had all been together before in fifteen years. They were Thomas Spelman of the Commercial Hotel, Oshawa, J. B. who keeps the American Hotel at Weehawken and Jimmie who is a bartender at the Bodega, Hunter St., Peterborough. They met at Art's in Hastings, and if any other family had reunited there would have been a hot time in Hastings that night, but as it was even things were a "wee bit warm."

Will take new lot

The hearing of both the Ottawa election protests was postponed until the end of October, as the result of motions before the magistrate in Chambers at Oshawa hall Tuesday. It is understood that this arrangement is for the purpose of saw-off. A postponement of the West Victoria trial, which is booked for the 27th of September, was moved for on the ground of the respondent evading examination. The motion was enlarged till yesterday. In the North Ontario case a postponement is also being applied for.

The Shooting Season

The close season for most of the game birds and animals of Ontario will end to-day. After that date, sportsmen may legally kill partridge, hares, grouse, pheasants, plovers, rail, quail, woodchuck, black and grey squirrels until December 15th. Geese and swans may be shot from September 15th till May 1st. Quail may be shot from October 15th to December 15th, and neither partridge, nor quail can be sold, no matter where taken, until 1900. The close season for speckled trout will begin on Thursday, and last until May 1st.

Robbed by Thieves

The residence of Mr. Jan. McCrory, 11 Walton St., entered by thieves Sunday night last and several articles were stolen and considerable damage done to furniture and other goods in the house. The house has been closed for some time. Mr. McCrory, being absent in the western states and Mrs. McCrory with the family being in Quebec, Ont., but the place was left just as when occupied. The matter of the burglary was not known by the neighbors until Tuesday. Several articles of silverware, cutlery, etc., are missing while furniture, meat, preserves, etc., are strewn about in confusion. Many circumstances point to it being the deed of youthful rascals and if the police, who are now working on the case, are successful in detecting the offenders severe punishment will be meted out.

THE BODY RECOVERED

The Otumbee Gives Up Its Dead—A Drowning Accident

The body of Robert Murney, of South Monaghan, who has been missing since last Friday, was discovered yesterday evening floating on the water in the vicinity of Robinson's Island, in the Otumbee river, by a young man named Bell. Coroner Bell was at once notified, and the remains removed to Belleghem's undertaking establishment.

As there are current rumors of foul play, County Constable Oshrine was also notified. These rumors, however, lack confirmation, and would consequently be unfair to give them publicity at present.

Murney was a young man who was employed as a farm laborer in South Monaghan but, with a companion named John Farmer, he had been frolicking in the Otumbee for some time. On Friday last he and Farmer were on their way down the river in two canoes, but became separated, and Farmer went on ahead, thinking that his companion was following, and proceeded all the way home. The last seen of Murney was just at the time of the big rain-storm, which was about 5.30 o'clock, when he was seen in his canoe trying to button his coat as the rain came on. Farmer was on his way and when his companion did not arrive, he was entertained that he had met with some accident and friends from South Monaghan have been searching the river since. Mr. Gosling, a driver for the Matthews Co., Friday afternoon, discovered an empty canoe floating on the river, and at once started to the matter to the police. The missing man's friends, however, knew nothing of the finding of the canoe at the time but a brother-in-law of Murney, Mr. Thompson, Higgins, of South Monaghan, learned of a later and came to the police station yesterday morning and at once stated that the body found in the boat was one belonging to himself that he had loaned to Murney, and also identified the canoe and the clothes as the property of the unfortunate man.

The prevailing opinion is that some one was overboarded himself and fell out of the canoe without upsetting it, and it is impossible that anything further will ever be learned of the manner in which he came to his death. Mr. Murney was a well known young man of South Monaghan. He was twenty-two years of age and unmarried. His parents are both dead and he resided with his brother-in-law, Mr. T. Higgins.

PLEBISCITE CAMPAIGN

Final Appeal to Prohibitionists Issued from Headquarters

On behalf of the Dominion Alliance, Mr. F. S. Science has issued a final appeal to voters, calling their attention to the "present important crisis in the moral history of our country," and pointing out the personal responsibility that rests on each one. The circular says that the seriousness of the situation and the danger of the results of the people must prevent any expression of opinion which would impede Parliament to deal effectively with the question as yet fully realized.

The circular claims that the liquor traffic is a menace to the revenue question, and deals with the moral aspect which was recently raised in Quebec. It says that the prohibition of the traffic in liquor "for use as a beverage" is a "moral imperative" and that it will not interfere with the liquor used in sacramental liquor used in medicine or art. It also claims that the prohibition mentioned in the plebiscite will not interfere with the manufacture of sweetened cider vinegar or other preserved fermented beverages.

The Salvation Army from now on will take an active part in the campaign.

MUNICIPALITIES ARE ACTIVE

They Now Approve the Importance of Good Roads

Mr. A. W. Campbell, provincial road instructor, has been informed that the Council of Perry Sound has purchased a complete outfit of road-making machinery, and will proceed immediately to construct a macadam road from that town to Perry Harbour.

City of Chatham have begun the construction of macadam roads on an extensive scale. Mr. Campbell superintended the building of the first macadam street that was laid down there.

Mr. Campbell goes to Pelly Island to inspect the condition of the roads, and to address a meeting on the importance of good highways, on 29th inst.

The provincial road instructor is just completing a report he is preparing for the Windsor City Council, in which he recommends the construction of brick pavements on the main streets and macadam on the remainder.

West Victoria Protest

Mr. F. D. Moore, of Lindsay, is in Toronto in connection with the West Victoria election case. An application has been made to postpone the trial of the petition against the return of Mr. S. J. Fox, the sitting Conservative member, on the ground that sufficient time has not been given to examine the respondent and his agents. Mr. Moore states that the Conservators are anxious for the trial to proceed in order to vindicate the purity of the election.

Obituary Notes

The death occurred very suddenly of Mr. James Johnson Tuesday afternoon who resided with his nephew, Mr. J. Johnson, Bonaccord at the deceased gentleman had reached the age of 84 years. Two children, Mr. W. F. Johnson, of the Massey-Harris Co., Toronto, and Mrs. Adams, of the Queen's Hotel, Port Hope, survive him. The funeral will leave the residence of his nephew, Bonaccord at this morning at 10.30 o'clock for interment at Millbrook.

The death in Ottawa is reported of Mrs. Jas. Steele, formerly of 476 Part St. The deceased lady moved to Ottawa about a year ago with her son, Mr. John Steele, who formerly kept a barber shop in the market arcade. The funeral took place yesterday afternoon to the Little Lake cemetery on the arrival of the 4.25 train from Ottawa, the remains being conducted by the Rev. Mr. Potter, of St. Andrew's church.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Happenings in Town and District During the Past Twenty-four Hours

—Short days. — There was no Police Court yesterday.

—John Wilson was yesterday locked up as a vagrant.

—A drunk and a vag were run in last night.

—The annual meeting of the Historical Society will be held this evening at Victoria museum.

—The local Single Tax Club have elected the following officers: President, J. B. Oke; Secretary, Dr. Rose; Treasurer, Geo. Bell.

—Four committees of the Town Council will meet this evening. They are the Street and Bridge, Sewerage, Finance, and Fire, Water and Light.

—The town stone crusher, set up on the lot between Charlotte and King streets, beside the creek, was put to work Tuesday evening for the first time with very satisfactory results.

—The Dominion Alliance have published their final set of campaign literature which is a pamphlet entitled the "Final Appeal." It sets down a number of important items, and gives a list of facts for the guidance of voters.

—An outbreak of diphtheria has been reported by the Provincial Health Department for Capliff township, Humberston county. Two cases have so far been discovered. Every precaution is being taken to put a check to the disease.

—George A. Hannish, supposed to have been the Queen's oldest Canadian subject, died in the County county infirmary on Aug. 31st, in the 100th year of his age. He was born in the County of Antigonish, province of Ulster, Ireland, March 14th, 1799, and resided all his life in the County of Antigonish.

—Barcroft Times—While Mrs. J. Asker, a poor widow woman, who resides a few miles from Barcroft, on the road to Baptiste, was asked from home last week someone picked every article in her house and carried them off. Mrs. Asker finds it very difficult at times to make both ends meet, and she was relying on her apple crop to purchase sufficient flour for the winter.

—The annual District Convention of the Methodist Young People's Societies will be held in the Charlotte St. church, Peterboro, on Tuesday, October 14th. There will be sessions afternoon and evening. Rev. A. Crewes, General Secretary of the Esworth League for Canada, will be present and deliver an address. At each session every society is expected to send at least two delegates.

—While driving in Ribblesdale, Tuesday afternoon Dr. King narrowly escaped serious injury in a runaway. The bolt holding the shafts to the axle broke and the shafts dropped, causing the horse a high spirited animal, to become frightened. It plunged forward, became unmanageable, and, flying up the street, Dr. King was thrown out of the street and his man was driving, jumped to save himself. Although the doctor had a heavy fall he was, strange to say, unharmed.

—A large gathering of prominent citizens were present at the opening of the new stone crusher purchased by the Corporation from the Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Co. of Oshawa. Among those present was Hon. Wm. Lloyd, Mayor, looking after the interests of the town with his usual sagacity.

—The following cases concluded the autumn session of the Court of Assizes: Brishon vs. Corry and Lavender—This was the civil case first argued. It concerned the late Judge Brishon, and the late Judge Lavender. The case was argued by Mr. Brishon and Mr. Lavender. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, Mr. Brishon, for $543.00. Judgment was given for the defendant, Mr. Lavender, for $399.00. Counter claim of defendant for $136.98 was dismissed. No costs were allowed to either party.

—Dr. O'Connell vs. plaintiff, W. H. Moore for defendant. Judgment was given for the defendant, Mr. Moore, for $100.00.

—Belford vs. Liley and Laphing—This is an action brought by Wm. G. Telford, farmer, Smith, against E. Liley and N. T. Laphing, Peterborough, who were the plaintiffs. The case was argued by Mr. Telford and Mr. Liley. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, Mr. Telford, for $100.00.

CORRESPONDENCE

Increase Warmers vs. Hastings—The following communication is given a place in our columns because of the fact that considerable squabbling is still going on as to the merits of the respective teams mentioned.—Ed. Times.

Editor of The Morning Times:

Dear Sir.—After a great deal of controversy, a lot of newspaper talk and numerous bluffs and wavers the Hastings team have at last been satisfied to meet the Marmora team at Campbellford on Wednesday last, at the R.C. picnic, and played beyond the shadow of a doubt to one and all of the large crowd of spectators present that the Hastings team are the superior of Marmora's national game.

As will be remembered, there are believed on the Hastings Standard, a few weeks ago, a challenge from the managers of the Marmora team to play Hastings for $400 a side—players to be selected by the Hastings team, and the Hastings team, who donated the game, in the Union Bank in guarantee of good faith, but Marmora could not be any means be induced to back up their assertions. This, of course, was very disappointing to the public, who now that matters had gone so far, were very anxious to see a match between the teams. However the matter was finally arranged by Foster McCloskey, of Campbellford, and the Marmora admitted they could not get a team sufficiently strong from their own town, to meet Hastings, they were given the privilege of bringing outsiders, so that the team that lined up against Hastings was composed of the best players from Perth, Meles and Marmora. Both clubs were accompanied by crowds of supporters, and as both parties were sure of victory much money changed hands on the result of the match.

At 3 o'clock on Wednesday the teams met on the field. The Hastings team was composed of the following players:—

Hastings	Position	Marmora
Wilmers	Goal	S. Brown
Wilson	Point	Wilson
Macdonald	C. back	W. Brown
Chambers	2nd D. field	Pinner
O'neil	2nd D. field	W. Brown
Stephenson	3rd D. field	McWilliams
Graham	Centre	The two
Servier	3rd Home	Stewart
P. David	2nd Home	Wilson
McDonald	1st Home	Todd
Donnan	Out Home	Collins
H. David	Field Goal	Kennedy
Graham	Field Goal	Kennedy

The first game was fast and clean. Hastings played the first half very well, but the Marmora team could not get enough of the Hastings defence, who checked hard and close at all times when called upon. After much play of a give and take order Doonan scored.

The third game brought out some excellent business on the part of both teams, but as in the previous ones Hastings excelled in combination work. The checking became harder after the game advanced, and the player who attempted any fancy dodging or grandstand play, was generally made to suffer for it. The Marmora team made desperate efforts to score, but all to no avail. F. David doing the necessary for Hastings in 19 minutes.

The last game was marked by the only unpleasant feature of the match. A Marmora player deliberately struck one of the Hastings men over the face with his stick and inflicting a rash that necessitated the attendance of a physician and several stitches to close up. This, of course, put him out of the remainder of the match, and the Marmora captain refused to lay off a man to even up, so for 40 minutes the game continued. Hastings played 11 men to 12. During this time neither team scored, thus the match ended in favor of Hastings by 3 goals to 0.

Summary:
1st. Hastings, Doonan, 9 minutes.
2nd. Hastings, Doonan, 17 minutes.
3rd. Hastings, F. David, 19 minutes.
4th. unfinished, 40 minutes.

Yours truly,
ONLOOKER.

ANARCHY IS COWARDICE.

Anarchy has to its credit a long list of atrocious crimes, but none quite as devilish as the murder of the Empress Elizabeth of Austria. If there was in all the world a Queen whom the Anarchists might have been expected to spare it was the lady so mercilessly struck down on Saturday. So far she was from being a type of the luxury-loving rulers, whom the Anarchists so vehemently hate, that her friends were offended at her love of simple living and her distaste for ostentatious display. She never gave offence by her life to the most ultra democratic sentiment of Europe, and yet she was assassinated as brutally as if she had been the embodiment of tyranny.

Her death shows the blind unreasoning hatredness of anarchy. All these deeds crave the destruction of human life. It appears to make little difference to them who the victim is, when once they work themselves up to strike the blow. The first person whom their distorted imagination regards as an enemy is attacked, and even when it is a woman the cowardly creature is not restrained from his murderous purpose.

It is a matter of history that beneficent rulers, and not tyrants, become the victims of these fiends. The greatest tyrant which Russia had for a ruler died a natural death, while his son, who liberated millions of slaves, was killed by the nihilists. The warm-hearted patriot that ever stood as President of the American Republic was shot down by a crazy actor. Another chief executive of the Land of Liberty was shot in broad daylight by Guiteau, Garfield's murderer. And so it has been all through the piece. Anarchy is cowardice, nerved with momentary courage to a despicable deed, and finding a victim before it evaporates, commits murder.

CANADA AND THE WEST INDIES.

The rival of the proposition that the West India Islands should become a portion of the Canadian Confederation, has attracted some attention in Great Britain. The London Globe thinks the proposition worth consideration, "since it would relieve to some extent the intolerable economic pressure under which the West Indians are suffering, without outraging both their feelings and ours by a change of flag." That the idea of annexation to the States is repugnant to the Islanders has already been shown on a former occasion. It is reflected in a letter in the Outlook, also provoked by Mr. Johnson's letter from "An Anglo-West Indian," who writes on the apparent absurdity of allowing Jamaica to pass into the control of the States: "If, moreover, we help that nation to weaken our chance to protect Jamaica, then I think the British Public is what it always was. Were there a few points to make on the market, the British Public might be trusted to act differently; but as it is you will, I believe, see the 'Stars and Stripes' on these places. Yet—His hiatus is left to be interpreted, and he concludes: "Had Canada any idea but a canal and a railway, she ought to have been down there long ago." It does seem that Canada might have "been down there," in many ways, with much greater force and greater effect than she has in connection with trade matters. There is yet time for her to get there. But the wisdom of making the islands part and parcel of the Dominion, which means the presence of negroes in Parliament, is far from being apparent. The past history of Parliamentary government in Jamaica makes it evident that the experiment, if made, would be an extremely hazardous one. Canada can, however, do much for the West Indies in other ways.

Newspapers and Magazines.

Twenty Stories About Mark Twain.—Mark Twain is the next famous person to be "anecdotalized" by The Ladies' Home Journal, and the humorist's closest friends have sent to the magazine for its next number some twenty odd stories about him, none of which have ever been printed. They are, of course, of the droll sort, not more funny than the "snap-shot" pictures of Mark which his friends have also loaned the magazine. These, too, have never been printed.

Small Get Indignant.

Obnoxious on Independence Day.

A correspondent of the New York Herald at Dawson City, send a vivid report of the dissatisfaction that exists with the collection of the ten per cent royalty. The men there, he says, "are making a fight to save their properties from confiscation." A particularly rich statement that. The infernal scoundrels who are robbing this country of its property, talking of their property being confiscated. And even claim citizenship with the country they are robbing. A rascally thief checking the policeman about confiscating his stolen goods. What next? The whole cursed mob should be driven out of the country with the bayonet and galling guns.

A Doubting Thomas.

Hawthorne Times.

It is reported that a scientist from Dartmouth is now at Ottawa giving a demonstration of how sawdust can be made commercially worth thirty dollars a ton. It is true, it would look at first sight as though it would cheapen lumber. But a little reflection would show that it would be better to turn the whole saw-log into dust and do away with the manufacture of lumber. But we need not believe the story in its entirety just yet.

The Jack Went up.

Montreal Witness.

A feature of the capture of Omdurman and Khartoum which has perhaps not attracted the attention which its significance entitled it to, was the running up of the British flag as well as the Egyptian one over both cities. It is possible that the British flag will soon be flown openly everywhere throughout Egypt.

SHE KISSED HOBSON.

As the girl who kissed Hobson, Miss Emma Arnold, will undoubtedly be known for some time to come. Ever since that famous occasion she has been discussed throughout the country. Women as a rule have scolded about her, at the same time cherishing a secret envy. Men have chuckled and laughed and envied Hobson. Whether she asked Hobson to kiss her or he asked if he might is still an undecided question and probably will always remain so.

Nobody blames Lieutenant Hobson, however, for it is unanimously conceded that Miss Arnold is very kissable. She is, in fact, one of the prettiest young women in all St. Louis, and there are lots of pretty girls in that city. Her father, the late Lee L. Arnold, was a wealthy and respected citizen of St. Louis. The head of the family is her brother, Fred Arnold, to whom she will next to explain the kissing episode when they meet. Miss Arnold's mother is traveling with her daughter and was with her at the time she met the gallant lieutenant at the Long Branch hotel.

Miss Arnold's beauty has been described with surprisingly conflicting details, but here is a description that comes straight from her home and is quite accurate. "She has a plump, well rounded figure, graceful in motion and not too tall in stature. She possesses abundant hair of a rich, reddish brown, which she wears simply arranged rolled back from a straight white brow. Her eyes are large and brown, and her complexion faultless."

Miss Arnold's skill and taste in gowns have become proverbial among her friends. French combinations in colors and hats that are invariably chic and more than keeping are always her ways. At the big balls she is always a belle, surrounded by men a dozen deep, who clamor for favors in the way of dances. She excels in dancing and is also a skillful bowler.

Miss Arnold's accomplishments are not all those of indoor life. In any season she is a good shot with a rifle and frequently goes off on hunting trips with her brother. Mr. Fred Arnold is very proud of his sister's shooting ability as he taught her when she was quite a little girl. Her hobby is to hold a gun. Miss Arnold's greatest pet is a big, brown pointer that is frequently seen trotting along behind her as she goes about.

If you do not believe that Miss Arnold is really kissable, a glance at the accompanying picture ought to convince you.

BETS WERE DECLARED OFF.

The picture of Queen Louise of Prussia is so familiar to all, and so familiar that we may pardon the man who said he was "tired of seeing that everlasting coming down the stairs." But who ever has gazed on the wonderful life-size original in the museum at Cologne will think no more of a false repose in his admiration and passion of the beautiful picture. Nor does the spectator need to know the history of that most queenly of queens, most womanly in her womanhood, who still was more of a man than her vicissitudes husband, Frederick, Wm. III, with whom Napoleon played. The case in point will show this.

The narrator was standing in front of Richter's great work, drinking in its beauty and expressing to his travelling companion his admiration, meantime discussing its historical importance of the beloved queen.

He had noticed two other tourists who had stood apart engaged in an animated discussion, which shortly ceased, when they approached him, and one of them said—

"I beg pardon, but I notice you seem to know about this Queen Louise, was, had with your permission I'd like to have you settle the question—Now, my chum and I have been having an argument, and we just made a bet of it. Perhaps you can settle it for us."

"I shall be very glad to do so," replied the narrator, "if it is in my power."

Well, it was this—My chum says this Queen Louise is Emperor William III's wife, but I'm sure she was his mother. Now, which was she?"

Two astonished and crestfallen tourists received the information, given as delicately as possible, that she was his mother. —Detroit Free

GELATINE DESSERTS.

Jellies of Many Kinds, Snow Pudding and Spanish Cream.

There are few more acceptable desserts than clear, well-moulded jellies. These jellies are easily made with the assistance of the always-ready gelatine. When making jellies one should use the best quality of gelatine and be accurate in measurement of the liquids for the amount of gelatine used, for when a jelly comes to be served and is in a semi-liquid condition or is as tough as rubber it is not a dish to be desired. The most acceptable jellies are made with the plain gelatin and flavors added to suit the taste.

A baked custard or sweetened and flavored cream are served with jellies. The cream may be where mass heated around the amount of jelly. It requires less cream to serve jelly in this way. When you have no moulds for jelly, a pretty way of serving is to pour a layer of liquid in a shallow dish, wet in cold water, cut the jelly into little square pieces and heap them upon a flat glass dish. With jelly moulded in a ring mould, the space in the centre should be filled with fresh berries, sliced peaches, pineapple or cherries that have been in sugar and a little wine kept enough to penetrate the fruit.

The removal of a broken mould of jelly may be done again in an appropriate manner by setting the jelly stand a short time in a warm room and then taking a wire upon and leaving the jelly vaguely until it is as light as air, and then again turning it into moulds to harden. It will have the appearance of being an entirely different dessert. Several kinds of jelly, in which the flavors are made together and served in a bowl by being poured into one. When the jelly is partly broken up, the cream may be added to make the amount desired to fill a mould.

Specific jellies that have been used for medicinal purposes may be eaten in this manner and again moulded, thus giving an entirely new appearance. The gelatine is best when it is made in a double boiler. The water drawn out a strong, unpleasant taste, which all flavors will not always overcome. There are many simple desserts made from gelatine, and a few recipes are given to make inexperienced housekeepers.

For gelatine pudding: Dissolve half a package of gelatine in one quart of milk. Beat the milk until it is as light as air, and then add the gelatine. Put one pint of milk over the fire in a double boiler, add to this the milk and soaked gelatine. When the milk is scalding add the eggs and sugar, and stir until the eggs are cooked, take from the fire and add the whites of the eggs which have been beaten to a stiff froth. Flavor with vanilla or white wine and strain into a mould to become set. Serve very cold with sugar and cream.

Snow pudding: Soak half a box of gelatine in one cup of cold water for one hour, then add one cup of boiling water, and stir until dissolved. Add the juice from two large lemons. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth. When the gelatine mixture is cold and begins to thicken stir the egg whites and beat the mixture very hard and until it will just pour. The dish containing the mixture should stand in a pan of ice water and it will congeal more quickly. Turn into a mould and serve with a cold place. When serving this pudding pour around the form a boiled custard flavored with vanilla.

Coffee blanc mange: Dissolve one box of gelatine in two cups of milk; pour over it one pint of strong coffee, boiling hot. Have one pint of milk over the fire in a double boiler, and when it is scalding pour the coffee and gelatine mixture. Meanwhile beat three eggs light with one cup of sugar and stir in with the other ingredients. Remove from the fire and turn into moulds and put in a cool place to become set. Serve with sweetened cream.

Coffee also makes an excellent jelly. Soak one package of gelatine in one pint of cold water, then pour over it one cup of boiling water, and stir until dissolved. Add the juice from two large lemons. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth. When the gelatine mixture is cold and begins to thicken stir the egg whites and beat the mixture very hard and until it will just pour. The dish containing the mixture should stand in a pan of ice water and it will congeal more quickly. Turn into a mould and serve with a cold place. When serving this pudding pour around the form a boiled custard flavored with vanilla.

For prune jelly, wash one quart of prunes and soak them until soft in water enough to little more than cover them. Cook the prunes in the same water until they are tender. With a silver knife remove the pit from each plum and lay the plum in a wet mesh. Have a little cold water and turn the hot prune water over it; add the juice of two lemons and sweeten to taste. Stand over the fire enough to have the mixture quite thick and entirely dissolved; then strain into the mould holding the prepared prunes. Stand away until perfectly cold, and then serve with whipped cream.

A favorite dessert is called Spanish cream. For one quart of cold milk use half a box of gelatine; cover and let them stand together about an hour. Then beat, but do not let the mixture boil. Beat the whites of four eggs and add to them half a cup of fine sugar, turn the mixture into a mould and set in a cool place. When it begins to thicken flavor with vanilla and lightly stir in the whites of the eggs that have been beaten in a stiff froth. Turn the mixture into a mould and put in a cool place. Make a cold custard and pour around the dessert when serving it.

The Building of a Good Dog.

Mr. member of the canine family has been more persistently maligned than the bulldog. Writers who have no intimate knowledge of the dog and his attributes have described him as stupidly ferocious, and illustrators have pictured him as a sort of semi-wild beast, till the general public has come to look upon him as dangerous.

"Give a dog a bad name," is an old saw, and perhaps a true one, but when it is applied to the bulldog it is manifestly unjust. Writers, too, have fallen into grave error in claiming that the bulldog is deficient not only in affection, but in intelligence.

Bulldogs, who are considered one of the greatest of canine species, claim that the bulldog's brain is actually larger than that of the spaniel, which dog is generally considered to be the most intelligent of the canine race, while the bulldog's affection is never to be doubted.—Ontario.

Turkish Troops will Probably Stay in Crete

AN APPEAL TO THE POWERS

The Sultan Says That Britain is to Blame for the Riots

Absolutely No Deal to Withdraw the Turkish Troops from the Island - A Decision That May Cause Trouble

Constantinople, Sept. 14.—The Turkish Government has sent a circular to the powers, alleging that the British provoked the disorders in Candia, claiming that the present situation is due to the measures adopted by the powers in Crete, and protesting against the bombardment of Candia. Finally the Porte announces its refusal to withdraw the Turkish troops from Crete, in spite of the decision of the admirals that such a step is absolutely necessary. The circular has made a bad impression in diplomatic circles.

CONSENTED TO DISARM

Candia, Island of Crete, Sept. 14.—The Habi-Bazouks have consented to disarm, providing their arms are delivered to the Turkish authorities.

THE INCENDIARY IS ARRESTED

A Rancher Named Sheppard Charged With the New Westminster Fire

New Westminster, Sept. 14.—Since a black flag with death's head and cross-bones was seen floating from the flag-pole of the Central Public school building, New Westminster, after the fire, stories have been constantly circulated there as to the incendiary origin of the conflagration. The authorities at last set on foot an investigation, with the result that the city was thrown into a state of excitement by the appearance late on Monday night of Sergeant Dillabough and Special Constable Julien with a prisoner named Sheppard, a rancher, who lives on the south side of the river about eight miles from South Westminster. The officers entered the city very quietly, because it was feared that he might be lynched. Small crowds had collected here and there, and the situation was discussed. More than one threat was made as to what would be done if the stories about were but partly confirmed. Crossing the river with their prisoner, the two officers quietly proceeded to the Provincial gaol, where Sheppard was turned over to the safe keeping of Warden Armstrong.

EXPLAINED THE FIRE

Wm. Kennedy, father, who lives on the south side of the river, is responsible for Sheppard's arrest. He informed the police that Sheppard had said to him when crossing the river that "he expected the fire," and that he had started it himself. Kennedy asked that he might, and the chief of police replied, "You will know more of it on the 23rd. I knew the fire would come." He then refused to answer further questions, but held to his original statement. Kennedy made his statement before E. Woods, barrister, and several newspaper men, including your correspondent, this morning.

Sheppard was brought before Mr. G. Corbould, Police Magistrate, yesterday and charged with being the starter of the fire. He pleaded not guilty, and said he could prove an alibi. A crowd of on-lookers filled the court room during the trial, and things looked so bad for the prisoner that the hearing was adjourned.

Many people have already convicted Sheppard in their minds. He is known as a "ne'er-do-well," has served a term in the penitentiary, the official say, and some people will come forward to say that he threatened revenge on the city some day.

MR. C. CALDER GOES OUT

Liberals Draw First Blood in the Election Protests

There is a Supplication to the Effect That It is Bad Luck to Win the First of a Series

Whitby, Sept. 13.—The South Ontario election trial was resumed this morning. Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, Q.C., took Edward Baker in hand, and assailed his evidence at every point. Baker again related the manner of receiving the $60 from Lewis Luke, and told of the money he had disbursed. It was a $2 bill Baker said he gave John Sherin, whereas the latter had declared the amount to be in the shape of two ones, one new and old one.

"Why did you give Patrick Sherin, the father, $5 and his son John only $2?" questioned Mr. Nesbitt.

"We reckoned John a little simple and not worth as much as his father."

A copy of the order given by William Smith to Lewis Luke for $30 was produced. The order Baker declared, he copied, because at first Luke declined to pay over the amount. He could not say why he had copied the order.

Throughout the cross-examination Baker gave his answers with considerable self-possession, and more than once Mr. Justice (later) remarked that if there was any shuffling in giving evidence the certificate granting extension from prosecution might be withheld. Baker told of a trip to Toronto to see Holman, Mr. Dryden's counsel.

He said it was a very common thing for him to go up to Toronto. He did go once or twice a week to see baseball matches, etc., and gave contests. Yes, and cockfights maybe.

"Ever go into a poker game?"

"Sometimes."

"Ever in a gentlemen's game of poker?"

"There is no such thing as a gentleman's game."

The witness admitted that while accountant at the A. S. Whiting Co., Oshawa, he had a shortage of about $800 and left the country for about a month or so. He could not say who made the shortage good. "Your father is a liberal in Oshawa?" "Yes."

"Do you know that Conservatives in Oshawa would have nothing to do with work you were connected with?"

"No, I do not."

MOTHERSALL WAS DROPPED

Edwin Mothersall of Oshawa, poll clerk at the election, said Baker was always a Conservative. He had known him to be an outside scrutineer for the party.

Cross-examined, the witness seemed unable to take kindly to the questions of Mr. Nesbitt, and on the suggestion of Mr. Justice Oiler Mothersall was dropped.

AUSTIN McGRILL A $5 MAN

Austin McGrill also admitted having received $5 for his vote for Calder. He too, had been shown by Baker how to mark his ballot. McGrill and Wm. Smith had seen him. He was told by Mr. Smith to be careful how he talked.

Cross-examined by W. D. McPherson, the witness said he had been seen by Baker, and was counselled to tell the truth. McGrill said before he got the money he had been sold by Robert Kirkpatrick that he was to get $5 from Edward Baker for his vote. Kirkpatrick declared McGrill was a prominent Liberal also. Certain of his companions had told him a couple of weeks before the election that he was to get $5 for his vote.

Mr. Mothersall was then placed in the box, and was giving evidence when the court rose.

THE ELECTION VOIDED

Judges Oiler and Ferguson voided the election of Mr. Charles Calder, the respondent, saying the cross-petitioner was dismissed with costs.

This decision was reached shortly after six o'clock, and when 12 cases out of the 138 on the petition had been decided by the court as proved. Mr. Nesbitt, for respondent, had admitted the sub-agency of Edward Baker, which permitted the court to find eight cases of bribery by Baker as proven.

The other four were made up of two cases of giving coal for votes by W. H. Thomas in Oshawa, where William Beare got half a ton and David Lockwood a ton for voting for Calder, and two cases of the payment of $3 each to two voters not to vote at all. These last were Aaron Harmon of Prince Albert in Beach Township, whose plowing place is Regan, five miles south, in East Whitby, and George H. Banbury, a voter in Claremont, Pickering Township.

The judges reserved their decision upon the question of bribery, and those proved to have been bribed are to be reported and lose their civil rights for a period of years.

HER BLACK BEAU

Scotch Lassie Who Wants to Marry a Colored Gentleman

New York, Sept. 14.—Action was deferred yesterday by the Board of special inquiry of the Immigration Bureau in the case of Margaret Wool, who came from her home in Scotland to be married to Martin Hamilton, colored. It is expected that there will be a decision to-day favorable to the couple.

D. Mason Webster, a lawyer, representing the anxious bridegroom, requested the postponement pending a discussion of the legal points involved with Dr. Lorenzo Lillo, the legal adviser of the Board of Inquiry. He announced that he would carry the case into the United States Circuit Court in habeas corpus proceedings if the agent were not allowed to go to her fiancé.

Assistant Commissioner McSwenney said, in further explanation of the detention of Miss Wool, that it was based on the possibility of her becoming a charge upon the public. Miss Wool told the Board of Inquiry on Saturday last, said Mr. McSwenney, "that she did not wish to marry the colored man, and as she had little or no money her detention was proper. Again, the same question arose if she permitted to marry the colored man, for the laws in many States make such marriages felonious, and both she and her husband in travelling from State to State in the course of his itinerant work would become public charges."

Sole Manufacturer and Proprietor. Beware of Imitations

TESTIMONIALS:

The following are a few from scores of testimonials the Sergt-Major has from people who have used this preparation:

I, Henry Thomas, Street Car Conductor, residing at 180 Simcoe Street, Toronto, Ont., do hereby certify that my hair was falling out for eight to ten years until the top of my head was quite bald. I tried every hair preparation on the market and could get nothing to do me any good until I commenced to use Mr. Kenny's Hair Restorer. One bottle stopped the hair falling and started a new growth. I am now using the third One Dollar Bottle, and my hair is growing thick and vigorous all over my head. I can therefore recommend Kenny's Hair Restorer as the best known remedy for restoring the hair on bald heads. I am only using the Hair Restorer since 18th October last.

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

An Incident in Search of the Lost Expedition of 1884.

The Count de Hubner tells in his "Memoirs" a thrilling story of an adventure in the Italian city of Rome during the days of the revolution of 1848. When the trouble began in the streets, he contrived to get into a house, taking with him two or three other persons, including the wife of a minor official who had taken refuge in the house, and who was to be his ally, but who was to have certain news of her as soon as possible.

The firing grew heavier, and the rebels soon had possession of almost every house in the street.

On the 19th of March, Count de Hubner decided that he must do something toward bettering his position in case of an assault, and he decided to only remaining to make a dash across the street to the palace where the Austrian general, Rath, was quartered, two blocks away and on the other side. The man was merely to let the general know that De Hubner himself was coming, and to ask that the gates be held ready for him.

"Myself, prudences and my honor had a long and heated argument," says Count de Hubner. "Finally I pulled myself together. I had to let Prince Metternich know about myself, to make a last report, and to keep my word about poor Mrs. M. I undid the door, drew a long breath, and plunged down the street."

"The bullets flew all around me, splashing leaden showers from the stone pavement. I was struck at the gates of the palace, they swung to, and in a second I was inside, a bed. But only half my journey was done; I had still to go back again.

"A letter—my last report—was soon completed for Metternich and my message to the husband of Mrs. M. was given. I had to return.

"Again the gates were opened and I bounded forth. A veritable fusillade followed. From every window and house top came the spurts of white smoke, and I tried to dodge 60 bullets at once. In a minute I had reached my own door, and as I did so I turned to look back.

"Another man left the palace gates at full speed, but before he had half crossed the street a puff of smoke shot out of a window, and he fell flat and was instantly lying like a log across the gutter. The fire stopped at once—what use would even an Italian be in shooting a dead man?

"But on the second that all became quiet to my great astonishment I saw the dead man rise to his legs like a cat and dash across the street into the half-open door waiting for him. The sharpshooters were taken by surprise and he escaped."

The Good Old Times.

"An increase of salary!" exclaimed the pompous manager of a small omnibus company to a clerk who had just made that request. "I am afraid, sir, that you are too extravagant."

He bowed with his heavy watch chain and looked severely at the young man, who returned his stare boldly. It was the old phrase on such occasions, and the applicant had heard it all before. He meant to have that rise or go somewhere else.

"Excuse me, sir," he replied respectfully. "I haven't any chance to be extravagant on what I earn."

"Young man," continued the pompous gentleman, "I have risen from the monkey board. How? By being careful. When I was young, I made money by saving bus fares."

"Ah, that was in the old days," said the young man, with a knowing wink. "But with the bell punches and the present system of inspection you would find you couldn't save expense without being colored, however careful you were."

The manager nearly fainted, and the young man had to seek other employment.—Pearson's Weekly.

DAY OF THE CLIPPER PAST.

In the Stunails Who Disappeared For Good From Most American Shores.

"Stunails out of fashion!" said the paper as he puffed victoriously at his pipe, which has been around the house most as many times as its owner. They may be, but it is because the steamship has supplanted them on the ocean. However, an old shipmate of mine who is a bit of a crank and left this world the other day, still carried on his mind the old story of the sentimental steamship. Just as a Confederate veteran might play the bag under which he went to battle, but steamships are just as practical to day as ever.

"Studding sail, you say? Oh, yes. Studding sail may be literally correct, but Jack says 'stunails.' He objects to the long participles and words with long and legs. He wants brevity all the time—in everything perhaps except rum. The corruption of language by sailors is proverbial. But studding sail itself is a corruption of studding sail or steering sail, which in my opinion was the original name for the stunails. Although used only in moderate weather, was a driving sail. Our yachts carry stunails today in the form of the immense side sail that is called the spinnaker.

"It costs to use a ship with a suit of stunails. Their use means extra labor for the crew, or a larger crew, and their storage takes valuable cargo space. This means expense for the ship, which has earnings in these days of railroads and ocean transport do not warrant. The cargoes that sailing vessels carry today do not demand quick transportation, with its high freight rates. The modern sailing ship is little better than a floating warehouse. It is not driven on. Sails and canvas are not pressed as they were before the advent of the steamship. Sailing a ship to make a short passage is one of the lost arts. There is no demand for auxiliary canvas such as stunails. The Yankee clipper is out of it—done for."

"Away back in the middle of the century the stars and stripes floated over ships that were really clippers below and aloft. In competition with one another and with foreign craft our clippers carried valuable cargoes—tea from China, coffee from Rio and fancy merchandise to San Francisco. The steamships do the tea and coffee carrying now. It was not in those days a go as you please run. The clippers were under orders to get there to catch the top of a market. Hours moved on their voyages, long though they were, meant money deluge for all concerned. Ships were driven then with canvas that fairly smothered them in fair weather and foul, and Yankee seamanship, with its characteristic judgment and nerve, was recognized and rewarded.

"But all this is merely a memory now. I can fancy the clipper of the fifty years ago, racing against the steamship, and the lower latitude, her sails mounting above the blue horizon, her cloud cleaving, her moonbeams, upon the sea, a snow white pyramid, an angel's flag, as Jack says. Did they carry stunails? Ah, up to the royal yards."

HERE IS AGE FOR YOU

REMARKABLE COLLECTION OF STONE IMPLEMENTS FROM AFRICA.

Over 100,000 Years Old—Found in a Spot Which May Have Been the Garden of Eden—Great Scientists and Archaeologists Famed.

Forty centuries look down upon you! cried Napoleon, as he marshalled his soldiers to battle under the shadow of the Pyramids. The Pyramids were not built yesterday, but in the light of recent archaeological discoveries they must be regarded as very recent works of man.

Visitors at the British Museum may examine a collection of stone implements in a remarkably perfect state of preservation, to which the most expert archaeologists of to-day ascribe an age of not less than from one hundred thousand to two hundred thousand years. It is the most recent acquisition to the museum, and is a portion of a collection made last year in the deserts of Somaliland by Mr. H. W. Seton-Karr, a well-known English archaeologist and big game hunter. He was the first explorer, in 1885, of the Mount St. Elias range, in North America. More recently he has confined his explorations and hunting expeditions to North-western Asia and Eastern Africa, and has amassed a large and very valuable collection of prehistoric remains. Three years ago he made a thorough study of the prehistoric collections in England, notably that of Sir John Evans of the Royal Society, and with that avant gave a great deal of time to prehistoric research.

On receipt of the new finds in the upper Nile Valley by Professor Flinders Petrie, the eminent Egyptologist, Mr. Seton-Karr was led to believe that diligent exploration in the regions farther to the south and west would be productive of great additions to the scientific knowledge of prehistoric man. Accordingly, early last year he started in to make a general survey of the Eastern Desert, and at first he was not particularly interested in the discovery of a large number of stone implements in the vicinity of Tishbe, and from the quantities and the quality of which they were found the explorer felt certain that they had no historic connection with the comparatively modern temples and pyramids of Egypt. Encouraged by this discovery, he set out on a second expedition, and the hope of finding authentic traces of the last flint man, whom he believed had existed in that region.

He directed his journey into the heart of the Eastern Desert, and in a constant intercourse with the nomads, endeavoring to learn from them the whereabouts of any remains of prehistoric man, he made a series of journeys, and finally he found a large number of stone implements, which he believed to be the work of the last flint man, whom he believed had existed in that region.

BULLFIGHTING IN FRANCE

Gonzales, the torador, is making a tour in the French provinces with a choice collection of Laffes bulls. He brought six out recently at the cycle rink of St. Denis, which was nicely arranged as an arena. In the last course an old bull, El Januto, wanted to be baited, and seemingly killed. An old, blindfolded horse was dragged in, and its flanks presented to the horns of El Januto. The public at this piece of cruelty grew furious, and insisted on the horse being removed. It was taken off, with its intestines hanging about. The crowd, blaming the bull instead of the torador and his cuadrilla, insisted on that animal being killed. Gonzales did not like to lose his bull, and tried to pacify the public, but he had to average the wrongs of the horse. Armed with a sword he stabbed the beast in the loins, driving the weapon in to the hilt. He then tried five times to give the coup de grace with a triangular Spanish dagger. Each time the blood spouted beyond the barrier of the arena. A number of men tore up seats to cast at Gonzales. Others vaulted over the barrier to thrash him. The intervention of the gendarmes enabled him to get quietly away.

During the last forty-five years attempts have often been made to introduce the Spanish bullfights into France. The earliest that I know of was in the year following the late Emperor's marriage. Arrangements were made for a grand corrida at Bayonne, and there was talk of performances under high auspices in a Paris circus. But the bulls and bullfighters could not get further north than the Adour, such was the revolt of public feeling against them. To help forward the last universal exhibition, the concession was granted for a bullfighting arena in the Rue Pergolese. Nothing was wanted to give it Spanish color—not even caravans of gypsies. But the horses with trailing towels, the bawling of bulls weary of being baited, the ferocious excitement of the Spanish spectators, caused the deepest disgust. A French public was actually hired to keep up the confidence of the shareholders in the enterprise, which soon wound up in bankruptcy. The late Max Lebaud, having bribed journalists and got around the Town Council of Marseilles-Laffite, thought to naturalize the corrida there. He fetched all his bulls and bullfighters from Spain and hired a good clique, but the nights the arena presented were thought too horrible to be associated with festivity. The public aided with the Society for the Protection of Animals, and he turned his circus into a cycle rink. The only part of France where the bullfight does not shock, but gives pleasure is the Department of the Gard. Perhaps this is due to Roman staidness. They had a colosseum at Nîmes, and another at Arles, in the Roman time, and of course games in which wild beasts were pitted against

PROTECTION FOR OUR LOVED ONES.

PAIN'S CELEBY COMPOUND A SAFE MEDICINE FOR EVERY HOME

A Family Friend in Times of Sickness

One ailing, sick or diseased member of a family will mar and disturb the happiness of the entire household. In some homes the breadwinner or father, is laid low, or it may be the mother, that ever-present guardian angel in the wants and comforts of her little ones. Sometimes a son or daughter is robbed of buoyant spirits and youthful health, and becomes a prey to disease and suffering.

Any such case as we have mentioned will make its influence felt amongst those most deeply interested. The physician is called in to fight against disease, and long, weary days are passed with perhaps little benefit to the sick one, and increasing anxiety and tremendous cost to the family in moderate circumstances. When sickness comes to a family that make Paine's Celery Compound their chosen medicine, how different the situation! There is always perfect confidence of success and cure, and a surety that no heavy doctor's bills will be forthcoming.

If the patient is suffering from kidney or liver troubles, rheumatism, neuralgia, stomach ailments or blood diseases, Paine's Celery Compound is far more efficacious and life-giving than anything else on earth. The sick ones soon get strong and well, and feel the life current once more flowing joyously through every vein. Paine's Celery Compound as a family medicine is a Heaven-sent blessing to our people.

THE AUTOCRAT OF CHINA

The Chicago-Times Herald gives the following interesting story of the Dowager Empress, who is the autocrat of China.

The most powerful woman in the world is neither young nor beautiful nor old. She is no traveler, and she has never gone to college. She is old and ugly, wrinkled and ill-tempered, but she controls millions of people with an iron hand, she dictates the policy of a nation and makes or mars destiny. She is Tuen-Tsun-Hsi, the Dowager Empress of China.

The story of Tuen-Tsun-Hsi reads like a romance, and an impossible one at that.

She was pretty enough as a child, and very bright-minded. Her father was so poor that one day he found himself possessed of but a single handful of rice. Tuen suggested that she herself be sold for the benefit of the family. This was the first instance of her ability to lead. Her father acted upon the idea and he made a good bargain, as she advised. He sold to no less a personage than the Viceroy of Lu-Chang.

Tuen-Tsun-Hsi, the little "Good-Luck," went into the Viceroy's kitchen as a scrub girl and maid of all work, but at last she had plenty to eat, which combined with an excellent conscience, or no conscience at all, which some people say is still better, she grew plump and pretty again, and you may be sure her alert mind did not fail in its activity. She was not called Tuen-Tsun-Hsi for nothing, and her first move was to win the favor of the Viceroy's wife, and to be promoted from the kitchen to the embroidery frame, for fancy work of China is much more in demand in Europe than in the East.

Now had her chance come a "ride up her affairs," which she took at the first. She led on to fortune—though she had certainly never heard of Shakespeare, and was no philosopher.

It fell to her task to embroider a robe for the viceroy, and so well did she do it that her master designed first to be pleased with the work and then to be pleased with the girl. It began to be shown that even a servant girl could do much that even a nobleman could not do.

So Tuen progressed, and as she got prettier and smarter so she made more trouble in the viceroy's household, and the wise man, proceeding on the principle of "anything for a quiet life," one day dressed his young favorite very handsomely in imperial yellow silk and sent her off in state to present to the Emperor, a sort of graceful acknowledgment of a recent decoration of her rank's feathers, which meant that the Emperor had moved the viceroy one notch higher in the social scale.

It was a great trip for the young Tuen, this one 45 years ago, when with a beating of tom-toms and a good deal of other unnecessary fuss she was escorted to the three walled City of Peking, where, in the heart of the town, are set the Emperor's palaces. But it was a trip for which no return ticket is ever issued. She knew that, once well inside the third wall, she would never issue forth again, nor ever behold more her father or mother or friends of the viceroy family.

From the royal harem, "the palace of heart's repose," as it is called in flowery language, no woman ever departs alive once she has entered, and the Emperor himself rarely leaves the seclusion of his palace and gardens. Not that the prospect daunted Tuen. In the golden cage she saw another opportunity, for she felt that it was not her fate to "blush unseen," and her purpose never once faltered.

On a secret it spoken it comes to be a secret—it is in the air, and the beauty and wisdom of Tuen-Tsun-Hsi was soon discussed in the harem, so by and by the son of "Huron" himself, the Emperor, began to hear of it, and naturally to be curious. He saw that she was lovely, with a soft, olive complexion and lips as red as the cherry blossom, which orientals love. As for form, she carried herself like a queen—poor slave girl, that she was—perhaps it was all an idle boast of her father's that the blood of Tartars flowed in his veins, and the Tartars are the real aristocrats of China, having won the Emperor by her beauty. Tuen proceeded to hold him by the force of her mentality. To make a long story short, the Emperor made Tuen his Empress.

The Emperor was just old enough to be completely swayed by his brilliant wife, clear-headed and practical as she was. Virtually she became the ruler of the immense empire, and when an indignant statesman ventured to oppose her decrees, as occasionally one of them would be brave enough to do, Tuen promptly ordered the offender's head cut off, not figuratively, but literally, with a "short, sharp chop," and this drastic measure soon squelched any active desire to criticize her policy or her methods—it wasn't safe.

Bitter, indeed, was it to the average Chinaman to feel that the real power behind the ruler's throne was one of the despised sex. Yet was Tuen magnetic withal, and won people by her force and charm, even when they had rather not. She was always tactful, clearly, she loved power, and ministers of state grew to respect her ability even when they disliked the woman. Then the old Emperor died in the fullness of years, and Tuen became Dowager Empress, with a weak boy for ostensibly reigning monarch.

This is what the humble slave girl has risen to by means of her beauty, cleverness and diplomacy—to be absolute ruler over 600,000,000 of subjects, and to have it said of her that she is the firmest of China, that in statecraft there is not her equal in any court in Europe.

People used to wonder why cunning old Hsueh Chang struck his colors so close to the Emperor's dowager, instead of to the Emperor, now the world knows. He has always been more or less a favorite of hers, though being a fiery-tempered and exacting old lady, she has more than once deprived him of his honors and his decorations, his yellow silk jacket and his peacock feathers, only to become pacified later and to give these marks of favor to the six-diplomat, who has worked so much confusion of late, and who is reputed to have sold his nation to Russia. He stands in well with her, and to his advice only will she listen. It is these two against the nation.

What does A stand for? When some friend suggests that your blood needs A sarsaparilla treatment, remember that A stands for AYER'S. The first letter in the alphabet stands for the first of sarsaparillas; first in origin, first in record, first in the favor of the family. For nearly half a century has been curing all forms of blood diseases—scrofula, eczema, tetter, rheumatism, erysipelas, blood poisoning, etc. There's a book about these cures—"Ayer's Curebook, a story of cures told by the cured,"—which is sent free on request, by Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell, Mass. The book will interest you if you are sick or weak, because it tells not what it is claimed the remedy will do, but what your neighbors and fellows testify that it has done. Will it cure you? It has cured thousands like you. Why not you?

The Hottest August.
The weather last month beat any previous August on record for heat. The only previous record of an August average exceeding 70 degrees occurred in 1876, when it was 70.2 degrees. The maximum of the month has only been exceeded once, when 90.3 degrees was recorded on Aug. 24, 1866. The weather report for August, issued by the Meteorological office shows that the average temperature for the month was 70.5 degrees.

Said to Have Stolen a Plow.
George Moncrief was before County Police Edmonson yesterday morning, charged with the theft of a plow from J. J. Steel. He was remanded until Monday. On behalf of the defendant, Mr. E. B. Stone made a statement that Steele had boarded with Moncrief for over a year, and owed him considerable money. He wished to leave in the absence of Mr. Moncrief and the latter's wife refused to take the plow away until he had settled up. Hence the charge.

Applied the Hawk.
Frank Frost received a thrashing with the big whippers at the police court yesterday morning, being the sentence imposed on him for the theft of a quantity of ale bottles at the Grand Trunk freight sheds. This is the kind of punishment that will be meted out to young men in the future, and the effect should be salutary as a warning to the plough boys to laugh over afterwards, as the case when the fine has been imposed, which is paid by parents of the offenders.

Reported Society.
At the annual meeting of the Peterborough County Historical Society the following officers were elected:

At the suggestion of Lt.-Col. Bell the Museum Committee was asked to prepare a list of articles received for the museum during the year.

A LEGAL COMPLICATION

Four Years in the Courts Fighting Over a Farm Near Peterborough

A farm near Peterborough, which was originally owned by the late David Henderson, is the subject of litigation in the Court of Appeal, which is now in session at Osgoode Hall, Toronto. It has been over four years in the courts, and the history of the case illustrates the complications of the law.

The farm in question was occupied by Robert Henderson, a married son of the late David Henderson, and it was the intention of the owner to give it to him eventually. Robert predeceased his father and the latter decided to give the farm to the widow, and when he died the executor of his estate, who were two sons, named David Jr. and John H., endeavored to regain possession of the estate. Their suit was successful against the widow of Robert. She appealed and had the verdict reversed by the Divisional Court. The case was taken to the Court of Appeal and the original verdict was sustained. The widow had a daughter named Missie and she claimed the farm. At the trial the executor was successful, and the young girl appealed unsuccessfully to the Divisional Court. She has now another appeal in the Court of Appeal. During the litigation Mrs. Robert Henderson and her daughter have occupied the farm in dispute.

GEN. EXHIBITION DIRECTORS

Meet Last Night—The 57th Regt. Band Engaged for the Occasion

The Central Exhibition directors met in the Council Chamber last night for the purpose of applying the finishing touches to the big show.

President Fitzgibbon occupied the chair, and an immense amount of detail in connection with the Exhibition was arranged.

In the horse racing events the prize list reads "2 out of 3 beats." This is an error—it should be "3 out of 5." In the ladies department prizes will be awarded for carved work. This is an addition to the prize list. The 57th Regt. Band was engaged to furnish music for the afternoon and evening.

The Exhibition gives every promise of being bigger and better than ever.

Daughters of England

There will be a special meeting of the Daughters of England to-night at 8 o'clock, in the N.E. hall, for the purpose of making arrangements for the funeral of their late sister, Mrs. T. J. Subin.

The Hunting Season

On Thursday the open season for certain kinds of game commenced. The law allows the shooting of geese, plovers, partridge, snipe, grouse, hare, and black and grey squirrel.

The sale of partridge is prohibited for three years; so also is snipe. No game bird or wild fowl may be legally killed after an hour after sunset, or half an hour before sunrise.

Sunday hunting and fishing is strictly prohibited.

Muskat must not be killed from the 1st of May to the 1st of January.

Our Cornumund Deposits

We have obtained information, says the Campbellford Herald, from persons residing in Melbourn township, that last week two tons of cornumund was shipped from a mine situated a mile south-west from the head of Honey Lake.

The mining is superintended by Mr. F. Lewis, who is from England, and represents an English syndicate. As yet he has only commenced operations with a few men—"getting out samples," as he says, but the force will be increased later on. Several fine veins of this valuable mineral which is attracting so much attention among mining men, have been discovered on a property only about a mile and a half from the one above mentioned, and this, too, will no doubt be opened soon. The first named property is owned by a syndicate, and the other by a man residing in Northumberland Co. It is estimated that both properties will turn out large quantities of cornumund.

Established Cheese Market

The sales at Tuesday night's meeting of dairymen in Campbellford resulted in 250 boxes at $1.16 cents, and 650 at 8 cents. The former price was given by Mr. Bird, and the latter by Mr. Whitten and Mr. Bailey. Mr. Bird secured four factories, 250 boxes; Mr. Whitten five, 290 boxes; and Mr. Bailey seven, 370 boxes. Two or three refused to sell who accepted after the meeting. The buyers recommended the dairymen to board all their August cheese, and this was done. Seventeen factories offered the following—

City of Peterborough has discontinued her regular trips on the Otonabee. The City will run trips exhibiting week to week from river and lake ports.

One of our popular and witty ex-aldermen got off a good one the night before last, in one of our leading hostilities by remarking why does the clerk of this house resemble heaven? We might explain that the aforesaid clerk has lately had his head close shaved. All hands gave it up, when the ex-alderman explained that it was because that "There would be no parting or dying there."

The special committee to which was referred the question of alleged partiality that had arisen in connection with the entrance examination met on Thursday night and all the parties concerned were heard. It is understood that the Board of Examiners were exonerated from any blame in connection with the case. However, the committee's report to the Board will give the result of the hearing.

Application will be made at the next session of the Ontario Legislature for an act to incorporate the Haliburton, Whitney and Mattawa railway, to construct a railway from a point at or near the present terminus of the Grand Trunk railway at Haliburton to a point on the Ottawa, Arnprior & Parry Sound railway at Whitney, Ont., and in a northerly direction to Mattawa on the Ottawa river, with power to equip and operate by steam or electricity.

An exchange says—The days of plank sidewalks are numbered and corporations who continue their use are simply throwing away money. In this connection, Provincial Road Commissioner Campbell, the best authority in Canada, says—"Planks are not an economical material for sidewalks. Timber subject to alternate moisture from the ground and rain and heat from the sun cannot help but decay rapidly. A plank walk properly constructed will last five years then repairs commence. At the end of fifteen years the walk has cost as much for repairs as it cost in the first place, therefore the average life of plank walk may be seven years. The best material for sidewalks is artificial stone."

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Mr. T. C. Elliott was up to Toronto Tuesday on business.

Miss Maude Pickup, of Millbrook, is visiting Miss Sherlock, Stewart St.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Harrison, of Norwood, are visiting friends in town.

Mrs. Orde, late of Peterborough, has taken up house at No. 18 Grosvenor St., Toronto.

Miss Nellie McKee has returned from a visit to Campbellford. Miss Phoebe Owens accompanied her.

Mr. Douglas Thom, of Pickering, is visiting at the residence of Village Clerk Wood, of Ashburnham.

Mrs. W. H. Roberts has returned to town, after spending a month at the lakes.

Miss Gerie Kendry has been in Toronto for the last few days visiting Miss Ruby Eakins.

Miss Mary Alexander, of Peterboro, has returned home after a visit with friends in Port Huron and Sarnia.

Campbellford Herald—The Misses Davidson of Peterboro, are visiting at the residence of Mrs. John Shannon and at R. Shannon's.

Mr. Wm. Buchanan, of Peterboro, and Bert Buchanan, Alliston, are spending a few holidays with Fred Pendrie and other friends in town—Millbrook Reporter.

Mrs. Charles Robertson, 500 Aylmer St., who has been suffering from the past three weeks with heart failure, is dangerously ill, very little hope being entertained of her recovery.

Mrs. John Whitelaw, of Colburg, who has been visiting her brothers, Mr. Lewis Glover, Allandale, and Mr. Peter Glover, Ashburnham, returned home yesterday morning.

The many friends of Mr. D'Eny-court Strickland, of Lakefield, will be pleased to learn that he has been placed in charge of the Pembroke branch of the Quebec bank. Mr. Strickland was for some time a accountant of the Montreal office.

Fell From a Horse

We clip the following from the Orlilia News-Letter. The Clarence Hall mentioned in the paragraph is a son of Mr. Maxwell Hall, who formerly resided in Peterboro.

Monday morning at Clarence Hall, youngest son of Mr. Maxwell Hall, of "Dunbar," was riding on horseback down River street, the girl of the saddle broke and he was precipitated to the ground, falling on the back of his head, which was badly cut and bruised. He sustained a severe shaking up besides, but is able to be out again although still very weak from the effects of the fall.

River Notes

We understand that the proprietors of the several steam launches plying the waters in this vicinity have been pulled for not complying with the law, requiring that all vessels be registered, and they have been requested to pay a nominal fine or stand a lawsuit, and in future to see that their several vessels are registered as required by law. The vessel owners complained of contend that this is a hardship and express the wish that the law be changed so as not to interfere with private yachts that do not carry passengers for hire.

The steamer Eclipse arrived in port on Thursday evening with a crew of wood which was delivered at the Ashburnham wharf.

The steamer City of Peterborough arrived yesterday at Ashburnham wharf and also unloaded a large crew of wood. Both boats pulled out together last evening for Rice Lake to bring up a further supply.

The steamer Eclipse which was the first boat to pull out, occasioned quite an excitement after leaving. A spark from the smokestack lighted in the centre of the woodpile just unloaded, and started a brisk fire, which was, fortunately, noticed by Commodore Calcutt, who promptly called on the crew of the City of Peterborough, and the call was promptly responded to by bringing the hose of the City into requisition and they soon had the fire under control. Capt. Lane is to be congratulated on having such an efficient fire department on board his splendid boat.

I kept on until I had taken several more bottles and the sores and itching have disappeared and my hair has grown out." Mrs. J. G. Brown, Brantford, Ontario.

"I was all run down and had no appetite. I had a tired feeling all the time. I was advised to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I did so and it benefited me so much that I would not be without it." Mrs. G. I. Burnett, Central Norton, N. B.

The News in its report of the C.L.A. Executive meeting yesterday at Toronto says: The principal event of the day was the clearing up of the now notorious squabble resulting from the recent meeting at Peterboro of the local team and the Orlilia. After a severe reprimand from President Lennox, Counsellor Keim and Counsellor King finished the presentation of voluminous evidence, and awaited the committee's verdict. It was decided that the game should be played over on neutral grounds, to be mutually agreed upon before Sept. 20. Failing an agreement the President will name the date, place of battle and officials. The gate receipts are to be divided in proportion to the expenses of the competing clubs.

Ontario News—Percy Rubridge, of last season's Peterboro twelve, is playing with Rochester Empire. He suffered a dislocation of the right shoulder during the recent visit of the Peterboro men to the Flower City.

RUGBY FOOTBALL

At practice game will be played between the following teams this afternoon.

Flowers—Back, Sandy Hall, half backs, R. Collins, G. Buchanan, L. King, quarter back, P. Kelly, scrumming, G. Gaudin, J. Lebar, J. McPherson, wings, Reade, A. Collins, Ritchie, Mathias, Lynch, Dunlop, Glover.

Johns—Back, McOney, half backs, V. McWilliams, W. H. Haulton, F. Lakey, quarter back, A. J. McClellan, scrumming, H. Burnham, C. Bell, Collier, wings, Ardagh, P. Crossley, H. McBurn, Munson and G. Bell, Phelan, J. McCab, Hygarth.

Game to be called at 4 o'clock. Any others wishing to play will please turn out in uniform to-morrow.

MISCELLANY

Tom Cannon, the famous English champion wrestler, is in America. He has issued a challenge to anybody in the world, and posted the money with Sam Austin at the Police Gazette. The challenge is directed particularly to Jenkins, of Cleveland, and Charlie Whitmer, of Cincinnati.

By the articles of agreement for the Freshford-Lynch brothers race at Halifax, the former were to be allowed a sum as expenses, part of this to go towards the purchase of tickets. These were to be forwarded to Montreal, but on the arrival there of Rice and Durand no tickets were forthcoming, neither had any arrangements been made for sending the scullers on. The western men were therefore obliged to pay out $25 each, besides the cost of taking their shells along.

Obituary Notes

The death of Jane Martha Fairman, 46 Chamberlain street, widow of the late Thomas J. Fairman, occurred yesterday after a long illness, borne with Christian fortitude. Deceased was a valued member of All Saints Church and was held in high esteem by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. In her death her family has sustained a great bereavement, and the community has lost a Christian woman widely respected. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. Place of interment Little Lake Cemetery.

The death of Mrs. John Bennett, River road, Otonabee, took place very suddenly Thursday evening. The old lady was at tea with the rest of the family and half finished her meal when she suddenly sat back in her chair and expired without saying a word.

Her death came as a very sudden shock to her friends, as during the day she had driven up to Peterboro and seemed more than usually bright and cheerful. The deceased was 71 years of age and leaves a husband and large family to mourn her loss. She was a daughter of the late David McKigue, of Emily, and a sister of Mrs. Wm. Dawson, of Ashburnham. The funeral will take place from the homestead, River Road, Otonabee, at 2:30 this afternoon, interment being in the Little Lake Cemetery.

Lieut. Col. Sam Hughes has gone north towards Hudson Bay with a party of Indian guides and boatmen. He was met by some travellers 300 miles northwest of Winnipeg. It is thought that the trip has been undertaken in connection with some railway project.

DIFFERENCE OF OPINION

Relatives of Mrs. Bowering in Doubt as to the Cause of Her Death

The Coroner's Certificate and the Result of an Investigation at Variance—Authority Consulted

Toronto, Sept. 16.—The relatives in Toronto of Mrs. Bowering, who died in Jackson, Michigan, towards the end of August and was buried in St. James Cemetery on Thursday, the 25th of that month, consider that the circumstances surrounding her death are so much enshrouded in doubt that they have consulted Crown Attorney Dewart Coroner Powell with a view to disinterring the remains and having a postmortem examination made so as to settle the question once and for all.

Mrs. Bowering who was aged 35 and whose maiden name was Howard, about 15 years ago became the second wife of a soap boiler of the same name who then resided in Toronto and was employed at Taylor's soap factory.
She has four sisters in the city, and William Howard, who keeps a confectionery store at 441 Queen street west, her brother. Seven or eight years ago she and her husband removed to Jackson, Mich., where he has since carried on his occupation. The husband had by his former wife a son of some 19 years of age, and there were also four children of the second marriage. Bowering is well known in Toronto, and has relatives and friends here.

About a week before the death of Mrs.
Bowering one of her sisters in Toronto was startled by the receipt of a letter from the stepson informing her that his stepmother had shown him some poisonous compound, at the same time stating that he would see the use of it in a short time. In a few days a telegram was received from Jackson that Mrs. Bowering was seriously ill, followed in another day or two by a second one that she was out of danger, and on the following day by a third, which announced her death.

A PECULIAR FEATURE.

Now comes a peculiar feature of the case. The Coroner at Jackson viewed the body, and gave a certificate that death was due to morphia poisoning, and this was mentioned on the transit permit which was attached to the coffin upon its arrival at the Union Station, Toronto. An investigation was commenced at Jackson, but no post-mortem examination was held, and the body was allowed to be sent away before the inquiry was concluded. As stated, the funeral took place on Thursday. On the Monday following Mr. Howard went to Jackson, and found that those conducting the inquiry had on that day given a decision that death had resulted from spinal meningitis. Upon this the coroner observed that he had made a mistake and issued another certificate in accordance with this finding. The relatives are at a loss to know how so important a discrepancy can have arisen.

While in Jackson Mr. Howard made inquiries, and obtained information which made him desirous of exhuming
the body.

Mrs. Bowering, it is said had $2000 in the bank, and her husband stated that he had arranged that this sum might go to her children.

When in Toronto Mr. Bowering expressed great attention by his deep profession of grief. He was so overcome upon his arrival here to attend the funeral that he fainted upon the station platform, and afterwards at two other places. He commented to Mr.
E. J. Humphreys, the undertaker, upon the fact that American women were so much addicted to the use of morphine.

Mr. Howard to-day is in Fergus making arrangements with a brother for the sepulchre to be taken. He has already arranged with Mr.
Humphreys and Dr. Powell for the exhumation, which is expected to take place in a day or two.

DESTROYING THE RECORDS

Spaniards in Porto Rico Destroying the Land Records

San Juan, Porto Rico, Sept. 16.—It is probable that friction will arise over the action of the Spanish garrison in destroying much valuable property almost under the nose of the American Peace Commission.

While at the Captain-General's palace lines of police were slung and high officers smilingly bowing to Rear-Admiral Schelt, General Gordon, and General Brooke, over by the arsenal hand-reds of Spanish soldiers were busily engaged in dumping barrel after barrel of powder and cask after cask of ammunition, rifles and all kinds of military articles into the sea.

This has been going on for weeks.
Government property, which will revert to the United States is being systematically destroyed by the command of Spanish officials, rather than it should fall into the hands of Americans.

This surreptitious destruction unfortunately includes many valuable records and maps which vitally effect the island. These documents in large quantities, it is positively known, have been,
and are now, being destroyed or sequestered.

Clanking of land titles, obliteration of court records and inventories of Government property and works, and confusion of revenue receipts and disbursements are only a few of the possible hurts.

Among the property destroyed was series of maps of the island, which required eight years in making, and cost $30,000.

SOUTH SEA RATS

The rats of the South Sea Islands are of a species different from the domestic pests of civilized communities. They are rarely seen about the houses, possibly for the reason that Polynesian dwellings offer little to attract such marauders; but the fields are full of them, and it results that gardening suffers from their ravages. Watermelons suffer most conspicuously, for the rats wait until the melon is just right for eating, and then the morning shows a carefully excavated rind. The only way a white man in the South Sea can make sure of a melon is to box it up in an old biscuit tin just as soon as it has attained its full size. Nor are the rats restricted to a vegetable diet. Eggs and young chickens vanish over night unless protected by wire nets. In the absence of predatory birds and mammals which might keep down the numbers of the rats, they overrun the island so completely that they leave regular paths through the woods as plainly marked as if trodden for years by human feet.

When the rainy season sets in the rats appear about the houses and may render some service in reducing the numbers of insects, which become particular annoying at that season. But in the houses of white people the benefit is hardly great enough to compensate for the noise which the rats make all night long scampering over the roofs and floors and squeaking.

That the Polynesian rat is indigenous needs scarcely the testimony of naturalists. It enters into the ancient stories of the islanders in countless fables. According to one tale, the rat was the astute animal which he is held to be in other folk lore. Long ages ago the rat had wings and flew by day among the birds, while the bat cajoled the rat into lending him his wings. They were never returned, and since that time the rat has never been able to get back to his flying kind, yet the bat, in fear that the birds would punish him for his theft, never ventures to fly until night has fallen. Another tale credits the rat with the invention of the canoe. He was little content that the bird and the canoeist, his constant companion, could pass from island to island in the elements in which they were respectively at home, while he was confined to solid ground. He set his wits at work and gnawed a rude canoe out of a pine trunk. In this he invited his companions to sail with him. They had not gone far before a wave topped the canoe over and spilled the passengers. The bird was safe because a flap of his wings raised him into the air, the cuttlefish was at home in the water, but the rat would have drowned had it not been for the cuttlefish, which took him on his head and ferried him to shore. The proof of this is that the head of the cuttlefish shows to this day the marks made by the rat as he clung to the slippery perch. After this initial failure the rat spent much time in thought upon the problem, and at last hit upon the device of attaching an out-rigger to the left hand side of his canoe.
This was found an immediate success, and thus was made the first island canoe, which has never changed its pattern in any particular since the rat first gnawed it out and made it stable.

All over the Pacific islands the native rat has been a favorite article of food.
The rat being for the most part a vegetable feeder, the flesh is dainty and has no strong flavor. Large hunting parties were often sent out from the different native villages to hunt the rat with spear and bow and arrow. The whole Polynesian race never advanced to the use of the bow and arrow for the desperate purposes of war, but confined its archery entirely to the rat hunt. In Hawaii and also in Tonga the rat hunt was sport confined to chiefs, who frequently showed great rivalry in the making of high records. The chief followed up a well marked rat path, while his beaters scouted the bush for long distances on each side, and by about-ing and thrashing the clumps of shrubbery drove the game in the direction of the path. At the close of the sport the rival hunters dined on the catch and settled the pellets, often amounting to a large number of chic mats. So extensive was the ambling of these rat hunters that the missionaries, both in Hawaii and in Tonga, found it necessary to suppress the sport.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES. IT PAYS YOU

THE BLACK SHIP.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS.

What was known in marine circles as "The Black Ship Mystery" covered a space of a year in the last year of the files. If there was any honor on first sighting the black ship, it goes to the rig Sea Gull, bound from Boston to Liverpool. I was second mate of the rig on that voyage, and on the night of the 30th of April, 1899, we were lying in the harbor of Liverpool. There was no air along the docks, but a draft of wind came from the north, and a light breeze sprang up on the water. I was on the deck, and I saw a small, full-rigged ship, and anything about her which would bear a coat of black was painted that color. The hull was a much finer model than ours, but there was a slowly look aloft, and her sails were not well set. To my amazement, I could see only one person on her deck. The man at the wheel. There was no officer, no lookout, no sailors looking at us over the rail. It was about ten minutes after the stranger came down upon us before I called Captain Crawford. He took the glass from my hand and gave her a looking over, and there was a troubled look on his face as he turned to me with:

"This is about the queerest thing that has overtaken me in all my experience. She seems to have a dead man at the wheel, and if she has crew aboard they are in hiding. I'll hail her and see if I can wake anybody up."

"The captain had a voice like a foghorn, and his tones would have carried to a ship a full mile away. He roared out a 'Ship ahoy!' and hailed again and again, but there was never a movement about the stranger. The black ship was holding true to her course and seemed to be as well steered as our own craft, and while things had a queer look it was only a mystery as yet. Finding that his hails were not answered the captain took the glass and again a full five minutes with it at his eyes. He had just lowered it when the five men of my watch came aft in a body, and one of the oldest of the men doffed his hat and respectfully said:

"Captain Crawford, if I may be so bold as to say it, that there craft is a pirate which is going to lay us aboard very soon or it is a death ship, and we can't get away from her any too quick!"

"There are no pirates in these seas," replied the captain as he rounded on the man, "and as for a death ship, that's all nonsense. I had men can't make head and stern a ship."

"But look at her sails, sir," persisted the man. "They are rusty old, and I don't believe they have been touched for weeks. What she is carrying is only enough for a gale, and if she wants a race we'd be drawing away from her in no time."

With a growl at their superstition, the captain ordered the men forward, but I could see that he was both puzzled and troubled as he ordered the men at the wheel to lift a point and bring us nearer the stranger. The vessel had scarcely been moved when the stranger also lifted. The man was then ordered to let her fall off two points, and the yards were trimmed for the new course, but the men were still pulling soft hauling when the stranger fell off and thus preserved her position. Neither in lifting nor in falling off was there any pull at his yards or sheets, but as the wind was light there was no actual heel of this to keep his course.

"He can't be a pirate," whispered Captain Crawford to me as we stood gazing and wondering. "If it were any one meaning us harm, he knows the size of our crew and that we are unarmed, and he would have been aboard long ago. It may be a craft which has lost everybody aboard by fever or plague, but how is it that she sticks to us as she does? Haven't seen the man at the wheel make the slightest move since we first set eyes on him?"

By this time the chief mate and all the men of his watch had turned out, and for a time all discipline was forgotten in the eagerness to solve the mystery. Twice again we lifted, but the black ship was not 30 seconds behind us. Then we fell off, but she performed the same maneuver, and her course was still parallel. Of a sudden there was a long drawn wail from the south, and the light wind became a rattling breeze in a moment. We were not only off our course, but the men had to rush to stations to trim sheets and yards, and for five minutes all were so busy that no one paid any attention to the stranger. When the bustle was over, the black ship had disappeared. The man was shining just as brightly as before, but though a man was even seen lift with a glass and sweep the sea foot by foot not a sign of our mysterious visitor could be discovered. An entry was made in the logbook, I wrote the master out in detail, and every officer and man signed his name to the statement. It was published on our arrival in Liverpool, and while some entered at it others were inclined to believe that we had seen what we had seen.

It could have probably gone into history as a sailor's yarn, however, had the English merchantman Good Hope met with a queer adventure three weeks later. She had called at Freetown, in the Azores, and had made a run of 100 miles to the north and was going along under all sail one night at 10 o'clock when she overtook and passed up unknown craft. It was a starlight night, without the slightest sign of moon coming from the water. The unknown had no lights out and had passed within 100 feet. The chief mate had the watch and hailed her, but got no answer in return. He was still railing her carelessness in sailing the ship without a light when the craft came making after him and soon took up a position to leeward and only a few minutes later she was within 100 feet of the Good Hope. The stranger was repeatedly hailed, but made no answer. Only one single person could be seen aboard of her, and he was the man at the wheel—the figure which was without the shadow of a doubt the same as the figure of the ship gave him. He stood there clear enough under the naked eye, but the glare brought him so close that the light striking out under his weather-jacket was white as the light of the sun. For an hour the black ship kept a parallel course to that of the Good Hope, and the crew of the latter got a bad fright over it. There was no increase of the breeze, as in our case, but as the 15 men aboard stood staring at her she suddenly vanished from the face of the sea.

I was three months before the black ship was seen again. The American ship, the Bonny Belle, bound from New York to Portland, had left the Azores to the south and behind her, when one day as soon the breeze left her and there came a dead calm. The sea was down until there was only a glassy ground swell, and when night came on there was not a sail in sight. At midnight the moon rose, and so bright was its light that one could have read a book on deck. Half an hour after midnight, without warning, a strange craft suddenly came into view from the east, and when first seen was about a mile away. She was bows on at first, but coming down within half a mile of the Belle she swung around and displayed her broadside. The second mate had the watch, having come on at 12 o'clock, and after puzzling for a few minutes he called the captain. Captain and mate united their voices in a hush which was not answered, and a musket was brought up and fired three times without eliciting any reply. Captain Finch of the Belle was a hard-headed fellow, with no superstition in his composition, and when his hails were unanswered he said to his mate:

"Mr. Davis, that is undoubtedly the black ship we have seen and heard of so often, and here is our chance to solve the mystery and perhaps do a nice thing in the way of salvage. You will take a boat and pull off to her and see if she is a pirate!"

His mate hesitated for a moment and then refused to go. The second mate was appealed to, but he likewise refused. The captain could have ordered them taken up in their staterooms for the rest of the voyage, but he could not send his ship without officers, and after roundly cursing them for cowardice he declared that he would go himself. For a time every man of his crew refused to obey the order to lower a boat, but when Captain Finch said about single handed and said he would get the visit at all hazards two sailors stepped forward to accompany him.

The captain said of his adventure:

"When we had approached within a few fathoms of the strange craft, I ordered the men to cease rowing that I might look her over. She had no name painted on her stern or quarter. She was badly weather-beaten and there was much rust on her back side. Her model was well shaped, and any sailor could see that she was easily handled and sailed like a witch. We rowed twice around the ship, hailing her several times, and then I ordered the men to row me under her bows, that I might climb up by her bows. They hung in the wind and would have refused had I not promised them with the revolver I had brought in my pocket. As I climbed up the chains I ordered them to make the boat fast and one of them to follow me up. I counted on objects lying about which I really believed were dead men wrapped up in blankets, though for reasons shortly to be given I could not make sure of this. The decks were not otherwise littered up, though even in the brightest light I could see they had not been cleared for months.

"I was ready to go aft and was waiting for the men when I heard the splash of oars and turned about to discover that the craft was making off. I at once fired a shot over their heads and threatened to make targets of them, but menace them as I would the most they would do was to hold the boat at a distance of about 40 feet from the ship's side. To reach it I had to leap into the sea, and on my return to the Belle I could not induce others to row me back to the derelict. The men did not seem to fear her as a ghost ship so much as a plague ship. The entire crew were on deck and looking full at the black ship when she suddenly began moving away from us, headed to the north. There was not a breath of wind, and if there had been a current we should also have moved, but yet she slowly and gradually drew away from us, and in the course of an hour was entirely out of sight. My belief is that she was a plague ship, but at the same time I confess to being greatly mystified by her strange return."

The black ship was seen once more and for the first time about a month later. A British man-of-war was sent out to look for her, and after a cruise of two weeks back and forth without sighting her, the government craft found herself becalmed one night about midway between the Azores and Madeira. At half past 11 o'clock the black ship was discovered, and a sudden she appeared within half a mile of the man-of-war. Ten minutes after sighting the mysterious ship Captain Crumman of the Granopus had two boats in the water, and the officer in command had orders to board the derelict and search every foot of her. A party went the boat, but they never reached her. At a point about midway the black ship suddenly settled down, and two minutes later her topmasts were out of sight beneath the sea. Some bits of wreckage were picked up and preserved, but nothing that could identify her, and to this day her name, port of hail and the fate that made her a derelict are matters of conjecture. I have always held that she was a foreigner, and that her crew died of a kind of some terrible epidemic, but as her mysterious appearance and disappearance, and the nature of the accident that finally sent her to the bottom, I have no theory to advance. For a year or two afterward various ships reported as having seen the strange craft here and there, but these reports were not considered authentic and to further search was ever made.

Ayer's Asthma Cure

better known as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, has made a record for its remarkable cures of asthma. Cases that have been considered beyond hope or help have been cured by this remedy. We give two examples of such cures out of the many on record:

"My mother has been a great sufferer from asthma for the past ten years, and her recovery is almost without a parallel. On account of her advanced age—over seventy—she had but little hope of ever seeing her well again; but we are sincerely grateful to inform you that she has been entirely cured by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."

INGLES BANKS, Tar Brook, N.S.

"I was a sufferer for a long time from asthma, vainly endeavoring to procure relief in the use of ordinary remedies. At length I was induced to try a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The first bottle afforded me so much benefit that I continued the use of the remedy until entirely cured."

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Trent Valley Excursion.
The Board of Trade has made arrangements to hold the proposed excursion over the Trent Valley Canal route on Friday next. The excursion will leave the G.T.R. station at 6.35 a.m. for Lindsay, going from there to Burgin Lake, Fenelon Falls, Cameron Lake, Rosedale and Balsam Lake and returning the same evening.

Board of Trade.
The postponed meeting of the Board of Trade will be held to-morrow evening instead of to-night. The Town Council meets this evening and on the following night the Board of Trade will discuss a number of important industrial questions upon which the Council will have acted the evening previous.

Firehouse Burned.
The old Bailey homestead, a large brick residence on the third concession of Emily, some distance east of Chatham, was burned to the ground late Thursday night with all its contents. It was occupied by Mr. Sid Bailey. The origin of the fire was not learned nor could it be found whether there was any insurance or not, but the loss will be heavy. The residence was one of the best known in the district, old Mr. Bailey having for many years been reeve of the township.

Officers Elected.
At a meeting of the C.E. held on the following officers were elected:
President—Mr. W. W. Dickson.
Vice-President—Miss Annie Bennett.
Recording Secretary—Miss Ada Smithson.
Treasurer—Mr. R. A. Smithson.
Convenor Prayer Meeting Committee—Mr. A. Kent.
Convenor Social Committee—Miss E. Kent.
Convenor Lookout Committee—Mr. J. Kintred.
Organist—Miss Lizzie Kindred.
Reporter—Mr. S. A. Smithson.

A Banquet Proposed.
It has been proposed that Mr. J. L. Tarte, Minister of Public Works, should be tendered a banquet upon the occasion of his visit here to open the exhibition. The idea would be to make it a complimentary banquet tendered by both Liberals and Conservatives, and a meeting will be held on Tuesday evening next in the town clerk's office for the purpose of discussing and arranging the event. All citizens are invited to attend this meeting. It has been suggested that Mr. Tarte should be urged to remain over for a day and take a trip over the Trent Valley canal route, and an effort will be made to secure this.

A Wedding.
A happy event took place at the Baptist parsonage, Newwood, on Wednesday afternoon, when Mr. George Cumming, operator at Blairton, and youngest son of Mr. James Cumming, of Newwood, and Miss Blanche Fry, daughter of Mr. J. S. Fry, also of that place, were married by the Rev. Wm. Fear. The bride was attended by Miss Emma King, of Peterborough, and the groom by Mr. Fred Prout, of Marmora. After the ceremony the happy young couple took the westbound train for Toronto and Hamilton, where they will spend a few days with friends. The bride was the recipient of a number of handsome presents, including a gold watch, the gift of the groom, and a beautiful clock from the groomsmen.

SUCCESSFUL AT LAST.
"I was a sufferer from neuralgia in my side, and headaches. I followed numerous prescriptions without benefit and was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. When I had taken only one bottle I continued taking it until I was cured." Mrs. Carrie Price, Georgetown, Ontario.

Hood's Pills are the favorite family medicine. Easy to take, easy to operate. See.

THE FLEBISITE VOTE

A Correspondent Discusses the Probable Result of the Prohibition Plebiscite Vote

To the Editor of The Times—Dear Sir, In view of a recent fatal shooting accident—fresh in the minds of your readers, no doubt—and the fact that dealers in firearms and the public generally are not aware that a strict view is taken by the law in regard to the sale of pistols, air guns or ammunition, or the disposal of firearms to anyone without a record being kept of the sale, the following extracts from the statute in that behalf should be brought to the notice of dealers:

1. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, who sells or gives any pistol or air gun or any ammunition, therefore, to a minor under the age of sixteen years, unless he establishes, to the satisfaction of the justice before whom he is charged, that he used reasonable diligence in endeavoring to ascertain the age of the minor that he had good reason to believe that such minor was not under the age of sixteen years.

2. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding twenty-five dollars, who sells any pistol or air gun without keeping a record of such sale, thereof and the maker's name or any other mark by which such arm may be identified.

If the law in this respect was strictly enforced there would be fewer shooting accidents.

Yours truly,

NOT GENERALLY KNOWN

A Citizen Draws Attention to the Law Governing the Sale of Firearms

To the Editor of The Times—Sir, "What will be the result of the Plebiscite vote?" is the question of the hour, and one which is being frequently asked. Of course all depends on the electors themselves. I see no good reason, however, why the prohibition majority will not be as great as it was when the Provincial plebiscite was taken on the first of January, 1894. At that time, it will be remembered, the vote was taken in every municipality in Ontario in connection with the municipal election. The vote stood as follows—For Prohibition, 12,499, against 110,720 leaving a majority of 1,769 in favor of the measure. There is no doubt but that the prohibition has gone backward on that question since then. On the other hand it is considerable advancement has been made. The number of both tavern and shop licenses in the country has been reduced by some hundreds since then. There is no doubt but that there is less drinking now than then. The commitments to the jails in the province for drunkenness have fallen off nearly one-third in the last five years. Public opinion has kept all the time advancing on the Temperance question and if prohibition does not carry on the 29th inst. it will be because of apathy on the part of the electors.

Yours truly,
ONLOOKER.
Peterboro, Sept. 17th, 1898.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Miss Lizzie Ross, of Toronto, is visiting friends in town.

Miss Sullivan, of town, is visiting Mrs. J. A. O'Shea in Ashbridge.

Mr. W. S. Givens, of the Millbrook Reporter, was in town Saturday.

Mr. Wm. Stevenson, of Newwood, was in town Saturday on a business trip.

Mrs. Angus McPherson has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Jas. Carroll, at Young's Point.

The Misses Davidson are visiting at the residence of Mr. John Shannon, Campbellford.

Mrs. John O'Keefe has returned to town after spending some days visiting Newwood friends.

Miss Lola Yale has returned to Port Hope after visiting friends in town for several weeks.

Rev. W. L. Armitage has returned from Ontario where he was the guest of Mr. R. J. M. Perkins, B.A.

Rev. J. R. Potter left Saturday morning for Cardiff township on Presbyterian visitation.

Miss Hester Morris and her friend Miss Eliza Renshaw, of Blenheim, are the guests of Mrs. W. J. Green, Brockville.

Mr. Will McNeil left Saturday to resume his studies at Trinity College School, Port Hope.

Mr. R. J. Bird, an old Peterborougher, accompanied by Mrs. Bird and family, leave for their home in Chicago to-day after a pleasant two weeks visit with his mother and sister in town. Mr. Bird's many friends here were delighted to meet him again. He says Peterboro compares favorably with American towns, and has made rapid strides to the front during the past few years.

Mr. W. A. Shaw was in town Saturday and engaged Prof. P. H. Philp, of Colborne, to go to the North-West in the interests of the Newcombe Piano Co. Many will remember Prof. Philp, who spent last summer at a town in Mr. Shaw's piano parlors, and made a basket of friends for himself. Before he left Toronto Mr. Shaw had the pleasure of seeing his cousin, Mr. F. F. Hupker, who graduated with so much distinction from the Kingston Military College. Mr. Hunter is on his way to India, where he enters Her Majesty's service.

SHOOTING ON THE WING

Timely Hints for Local Hunters—How to Shoot a Bird When Flying

The open season for feathered game now being on a few hints might be acceptable to the many beginners now enthusiastically loading shells and making general preparations for this fall campaign.

Almost any person can kill a bird sitting, but find a difficulty in killing one on the wing. This difficulty arises mainly from the manner in which the shooter handles the gun. In the first place a man must be familiar with his gun. This can only be attained by constantly using it.

Some shooters put their guns away after they have returned from probably one week's shooting, and never take them out of the case again till the following year. The result is they handle them very awkwardly. Experience teaches that to be a good shot one cannot be too well acquainted with his gun. An opportunity to go shooting does not present itself every day, and the practice can be had by keeping your gun close at hand, and whenever convenient throw it to your shoulder, and right away object in the room, swinging the gun as though following a bird on the wing.

The question has often been asked as to how far to hold a gun ahead of a bird when flying. This has always been a difficult question to answer and explain to beginners, as all successful wing shot discharge the gun unconsciously, especially in field shooting. This is to say a gun is swung with the bird, and in great many cases the error made by beginners, and often, in fact, by old shots, is when pulling the trigger they stop the gun, and consequently shoot behind the bird.

It is sure of a bird within 30 or 40 yards hold ahead between 12 to 18 inches, and pull over the bird, as it is generally rising. If the distance is greater increase the lead. As to loading, nitro powders (Shultz preferred), are recommended as they are quicker and smokeless, and of greater penetration, not fouling the gun to the extent of black powder. Any young man desiring to become a good shot or fond of the sport should join the local gun club. There he has ample opportunity for practice and observation of old shots. As a final observation, "Kill nothing that is harmless when alive, and worthless when dead."

MUST OBEY OR GET OUT

Proposed to Expel Methodists Who Dance, Play Cards or Go to the Theatre

Three members of the Methodist Church in Canada who disobey the discipline of the Church by playing cards, dancing and going to the theatre will be expelled from church membership, if Mr. Thomas Nixon, of Winnipeg, has his way. He has given notice at the General Conference in Toronto of the following resolution:

"Whereas, this General Conference has decided that the footnote to Wesley's rules of discipline be retained as part of the discipline of the church; and whereas, it has been freely stated by ministers and laymen on the floor of the Conference that this part of the discipline is often and openly violated with impunity;

Therefore, it is ordered that superintendents of circuits and mission stations, and they are hereby instructed, to discontinue the names of all who violate the discipline in this behalf and remove from the roll of membership the names of all who violate the commands or prohibitions contained in said footnote, as well as those of the regular disciplinary rules of the church."

A NORTH-END CITIZEN

In an Endeavor to Change His Wife's Opinion On His Home Trouble

A north-end citizen who resides in the locality known as Auburn, is hardly on speaking terms with his good wife, over a little mistake he made a few days ago. Returning home late one night, and feeling the need of a change, he went to his "inners," he was in the pantry, and, gathering together considerable provender, was soon on the outside of a substantial meal. Wishing to show his wife that he was wrong in her frequent complaints, he was endeavoring to wash up the dishes he had been using. Gathering up the dishes he carried them out into the summer kitchen, which was dimly lighted by the lamp in the adjoining room, picked up a large kettle and put it under the water tap. Then he looked in the dish. Unfortunately the good woman had been preserving plums that day, and she had left the preserves standing in the very kettle he had used for a dishpan. There was a scene the next morning over which the curtains had better be drawn, and which, as a result, our friend expects to live in plain brown and butter during the coming winter unless he can square accounts by indulging his angry wife at the fall millinery openings.

SUNDAY NIGHT RAID

Chief Constable and P. W. Miller Raid an Alibi of Disorderly House Last Night

Chief of Police Ross and the Children's Aid Society officer, Mr. F. W. Miller, last night swooped down upon Mrs. Bealright, who is charged with keeping an immoral house, and captured the entire family and a couple of alleged frequenters.

The family is comprised of a number of small children and a young girl about 14 years of age, all of whom were locked up in a cell at the police station. The charge will be investigated at this morning's session of the Police Court.

Mrs. Bealright has been in court before on a similar charge, and the Children's Aid Society wish to secure control of the family in order that they may be removed from their present immoral surroundings.

The Society is performing a noble task in town and is deserving of every assistance.

Mr. C. H. Cross, who has for some time been night operator at the C.P.R. station, has been temporarily transferred to Tweed as day operator.

The People's Faith

Firmly Grounded Upon Real Merit—They Know Hood's Sarsaparilla Absolutely and Permanently Cures When All Others Fail

Hood's Sarsaparilla is not merely a simple preparation of Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and a little Iodide of Potassium. Besides these excellent ingredients, it also contains those great anti-bilious and liver remedies, Mandrake and Dandelion. It also contains those great kidney remedies, Uva Ursi, Juniper Berries, and Pipe-sassa.

Nor are these all. Other very valuable curative agents are harmoniously combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla and it is carefully prepared under the personal supervision of a regularly educated pharmacist.

Knowing these facts, is the abiding faith the people have in Hood's Sarsaparilla a matter of surprise? You can see why Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, where other medicines totally, absolutely fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5.

—The different services at St. John's church yesterday of a Thanksgiving nature, forming the completion of the Harvest Festival.

—The regular monthly meeting of the McAll Mission will be held in the Y.M.C.A. parlors this afternoon at 3.30 p.m. (Being undenominational, the meeting is open to all ladies of the town and vicinity, and they are cordially invited to attend.)

—Some of our local Methodist men are "worthy" as a result of the visit of Inspector R. W. Errol, of Peterboro. It appears that for some reason a section of the marine law compelling the registration and inspection of steam yachts, police barges and rowing boats has been enforced on these waters, and Mr. Errol has been deputed by the Department to ascertain the names of the delinquents and compel them to pay their just dues. (The yacht men think it is quite proper that the owners of water-logged and rotten rowing boats should be made suffer, while the steam-yacht men consider it only fair that police-carrying yachts should have to pass a rigid inspection, but say that to have rowing boats yearly inspected is a good thing too far. We understand that several boat-owners will have to pay considerable sums.—Lindsay Post.)

Arrested in Chicago

A Chicago despatch dated September 16th says: "A. F. D. Crofton, who returned from the Klondike country three days ago has been arrested charged with passing a forged draft for $1,200 three years ago on the First National Bank of Chicago. Crofton strongly denies his guilt."

"Five years ago the police authorities say, Crofton and one J. J. Jellet passed bogus drafts on Chicago, Montreal and Winnipeg banks to the extent of $12,500. Jellet was sentenced to five years at Winnipeg, and Crofton was caught in El Paso, Texas, and brought back to Chicago for trial. Owing to his youth he was given an indefinite term in the Ontario reformatory. Having served one year, Crofton managed to secure his release. After leaving Ontario, the police state, Crofton, by representing himself as the western agent of a Boston, Mass., investment company, managed to secure $1,200 from the First National Bank of Chicago. He then said to have gone to Dawson, Alaska, where he struck rich, and was on his way east to spend the winter when arrested."

Help is wanted when the nerves become weak and appetite fails. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives help by making the blood rich and pure.

TRAIN-WRECKERS IN OLD ENGLAND

Desperate Attempt to Throw Passenger Trains Off the Track

The Prince of Wales Had Leg—The Duke of Connaught Having a High Old Time in France

London, Sept. 17.—The drought continues throughout the greater part of Great Britain. The temporary fall in the temperature early in the week raised hopes which were doomed to disappointment. The temperature has again risen and London continues in a state of discomfort. The outburst in the East End of London, where the supply of water has been reduced to dangerous limits, is taking the form of influential public meetings, which violently denounce the East End Water Company for neglecting to take proper measures to assure a supply of water, and calling for municipal control of the water-works. In the meantime the sanitary conditions are so bad in some districts that there is serious fear of epidemics.

STREET CAR TROUBLES.

The North of London is also suffering from an epidemic of strikes, in the shape of a street car famine, due to a strike of the hostlers, and the consequent dismissal of a couple of agitators. The many thousands of business people who rely on cheap conveyance to the city have been seriously inconvenienced by the sudden stoppage of traffic which occurred on Wednesday last. Public sympathy inclines to the side of the company, which has taken the bull by the horns, and has dismissed all the strikers engaging outsiders to take their places.

TRAIN-WRECKERS AT WORK.

The whole of Great Britain has been startled by an epidemic of railroad outrages. On the North-western and Midland Railroads, in the neighborhood of Northampton, there have been several most determined attempts to wreck passenger trains. The most notable obstruction was constructed across the track, and one express train had a narrow escape from disaster. It ploughed through a veritable barricade, but did not leave the rails. The most alarming feature of the outrages is the fact that the police have not been able to obtain the slightest clue to the perpetrators, though a hundred detectives have been scouring the district. Consequently a panic similar to that of Jack-the-Ripper seems prevalent. One theory is that the crime was the work of a band of train-wreckers looking for plunder, and emulating the far west hold-ups.

THE PRINCE'S BAD LEG.

After passing eight weeks on an invalid's chair, the Prince of Wales, this week for the first time, was able to walk a few paces with the aid of a stick. He has been to the hospital at Portsmouth. Private letters declare the Prince, lately has been very irritable at the enforced medical restraint, and that he has even declared that a permanent limp would be a cheap penalty for release from the hospital. It is understood that the attending physicians finally yielded, and allowed the Prince to journey to Scotland, in order to appease their feelings, and also to arrest the strong stimulus which rest and a sea air appetite have given to his increasing aversion. The bar apparent will still require the use of crutches for many weeks to raise the apparatus which has been fitted to his knee.

THE DUKE A FAVORITE

The Duke of Connaught has been the hero of the French army since the battle of Moulin, which he attended as President. He has been a splendid display of horsemanship before the French staff, when a borrowed horse startled by the firing, tried to bolt, and he was thrown. A French soldier's report said that the Duke had been disengaged himself unhurt. On the following day, during a halt, he mounted the horse, weighed the articles and finally took the knapsack, strapped it on his own shoulders, and walked up and down in front of the President and the general, in order to test whether the straps hampered his movements. The spectators were greatly amused, and the private soldiers loudly cheered him.

President Faure on Friday decorated the Duke with the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor.

BIENMARCK'S LIFE.

The leading newspapers here scathingly review Herr Moritz Busch's life of Prince Bismarck, which was recently published. The general opinion is that both the author and his book suffered greatly by the revelations made. The British naturally chiefly resent the late Prince Bismarck's expressions of hostility to Great Britain, and to the Queen and to her daughter, the former Empress Frederick of Germany, with which the book teems.

The Daily Telegraph says that if the work reveals the real Bismarck, he lowered the moral tone of the whole of Europe, adding "Everyone knew he made unscrupulous use of the press but according to Herr Busch, he deliberately instructed his hirlings to disseminate absolute falsehoods."

QUASHED THE CONVICTIONS

The Questions to be Asked in a Liquor Appeal

Belleville, Sept. 16.—On July 20 last James E. Ketcheson, of the Windsor, and Samuel Curry, of the Queen's were each convicted of having sold liquor during prohibited hours on Saturday, July 9. The prosecutions were entered, with others at the instance of two paid informers employed by Provincial Officer Thos. H. James, of Trenton. They were to receive $5 in each case where a conviction was secured, and nothing to be paid where they failed. In Curry's case the informers failed to identify the seller, although the defendant, his son, and his bartender were present in court, and they disagreed as to the description of the person. The defendant stated that no person such as described was in the service of the defendant.

In Ketcheson's case one of the informers swore Ketcheson had served them, and the other thought it was not. A flask of amber colored liquor was produced as that purchased. Ketcheson denied having sold the informers, saying he had never seen them before, and had no such flask in the house. John Grant who boarded in the hotel, denied that the informers were there. The defendant was each convicted by 25. Police Magistrate Flint, and fined $25.

Today an appeal from both convictions was heard before Judge Fralick. Mr. Haverson, of the License Holders' Association, argued the appeal for Ketcheson and Curry. Crown Attorney Anderson appeared for the inspectors.

Mr. Anderson read without objection, the depositions of the informers taken at the trial. Mr. Haverson called the witnesses for the defence. On cross-examining Ketcheson, Mr. Anderson asked him if on the night in question he had said to others than the informers, Mr. Haverson objected. His Honor ruled the question inadmissible, on the ground that there had been no inquiry at the trial before the magistrate as to a sale to other than the informers, and that on appeal another sale need not be inquired into. After hearing the evidence and argument of counsel, Judge Fralick allowed the appeals, and quashed both convictions with costs to be paid by the inspectors.

THE DREYFUS CASE

Minister of Justice will Take Opinion of a Special Commission

Paris, Sept. 17.—The Council met at the Elysee Palace at 9.30 a.m., President Faure presiding. According to a semi-official note, the Minister of Justice said that after having examined the papers he felt unable to decide upon the question of the proposed revision of the Dreyfus case until he had taken the opinion of a special commission of the Ministry of Justice. The Cabinet, thereupon, authorized the Minister to summon a commission for the purpose. It is reported now that the portfolio of Minister of War will be offered to General Lebrun or to M. De Freycinet, and that if they refuse to accept the office M. Briason, as previously cabled, will assume the duties of Minister for War, in addition to the Premiership, and M. Valois will be appointed Minister of the Interior.

THE MINISTER OF WAR RESIGNS.

Paris, Sept. 17.—General Zurlinden, the Minister of War, has tendered his resignation.

General Zurlinden's resignation is as follows: "I have the honor to beg you to receive my resignation as Minister of War. An exhaustive study of the papers in the Dreyfus case has convinced me too fully of his guilt for me to accept, as the head of the army, any other solution than that of the maintenance of the judgment in its entirety."

KILLED AT OMDURMAN

Toronto Boy Dies in the Famous Charge of the 21st Lancers

Toronto, Sept. 17.—William Oldbury, armorer at the Old Fort, this morning received notification from the English War Office that his son, Private Wm. Oldbury, of the 21st Lancers, was killed during the famous charge of that regiment in the recent battle with the dervishes at Omdurman. Young Oldbury was formerly a member of the Q. O. R. and enlisted in the band of the 21st Lancers, then a Hussar regiment, some five years ago. When the regiment was ordered to the front, the band was left behind, but the young fellow obtained special permission from his colonel to join the combatant part of the corps. He was 23 years old.

PANIC IN SAN DOMINGO

Exchange on New York Falls One Hundred Percent

Porto, Plata, San Domingo, Sept. 17.—Serious results may come from a widespread commercial panic in this country. Public discontent has attained such a force that the situation of the present Government is critical. The trouble has been accumulating for more than a month, and is laid at the door of the financial system of the country. The exchange on New York has been gradually rising, and the increase in a month has been more than one hundred per cent.

This has caused great distress through out the island. Merchants have found their plans all upset, and have been compelled to cancel orders for goods. Cuts in wages have also been made in many instances, and these have caused strikes, which threaten to result in trouble for the Government.

Every effort is being made by the banks and merchants to avert disaster, and the Government is being urged to take radical measures to relieve the people.

TALKED ON LABOR LAWS

Trades Congress Makes a Representation to the Quebec Conference

Winnipeg, Man., Sept. 20. — The British Columbia delegates raised much this morning. A revolution was movement excitement at the Trades Congress to do away with inter-provincial contracts being made between employers and employees.

Mr. Bellanger of Montreal and Mr. Brownlee took strong grounds against the motion, the former of the general lines of work, and the latter in the interest of railway brotherhoods' graduated systems of promotion.

STRONG LAW FOR A MILD OFFENCE.

Delegate Smith made a further explanation but they wanted a law simply annulling such contracts when the men got to British Columbia and found that they had been misled by the employer at the time he induced the worker to sign the agreement. Delegate O'Donoghue said the British Columbia delegates were unwise in their present contention. What they wanted was a law simply like the one in the United States, where the Ontario law, which gave a man the privilege of annulling his agreement if he finds it is a bad one and has been signed by him as a result of false representations. Finally this contention prevailed, and the mover was allowed to withdraw his resolution.

THE ALIEN LABOR LAW.

Following this came the resolution which referred to the Alien Labor Law.

The principle of this motion was to take steps to represent to the Quebec Conference that this law was entirely unsatisfactory to the working people of this country, inoperative in its machinery, and not wanted by organized labor. It further proclaimed that what was wanted by Canadian workmen was a law to prevent importation into Canada of persons im-

Delegates O'Donoghue, Fitzpatrick, Montreal, Keay, Brownlee, Car, let and Stewart, expressed themselves on the subject. The latter moved to strike out the "unsought by organized labor," which carried.

Congress was unanimous on the subject of desiring a universal law prohibiting everyone from coming into the country under contract, no matter what nationality. The resolution carried unanimously on the understanding that if the Quebec Conference did not result in the abolition of the Alien Labor Law in both countries the Congress would move to have the Canadian law made workable.

THE UPLIFTING OF CHINA

The Emperor Has Announced the Adoption

Pekin, Sept. 20.—A remarkable series of imperial edicts has been published during the last few days. The edicts have startled the officials, while making a favorable impression upon the old foreign residents, who are usually skeptical as to the practical value of such orders.

The Emperor has addressed to the people a long explanation of his new policy, declaring that in many respects.

WESTERN CIVILIZATION.

The most radical edict establishes a postal service throughout the Empire. In it the Emperor asks the people to co-operate with him in making the newly established system a success, assuring them that they will thus aid in strengthening the resources of the Empire.

FREEDOM FOR THE MASSES.

A fresh edict followed, extending practically to everybody the right to memorialise the throne, a privilege heretofore restricted to entertain classes.

TO STOP BOODLING.

The latest edict commands that monthly accounts be rendered to the Government of the receipts and ex-

The Emperor directs that the edicts be posted throughout the country, in order that the people may see his endeavors to promote their welfare.

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 21, 1898

TROLLEY AND STEAM LINES.

In the opinion of President Tuttle of the Boston & Maine Railroad, the steam railroad cannot win against the trolley in the matter of suburban traffic. Summarizing the advantages enjoyed by the trolley, he says that the electric cars running through every street in the city and suburbs pick their passengers at the doors of their homes and deposit them at their places of business. Steam roads cannot do this. The trolley companies can extend their lines almost anywhere they desire, and can obtain for nothing privileges for which the steam roads must pay thousands of dollars.

Trolley cars can carry passengers for a five-cent fare and make money, while the steam lines must charge ten cents to make the same profit for carrying their passengers the same distance. Their comparatively small capitalization and operating expenses enable street railways to do this. The trolley roads have no terminal expense to meet. They do not even have to erect awnings over the sidewalks where their passengers get on and off the cars.

The steam roads will, therefore, be forced to practically abandon suburban business. Steam roads will have to develop their long-distance service. They can improve their service within a zone of from six to twenty-five miles, and, as an additional inducement, may find it profitable to lower the longer distance rates. In this way, by their efforts, the suburbs can be extended. With this expansion, and attention to through passenger and freight business, the steam roads, Mr. Tuttle believes, will still have an ample and profitable field of operation.

The almost marvellous growth of trolley railroads in the United States is graphically presented in some current figures. For instance, Allegheny County in Pennsylvania has 314 miles of electric railways. Other communities may be as well or better supplied, but it is instructive to note that Allegheny's mileage is more than one-fifth of that of all the trolley roads on the continent of Europe. It is greater than that of all the electric lines of France, more than three times that of the lines in England, Scotland, and Wales, and nearly one-half that of Germany, which latter country has about one-half of the entire mileage of 1,432 miles of Europe. France follows Germany with 246 miles; then comes Great Britain with 97, followed by Switzerland, Italy and Austria-Hungary with 90, 82 and 66 miles respectively. The mileage of other countries is small, running as low as less than two miles in Holland and Portugal.

If Turkey doesn't leave Crete the chances are, "be the powers," that Crete will leave Turkey.

An esteemed contemporary has an article on How Anarchists are Made, but what the public wants is a receipt for destroying the pestiferous critters.

That dear old chestnut, "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," has appeared in 5,216 newspapers since the Empress of Austria was assassinated.

What is the sense of killing a king or queen anyhow? There are always princes and princesses ready to take the job. So far no throne is empty for want of somebody to fill it.

It is recorded that the recent election campaign in Maine was conducted without any speechmaking. And yet it is probable that there was some money that talked.

Civilization in Japan will move forward now in a street car. A St. Louis company has received an order from the Japanese Government for 250 cars, to be shipped within 90 days, and to cost $300,000. "A street scene in Tokio" will have a more familiar look in stereoscopic views hereafter.

The highest balloon ascension on record was made from the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, England, yesterday by Stanley Spencer and Dr. Berson. An altitude of 27,500 feet was attained, and a temperature of 61 degrees below freezing point. The occupants of the car were compelled to breathe compressed oxygen in tubes at 25,000 feet, the air had become so rarified. And 65 degrees below zero is nearer the North Pole than Professor Andrew succeeded in getting.

If the Conservatives have any such evidence as is alleged in the petition against Hon. Mr. Harty in Kingston, they need to bring it out. The evidence against Mr. Calder's election in South Ontario has shown that prominent Conservatives are pretty badly tarred, and if the party want to get fighting on an even footing again—not a creditable footing at best—they need to show that they are at least no worse than their opponents.

Piles? Piles? Itching Piles?
Symptoms—Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worms by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulcers, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. THE POULTRY YARD.

Some terse and timely remarks preparatory to wintering.

Before the large proportion of the fowls are sent to market it will be best to select out a sufficient number that is desired to keep over. These needed for breeding as well as those wanted for layers should be selected. Generally it will be best with chickens to select the best of the old hens and young pullets, and for young chickens a sufficient number of cocks for breeding. The introduction of new blood yearly, if not quite every year, is essential if the vigor and vitality of the flock is to be maintained. As the birds are kept fully as well without a cock as with one, only the numbers needed for breeding need be kept, all others are a waste of space, as they return no income. There is certainly no economy in keeping them for the table, as a good fat pullet or hen is superior to a rooster for eating. Early hatched, thirty pullets, and four young chickens, will make quite one half of the number a settler. If that number can be found, should be of these. The rest of the number should be a few other birds that are especially valuable as mothers.

In determining the number to be kept the size of the poultry house should be considered, as it is never good economy to attempt to winter more than can be sheltered comfortably. Where the chickens have a free range, as is the rule on most farms, no rooster is every day. Better keep a cock of 20 or 25 well selected hens and pullets and give them comfortable quarters and good treatment than double this number and neglect them.

It is certainly good economy to keep a sufficient number to supply the table, as any kind of fowl meat will make an agreeable change for the table. With turkeys, one tom will suffice for a dozen hens, but it is only in exceptional cases that any one will care to keep that many turkey hens. Generally from four to six will be as many as will be wanted to keep through winter for breeding. Part of these should be selected young hens, reasonably well-matured by the time the eggs are wanted for hatching. As turkey hens may be kept until they are four years old, the keeping of a tom for two years in succession is inadvisable, but when a change is best, get new blood.

About the same rules of management will be best for ducks as with turkeys. In some cases ducks are kept for the eggs and feathers as well as for breeding. When this is the case, one drake for every eight or ten hens will answer. In some cases ducks are kept for the eggs and feathers as well as for breeding. When this is the case, one drake for every eight or ten hens will answer.

Generally, with poultry as with other stock, there is no advantage in keeping and feeding the fowls after they are fully matured, excepting, of course, those that are wanted for breeding. Fowls get then into good, marketable condition, and then sell. All feed after this is an addition to the cost without any return.

BY-LAW NO.

A By-law to Aid the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company Limited

Passed the... day of... 1898.

WHEREAS The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, purpose and intend to enlarge their manufacturing establishment in the Town of Peterborough and for that purpose to erect a solid brick building as hereinafter mentioned in connection with their present manufacturing establishment and fit up and equip the same with fixed machinery at a total cost of not less than forty thousand dollars;

AND WHEREAS for the purpose of aiding the said company in the erection and equipment of such building and in the extension of their manufacturing establishment the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough have agreed, subject to this By-law receiving the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, to advance and loan to said company the sum of thirty thousand dollars, upon the terms and subject to the conditions hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS it will be necessary to borrow the said sum and for that purpose to issue debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars payable as hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS there will require to be raised annually by special rate for paying the said debt and interest the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred and Ten Dollars and Eighty-four cents;

AND WHEREAS the amount of the whole rateable property of the Municipality is assessed to the said Corporation for the sum of Two Hundred and Sixty Thousand One Hundred and Sixty-one Dollars and Ninety-six cents and there is no part of the principal or interest thereof in arrears.

By the Council thereof therefore enacts as follows—

THE CORPORATION OF THE TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

1. This By-law shall be imperative and of no effect unless and until the same shall have received the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.

2. Subject to the provisions of the foregoing section this By-law shall take effect on the Thirty-first day of December, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Ninety-eight.

3. It shall and may be lawful for the Mayor and Treasurer to borrow the sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and to issue debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum under the Corporate Seal and signed by the Mayor and Treasurer of the said Town and countersigned by the Secretary of the Corporation of the Peterborough Town Trust, such debentures to be payable in Twenty years from the date of the issue of such debentures and to bear interest at the rate of three and a half per centum per annum, payable in equal portions, half yearly on the Twentieth day of June and the Thirty-first day of December in each year and to have coupons annexed for the payment of such interest; such principal and interest to be payable at the Office of the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust in the Town of Peterborough.

4. The said debentures shall be issued within one year, from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature.

5. The said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, realized from the sale of such debentures shall be paid to the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited upon and only upon the conditions hereinafter contained.

6. The said Company shall, before becoming entitled to the said money for any part thereof, erect, furnish and equip with fixed machinery in connection with their present manufacturing establishment in the Town of Peterborough a solid brick building not less than one hundred feet by three hundred feet or a superficial area of not less than thirty thousand square feet, a cost not more than Forty Thousand Dollars and have the same in running order in connection with their present manufacturing establishment within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature, evidence of the facts as to the completion of the said Declaration, and shall make, execute and register in form approved by the Council a first mortgage to the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust upon the said building and land occupied by the same and fixed machinery therein for securing payment of the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and interest thereon at three and a half per centum per annum payable half yearly on the Twentieth day of June and the Thirty-first day of December in each year, the said principal to be payable as follows: In twenty equal annual instalments of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-four Cents each payable on the First day of April in each year, such annual sum being equivalent to the sinking fund of said debentures and being the sum at three and a half per cent, interest required to produce the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, the first of such instalments of principal to be payable on the First day of April, one thousand and nine hundred, the first payment of interest computed from the date on which such money shall be paid to the Company, to be payable on the First interest day following such payment. Such mortgage to contain the usual statutory covenants and conditions including a provision for insurance on said buildings and fixed machinery to the amount of not less than Thirty Thousand Dollars or such less sum as may from time to time be due for principal and interest on said mortgage payable in the event of loss to the said Commissioners to the extent of the balance unpaid on such mortgage. The amount of insurance money so paid to the Commissioners less the amount properly due on the mortgage to be repaid by the Commissioners to the said Company upon the said Company rebuilding and re-establishing their said manufacturing as hereinbefore provided and to remain upon the security of said mortgage as if such insurance money had not been paid to the Commissioners.

In case the said Company shall make default in payment of any instalment of principal or interest or shall cease to operate their manufacturing establishment for six months in any year (except in case of strikes or workmen or of fire or flood or other cause beyond their control), or in case any proceedings be taken to wind up the Company) then the whole of the remaining sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars over and above the instalments of principal already paid at three and a half per cent, interest at the date of the respective payments compounded half yearly shall at once become due and payable.

The Company also to give to the said Commissioners the Covenant or Bond of the Company for the payment of the said principal money and interest at the times and in manner aforesaid.

And providing that the Company their successors or assigns shall not remove the whole or the substantial part of from the building used for manufacturing the money payable by the Company shall have been fully paid and satisfied provided always that the Company may at any time remove or alter their machinery used for manufacturing or substitute other machinery for those in use so long as the machinery is substantially sufficient for the said manufacturing as contemplated.

The words "fixed machinery" herein and in the mortgage aforesaid shall be deemed to include a travelling crane and shafting, pulleys and belting but shall not be deemed to include machines used in manufacturing from time to time as the exigencies of the Company's business may require, as above provided.

7. There shall be raised annually for the payment of interest during the term of the said debentures the sum of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-four Cents and Sixty Cents and the sum of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-four Cents for paying the debt hereby created by special rate upon all the rateable property in the Town of Peterborough as assessed to the said Corporation for the sum of Two Hundred and Sixty Thousand One Hundred and Sixty-one Dollars and Ninety-six cents and there is no part of the principal or interest thereof in arrears.

8. The votes of the electors shall be taken on this By-law on the 18th. day of October,

one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, commencing at the hour of nine o'clock in the forenoon and closing at the hour of five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day at the following places in each ward and before the following returning officers—

At Number One at Thomas Hamilton's Shop, Bridge street, Joseph W. Ward Number Two at the Town Council Chamber, Charles Cameron as Deputy Returning Officer, Ward Number Three at shop of J. W. Methers, Ward Number Four at the shop of W. Smith, Ward Number Five at the shop of J. W. Methers, Ward Number Six at the shop of J. W. Methers, Ward Number Seven at the shop of J. W. Methers, Ward Number Eight at the shop of J. W. Methers, Ward Number Nine at the shop of J. W. Methers, Ward Number Ten at the shop of J. W. Methers.

9. The Nineteenth day of October at the hour of twelve o'clock noon and at the office of the Town Clerk are fixed as the time when and the place where the Clerk of the Town shall sum up the number of votes given for and against the By-law. And the Seventeenth day of October one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight at the office of the Town Clerk, noon and the office of the Town Clerk are hereby fixed as the time and place for the appointment of persons to attend at the various polling places and at the final summing up of the votes by the Clerk respectively on behalf of the persons present in and promoting or opposing the passing of the By-law respectively.

NOTICE.

The foregoing is a true copy of a proposed By-law which has been taken into consideration and which will be finally passed by the Council (in event of the assent of the Electors) on the first public meeting after one month from the date of the passing of the By-law. The time of such meeting is the twenty-first day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight and at the hour, day and places therein fixed for taking the vote.

S. R. ARMSTRONG, Clerk.

WILL THE CONFERENCE FAIL.

Montreal, Sept. 19.—The Star's New York correspondent sends the following interesting dispatch—

"In the Quebec Conference doomed to failure. Reports are circulated here that that way. It is said that the Hamilton Commissioners insist on a five months before agreeing to any other matter in controversy. This is an impossible demand for the reason that it would mean the destruction of the American deep sea fisheries industry, and of the school of the United States navy."

In the war with Spain more than 20,000 men were taken from New England coast cities to serve on the American men-of-war, and, especially the Pacific coast, the new England towns, are and always have been, the mainstay of the country, so far as ships are concerned. With the enormous increase in the navy now contemplated, the American Commissioners would not dream of making a concession calculated to injure the country so seriously. If it were the fishery industry, it alone that was to be affected, the concession might be possible, but never when it involved destruction of the navy of the bary. Agreement on some other points is doubtful, and altogether the outlook for the adoption of a general treaty would seem to be decidedly gloomy."

LARGE INCREASE IN CORN.

The corn that has been received in Montreal this season already amounts to 16,490,625 bushels against 9,329,226 bushels for the whole of last year, an increase of over 7,000,000 bushels, so that the increase of the whole year is likely to equal the entire trade of 1897.

There are also increases in oats, barley and rye, so that the trade of the port in cereals this year will be unprecedented.

TESTIMONIALS:

The following are a few from scores of testimonials the Sergt. Major has from people who have used this preparation:

My hair was falling out for six or eight months until the top of my head was quite bald, when a friend advised me to try Kenny's Hair Restorer. I did so, and am happy to say that after using two large bottles my hair is restored to its natural color and with a more healthy appearance. The falling out of the hair stopped and all dandruff removed. I was only using the Hair Restorer about two months, February and March until the new growth was fully developed. I can therefore, from my own experience recommend Kenny's Hair Restorer as a most reliable hair remedy and I believe it has no equal for the prevention of baldness.

AN INDIAN CRADLE SONG.

Bring thee low in thy cradle nest,
Sleep in the dainty nest—
Bring thee low and swing aloft—
Sleep as a poppy should.
For safe in your little cradle nest
Quiet will come and peace and rest,
If the little poppy be good.

The coyote howls on the prairie cold,
And the owlet hoots in the tree,
And the big moon shines on the little child
As it slumbers peacefully.
So swing thee high in thy little nest
And swing thee low and take the rest
That the night wind brings to thee!

Father lies on the fragrant ground,
Drooping of lust and light,
And the pine leaves rustle with moaning sound.
All through the solemn night;
But the little poppy in his cradle nest
Is waiting low to take his rest,
Till the sun brings the morning light.
—Southern Workman.

THE DERELICT.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS.

I was second mate of the American brig Ruby, bound from Java to New York, and all had gone well with us for a fortnight, when accident brought about a curious adventure. Just as night was closing down, with the breeze steady, I swung myself upon the rail to get a look at what seemed to be a raft floating past me. I may have been overcautious or a rope may have given way, but of a sudden I found myself in the water. The man at the wheel witnessed my mishap and gave the alarm and threw me the life preserver always ready for such an emergency, and I had no doubt of being picked up within ten minutes. I had seized the float, when down thundered a black squall from out of the west, and next moment it was as dark as midnight and the sea all in a chop. I felt that it was all over with me then. The men would be lucky to bring the brig through the storm squall without thinking of me. Indeed, if she had 100 men on board instead of 12, they would not have dared to lower a boat. I got just one glimpse of the craft as she shot away into the darkness and then began to work to get the life preserver under my arms. I was buffeted and knocked about in the most confusing manner, and had the squall lasted five minutes longer I should have been drowned on the surface. It passed away as suddenly as it came, and ten minutes later the sea had calmed down, and I was floating with my head well out of the water.

I had gone overboard at about 7 o'clock in the evening. For the first three hours my hopes and fears made me alert, but by and by I felt a dull languor and was only half conscious of what was going on. An hour after midnight I was suddenly aroused from what seemed to be a troubled dream. I was bumping against something hard, and my first idea was that I had been cast ashore. It took me several minutes to shake myself together and make out that I was alongside the hull of a vessel. It was hard to credit the fact, but fact it was, and when I realized it I had scarcely more to do than lift up my hands and seize the low rail and draw myself aboard. I had found a derelict brig. Both masts were gone close to the deck, much of her bulwarks swept away, and I knew by the feel of her that she was waterlogged. I took one glance over her and no more, but dumped myself down on the deck and was asleep in five seconds. When I opened my eyes, the sun was an hour high, and a big albatross was poised directly above me and not 50 feet high. It did not take me long to master the details of the wreck. In the first place, she was loaded with Australian redwood and could not sink beyond a certain point; next, she had been floating about for months and months. There was some wreckage on her decks, but masts and yards and boats and booms had gone clear off her as they fell. She had settled down until her scupper holes were only a few inches above water, but owing to the buoyant cargo she could not sink deeper.

As a sailor I made her out to be a French craft, and later on I discovered that she was the Marie of Brest. She was a small craft, carrying a crew of eight or nine men, and was a fore-and-aft ship instead of having a deckhouse for the men. The cabin or cook's galley had gone overboard with the rest, but the doors of the cabin and the scuttle to the fore-cabin were tightly closed. The brig had been wrecked aloft in squall or gale and had at the same time sprung a leak. Whether her crew had been washed overboard or taken to the boats there was no means of telling until I had made an investigation below.

The first thing was to get something to eat and drink. After a few minutes' work I broke open the cabin doors and got into the pantry. There was wine in plenty, as might have been expected, and I soon came across some meat and biscuits in tins. I wanted water, but there was none to be had, and so, taking what I could lay hands on, I went on deck and made a fair meal. When this had been concluded, I returned to the cabin for an overhaul. All the charts and nautical instruments were there, nor had any of the spare clothing of captain or mates been taken away. I found the logbook, and though I could not read French I made out the latitude and longitude last recorded. As near as I could figure it out the brig was then midway between Australia and the Cape, and the date was nearly seven months old. She had drifted to every point of the compass, but must have drifted nearly 3,000 miles to the north to reach the spot where I found her. It was soon before I began an examination of the lazarette to see how I should fare for provisions. I found four, wines, table water, preserves, boxes of biscuits, choice bacon, codfish and other articles in liberal quantity—enough to last one man for months. Forward of the cabin I found a storeroom, in which were several barrels of beef and pork, with four barrels of coarse flour, dried fish, beans, coffee, tea and other articles of food for the men. Forward of this were the water casks, a dozen or more, and all full. When I came to examine the fore-cabin, I found boots, clothing, sou'westers and other belongings of the crew, to prove that they had not gone away in the boats. Indeed I was sure before I had half concluded my investigation that every man had perished when the brig was wrecked. It was night before I had finished, and I tumbled into the captain's berth and never slept more soundly. You may think it queer that during the day I had scarcely glanced around the horizon and given no thought to rescue, and that I went to bed with a contented mind, but sailors are prone to take luck as it comes, good or bad. I had made a miraculous escape and was fairly safe on the wreck, and there was nothing to worry over if not taken off for weeks. Interested as I was in overhauling the stranger, I would not have tossed a penny to be taken off by a passing vessel.

When morning came again I made a more thorough investigation of the cabin. In rear of the captain's stateroom I chanced upon a closet which had escaped me the day before, and here I made a great find. There was about $1,000 in French gold and notes, $1,100 in English goldpieces and exactly $7,000 in goldpieces just struck off at the Australian mints. The money was in two tin boxes, but whether it belonged to the ship, her captain or to other people I could not determine. It was a big fortune to a poor sailor, and I remember that I acted very foolishly over the find. I counted it over and over again, and when I at last realized that I was rich I rushed on deck, with a wild hope of seeing a mail close at hand. But for the money I believe that the long days and nights which followed would have been rather contentful for me, isolated as the situation was. I had plenty to eat and drink, there was nothing to break my sleep, the wreck might drive where she would, but there was no danger of her going down. The discovery of the money was followed by a hope of rescue, and this again by worry and anxiety. I wanted to go ashore to enjoy my wealth. I feared that when rescue did come I should be robbed. I conjured up a thousand senseless fears, and the upshot was anything but beneficial. I have spoken of the general situation in a careless way. As a matter of fact, being a navigator, I took observations regularly when the weather permitted and picked off the drift of the wreck on the chart. On the average the weather was fine, but there were days and nights when gale and sea tumbled the waterlogged craft about until only a sail or could have lived through it. Instead of lifting her the waves ran over her, and at such times the decks were two feet under water and the cabin was flooded. The cargo was adrift with the water in the hold, and as the wreck rolled and pitched the timbers rubbed together and produced noises which would have frightened landmen into fits.

I kept an accurate reckoning, and I had been on the wreck just 49 days when I caught sight of my first mail. No doubt ships had passed and repassed me by day and night, but I could see no signal by day and from the first I slept all through the night. This mail was discovered early one morning, coming up from the south, and her course was such that she must see me. I had put the money into bags and the bags into bundles of clothing in view of a rescue, and therefore had nothing to do but wait. The stranger, which proved to be an English merchantman bound for India, but considerably off her course, was within four miles of me and had sent a signal to gladden my heart when a big whale suddenly broke water close to the wreck. He was followed half a minute later by a second, which attacked him with great fury. The monsters put up a terrific battle, leaping and biting each other and licking up a sea like a gale of wind. They at first drew away from me, but after a few minutes made a circle which brought them back. What I had feared from the first came to pass after a quarter of an hour. Half blinded by pain and fury, or feeling itself overmatched and desirous of getting away, one of the whales suddenly whirled about and came for the wreck head on. He was fully 80 feet long, and he came like a moving mountain. I made sure of my hold as I saw him coming, but he struck the wreck on her port side with such force that I was thrown across the deck and into the sea beyond. I heard the crash of planks and timbers, was tossed about by the waves, rubbed against the surface to find the wreck hull no longer. It was simply a heap of floating debris. The strange ship drew near, lowered a boat, and I was picked up as I clung to a plank. The money was gone, all else but the timber which composed the cargo had disappeared, and my adventure, surprising as it had begun, had ended in a manner strange enough to satisfy even the most imaginative novelist. I was carried to India by the rescuing ship, and I know that the French consul at Calcutta set inquiries on foot regarding the fate of the crew of the Marie. What they amounted to I never learned, but have always felt satisfied that all perished when their craft was dismasted. But for the fight between the whales I believe the brig could have been pumped out and sailed into port, but fortune is a jade who robs Jack Tar far oftener than she smiles upon him.

A Friendly Painter.
Jinks—What! You don't mean to say you are engaged to the beautiful Miss de Pink?
Blinks—Yes, I do. Got engaged to her last night. This afternoon I am to bring her into town. She wants to go to an optician's, I believe. New pair of glasses or something. She is near-sighted, you know.
Jinks—I say, old fellow, just slip round to that optician's and bribe him not to give her any better glasses than she has.—London Tit-Bits.

HISTORICAL HASTINGS

HASTINGS CHEESE FACTORY

and is now in his second year with every prospect of the fullest success. This factory was in operation for 11 years previously having a first class record, and Mr. Villan has well sustained its previous good standing. He is about to introduce a butter plant of the largest capacity, and has promises of increased business for 1899. He already produces 2750 pounds of cheese per day, amounting in the week 25,000 pounds of milk. The product has headed the Peterboro list all season. Four people are constantly employed and the factory will compare favorably with any in the country.

THE CLARENCE

B. Spellman, proprietor. This house which is a handsome three-story brick structure, Parisian Renaissance style was erected by the Foulds Bros. fifteen years ago. It is 100x50 and is finely laid out and can accommodate seventy guests, but one hundred have often found shelter under its hospitable roof. One time, and then you should see a smile of mine best Spellman. Art as the boys call him by the way, is naturally a hotel man and it is a pity he has not sought larger fields. The business which this house does with commercial men and tourists is the highest eulogy which can be passed upon its table and bar.

THE COUGHLIN HOUSE,

P. Elmhirst, proprietor, is somewhat larger than the Clarendon, being 100 x80 and like it a three-story brick. It accommodates 100 persons and its trade with the surrounding country is very large. Its dining room can seat 60 guests at once and is well set and airy. Mr. Elmhirst, who by the way is the first child born in Percy, took charge three years ago, and everybody says he is making loads of money. This is a self-made man and justly prides himself on the fact. The house had been in four hands before he took hold, but one thing is sure he is making it pay.

THE ROYAL HOTEL.

P. Smith, proprietor, is located on the south side of the railroad, and is very favorably situated for fishing parties, to whom special terms are given. The building is a three-story brick, and can accommodate 40 guests, and has stabling for ten teams. A specialty is made of the Grand Manx, which is of the best and the table is all that could be desired. "Paddy" Smith was a bartender for 20 years before starting for himself, and is large hearted popular man. He has been a member of the Separate School Board for the last eight years.

THE MANUFACTURERS LIFE INSURANCE CO.

With a capital of $2,000,000 was organized in 1888, with headquarters at Toronto, and with George Gooderham, Pres., Mr. J. F. Janlin, the Gen. Mgr., gave Mr. W. S. Anderson charge of the three counties, Durham, Northumberland and Peterboro. Since assuming charge two years ago Mr. Anderson has added $15,000 worth of policies. He has fine offices over the Bank of Commerce, Peterboro, where his sub-agents report monthly. Mr. Anderson endorses to spend two days a week at Hastings, his native burg. He has had ten years experience in insurance, and is a winner. "Billie," as the boys call him, is a son of the late David Anderson, who conducted a private banking and brokerage business in Hastings for 30 years. During the last ten years it was entirely in charge of W. S. Anderson was counselman for three years.

H. M. FOULDS & SON.

As mentioned previously Mr. H. M. Foulds is the only living son of the original proprietor of the Hastings property. He is at present conducting one of the largest grain buying businesses in the Midland district, operating extensively in Hastings, Campbellford, Stirling and Brant Falls as well as live other smaller points. They handle coal, salt and produce as well. Mr. Foulds had previously been in the lumber business for twenty years. Their Hastings elevator has a capacity of 60,000 bushels and is operated by water, and they are prepared to handle 600,000 bushels of grain this year. Mr. J. C. Foulds, the son in partnership manages the large Campbellford business. Mr. Foulds is a hale, hearty, active old man and carries his years remarkably well, being able personally to look after his Hastings business.

J. J. ENGLISH.

In 1887 Mr. English started in business in the Howard block. Three years after he bought the stock and good will of the late John Peters, and continued operating the two stores in the Peters block for six years. In 1895 his great success enabled him to erect the handsome and spacious block of which he now occupies half. It cost $25,000, is three stories high and cost $5,000. It is the only store in the village heated by steam, and Mr. English is at present putting in a cash railway, another unique feature for a Hastings store. The stock, unquestionably the largest in the village, consists of staple and fancy dry goods, boots and shoes, hats and caps, ready made clothing, groceries, crockery and glassware, and the business done in a year amounts to $40,000. Mr. English has been treasurer of the village for years, as also for the Ormond cheese factory. Personally he is a genial gentleman, and a favorite with the ladies which no doubt accounts for his remarkable success.

MCKENNA & BRADY.

These gentlemen started business here in 1893. They are the Campbellford firm, which bought the large (A. A.) stock for $100,000 on the 8th. Their very flattering success in disposing of this stock led them to locate here permanently, and they immediately filled up their commodious store in the Coughlin block, with a large and varied assortment of staple and fancy dry goods, boots and shoes, hats and caps, ready made clothing and gent's furnishings, in addition to a very complete assortment of staple groceries. They have already received their full stock, which has been purchased so happily that they can offer special inducements to purchasers. For this is their rule in business, and through it they have been instrumental in bringing to Hastings much trade which had previously gone elsewhere. Mr. McKenna, who has charge of the Hastings business is too well known and highly respected to need any eulogy from the Times.

The early history of Hastings necessarily mentions the name of Timothy Coughlin many times. He was active, fertile in resources, and followed various occupations, in every instance coming out winner. Attention has been called to his being the first lock tender on the Trent Valley Canal system, to his operating the first saw mill at Crook's Rapids, to his starting the first hotel there, as well as to his being the pioneer private store keeper of the town of Hastings. He, like Mr. Foulds, left three sons, each of whom succeeded to a share of the large patrimony left by their father. The eldest was the first boy born in Hastings, and at the age of seventeen took charge of his father's farm of 200 acres on the northern outskirts of the village. Twenty years ago he became proprietor of the Hastings hotel, which he remained for twelve years. Two years ago he was elected to the reeve's chair, and succeeded himself again by acclamation. For twenty years he has been a member of the Separate School Board and its secretary and treasurer. Mr. Coughlin is also a member of the Exhibition Association as well as president and salesman for the Ormond Cheese Factory. Honors flow thick on such men, but any person who has met John Coughlin can readily understand why they come to him unsolicited.

TIM COUGHLIN, JR.

The second son, went into the hotel business in 70 and in 84 erected a two-story brick hotel where the present Coughlin House stands. This was destroyed by fire in '84 and he immediately re-erected the present large Coughlin House. He operated this himself for nine years. In 90 he built the large Montreal House block, opening in business in its corner store in '97. Two years ago he built the store occupied by the Union block. He is a member of the Separate School Board, his second daughter, Miss Grace, being one of its efficient teachers. On the superannuation of his father in '94 Mr. Coughlin became lock tender, which position he still holds.

RICHARD COUGHLIN, M. D.

The youngest son, he came a professional man and graduated as a doctor of medicine from Queen's College, Kingston, in 1881. He immediately started practice in his native village. He is an unassuming, offhand man, has a large and remunerative practice and has acquired considerable property.

L. FRED CLARRY

is a native of Millbrook, and was a student with Mr. Ruddy, of that village. Being admitted to practice at Osgoode Hall, in 1897, he was immediately taken into partnership by his principal, which is a high encomium on his ability. They immediately opened an office in the English block here. Mr. Clarry taking charge. They have also a branch office at Warkworth, where he attends every Tuesday. The Hastings business is growing satisfactorily and several solicitations are promised. Mr. Ruddy, the senior member, is well known to the bench and bar of the counties of Durham, Northumberland and Peterborough, and gives the benefit of his attendance and large experience to the branch offices wherever required. Mr. Clarry is a popular young man and is well known to the athletic circles of Peterborough.

GEORGE J. SHERRY

His main office is at Norwood, has a large and lucrative practice in Hastings. Admitted in 1882 and starting in Belleville, his native town, he soon moved to the front. Afflicted by the western boom he sold out to his junior partner and went into real estate. Family matters compelled his return.

He chose Norwood as the scene of his future operations and his success has been phenomenal, not only there but in Hastings, where he has a branch office. He is solicitor for the village of Hastings as also for the Union Bank here.

J. H. MCLELLAND,

the jeweller, learned his business in Toronto, obtaining there both a retail and wholesale experience, which later came to Hastings, in '95, he has been able to turn to the advantage of his many patrons. He can give and he has none. In his large store in the Clarendon block he carries a full line of watches, clocks, jewellery and silverware, as well as spectacles and musical instruments, and he makes a specialty of wedding gifts. He has a large trade in watch and clock repairing. Mr. McClelland has added a stationary department to his stock and carries a great variety of school books and supplies, bibles, prayer books, sheet music, etc. He is librarian for the Mechanics Institute. His stock of Christmas goods when the season opens has given him the name of the "Santa Claus of Hastings." Just now he is offering special bargains in watches having lately bought a large stock at great reductions.

A. CHAPMAN

who had his first experience in the whole sale house of Small, Benjamin & Co., of Toronto, spent five years in the retail trade at Colborne and came fourteen years ago to take charge of the hardware department of the late John Peters. In 1888 he started in business for himself, moving to his present quarters six years ago. He carries a full line of self and hardware, including oil, paint and glass, lamps and lamp goods and silverware. His stock of stoves and ranges is especially large and he has put up a great number of furnaces in the community to the satisfaction of all purchasers. He keeps an expert fitter at work continuously and calls for the service of an assistant. Mr. Mallory, since starting practice, has at different times taken courses in foreign colleges, among which may be mentioned—Kansas City College, Northwestern University, Dental College, and Chicago School of Anatomy and Physiology.

M. B. MALLORY, D.D.S., D.D.S.

In 1883 Dr. Mallory graduated from the Royal College of Dental Surgeons, Toronto. After practicing for four years in Wingham, he purchased the Campbellford business, part of which was a branch office in Hastings. He visits Hastings every Thursday, and will, of course, attend to specially urgent calls between times. His Hastings business has been on the increase continuously and calls for the service of an assistant. Dr. Mallory, since starting practice, has at different times taken courses in foreign colleges, among which may be mentioned—Kansas City College, Northwestern University, Dental College, and Chicago School of Anatomy and Physiology.

W. S. HALL, D.D.S., D.D.S.

Hastings has another visiting dentist, and one of the most skillful in the province. The doctor besides being a graduate of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons is an honor graduate of Toronto University. Immediately upon graduating, in 1895, he commenced practicing in Norwood and with remarkable success. He keeps abreast of all the latest and uses all the improvements adopted by his profession. The doctor visits Hastings every Tuesday, his office being in one of the parlors of the Clarendon Hotel.

Hastings seems to run to families, the Foulds, the Coughlins, and the Howards—are examples. The latter, J. A. Howard, who ran the "Star" for years, as well as a general store and an undertaking establishment, has two sons in business, the eldest of whom succeeded to the store and undertaking business. He sold the store in 1893 and went into the live business, still conducting the undertaking. He sold out the live business in 1897, having previously bought the general store of his father-in-law. He carries a full stock of dry goods, boots and shoes, hats and caps and ready made clothing, in connection with a special line of groceries, provisions, flour and feed, crockery and glassware. He handles the best and the finest of liquors and cigars. He has greatly reduced prices since starting. The second son is started in harness and saddlery business twenty-one years ago. He employs three people in this department, and has sold 50 sets of harness this year, all of home manufacture. He also handles weapons, carriages, luggage, sleighs and cutters—all of the best makes. He sold 20 wagons and 25 buggies this season. He also has added a bicycle department to his already varied business and represents such well-known makes as Stearns, Gendron, E. & D., Weland, Yale, and Masser Harris—and has disposed of altogether this season 24 wheels. Mr. Howard has been a member of the council for the past four years; member of the Separate school board for five years and is secretary and treasurer of the Exhibition Association.

THOMAS HOWARD

THOMAS O'RIELLY.

who is a son of Chas. O'Reilly, of Norwood, and a graduate of the Norwood high school, after having spent some time with Dr. Coughlin, in his drug store, took a regular course and graduated, about three years ago, from the Ontario College of Pharmacy, Toronto. He immediately went to business for himself, buying out Dr. Coughlin. He keeps a large stock of pure drugs, patent medicines, toilet articles, musical instruments, spectacles, and smokers' supplies. He has added a full line of school books and stationery, including bibles, prayer books, etc. Mr. O'Reilly is agent for the G.N.W. Telegraph Co.

JOSEPH DILWORTH

started in business thirty-five years ago in Toronto, and only came to Hastings last spring. Since coming here his business has been very satisfactory and continuously on the increase. Mr. Dilworth, besides being a pharmacist, chemist, is also a veterinary druggist. He carries a full line of prescriptions, patent medicines and toilet articles, to which he has added a large line of stationery, school books, etc. He also runs the telephone station, with fifteen subscribers, besides being operating agent for the Dominion Express Co. and the C.P.R. Telegraph Co. Mr. Dilworth has been connected for seventeen years with the Industrial Exposition of Toronto, being a director for the past twelve years.

CITY CLOTHING HOUSE.

was established by A. Wilson in '32. William, a son, was later taken in and the firm known as A. Wilson & Son. The father dropped out and H. A. came in, and the firm known as Wilson Bros. On the death of William, H. A. assumed full charge, and has managed it ever since. The business has increased ever since its start and to-day eight people are employed, three of whom are cost makers. The stock, which is a large and well chosen one, consists of gent's furnishings, ready-made clothing, hats and caps, tweeds, worsteds, paintings and overcoatings—the choice in all four latter being very extensive and the stock the largest in the village. Fit and workmanship are at all times guaranteed. Mr. Wilson has been a member of the council for several years, and is a popular citizen.

Another of the pioneer citizens who has sons in business is Mr. A. C. Haynes, who came to Hastings in 1845, and raised a family of five boys, two of whom are in business here at present, the youngest son, learned his business in Hastings, and started in for himself in 1894, as a merchant tailor, and has conducted a most satisfactory and ever-increasing business. He carries a full line of gent's furnishings, tweeds, worsteds, paintings and overcoatings, all in the latest and noblest styles. He employs four hands and guarantees fit and workmanship. Cleaning and repairing are attended to expeditiously and at reasonable rates.

J. P. COVERLEY.

came here nine years ago to take charge of Mr. English's dry goods department. Four years ago he started in business for himself and was unfortunately burnt out a week after starting. He opened up at once again in the stand now occupied by Mr. McClelland, but finding that too small, he purchased the present store, where he has been for the past four years. He carries a large and assorted stock of groceries, flour and feed and provisions, confectionery and smokers' articles. He also handles the extra parts for the Massey-Harris machinery. He also does a large business in blinds, frames and has placed a large lot this year, having wisely bought early. Not everyone would have given the customers the benefit of the low price as he did. Mr. Coverley is the owner of "Hastings" the champion St. Bernard, of Canada.

J. K. WILSON

who is a shoemaker followed his trade for twelve years but on account of ill health gave it up. He started in the grocery business three years ago and has built up a large and thriving trade. His stock consists of a large and choice stock of staple groceries, canned goods and feed provisions, smokers' articles, baked beans, and bacon, choice cuts—especially kumma, of which he is sole agent. He keeps oysters in season and runs an oyster parlor. In summer he runs an ice cream parlor. He intends to add a crockery and glass ware department.

JOHN TRACY

has lived in Northumberland since he was a boy, and has spent the exception of two years spent in New York City. He ran a cooper shop for a number of years going from that into general merchandising. He returned from that last fall and opened up a large steam bakery. His oven, built by himself at Toronto is one of the finest in the province and will repay the investment in its inspection. It has a capacity of 150 loaves. Bread made in this oven keeps fresh for a great length of time. Mr. Tracy keeps a large and tempting line of confectionery and pastries. He owns a fine lot of stock on the S. W. Corner of Front & Bridge streets as well as the one he now occupies.

JOHN WATSON

started in business as a butcher ten years ago. Today he handles four hundred pounds of meat per day, and employs three assistants. He is expert in killing, dressing and cutting meat and can guarantee satisfaction in all seasons. He handles all kinds of fresh and salt meats and sausage and delivers to all parts of the village.

FRANCIS SCOTT

started in business in Young's Point in 1885. Later he was connected with the Plante Laundry for sometime, and resided a blacksmith shop for himself last summer. He is a painstaking workman and points to his past work as the best guarantee of the future. He makes a specialty of handling cast steel and tempering of tools and instruments. The shop is on Bridge street just a block from the Clarendon Hotel, the neatest and tidest shop in the district.

W. W. HUYCKE

the fourth son of A. C. Huycke learned the blacksmithing trade in Toronto and started in business for himself in 1882 in Hastings. He has built up a very extensive business especially in horse shoeing and employs three hands. His trade comes both from village and country. He was a member of the council for some time.

SAMUEL PARKS

who learned his business in Brighton started for himself in Hastings in 1893, in the stand he still occupies, after travelling for a time and gaining a Toronto and Rochester experience. Mr. Parks has two chairs and the best equipment possible in every way, he being an expert hair cutter and easily assisted by Ed. Barrigan. Both are very popular.

NORWOOD STEAM LAUNDRY

owned by Messrs. Lang & Heavin, opened up in 1897. They have a full modern equipment and turn out first class work. Their method is not injurious to material as most modern ones as is proved by the continuous increase of their business throughout the village of Norwood, Havelock and Hastings. Their wagon comes to Hastings every Monday morning, for work and returns home every Friday. Parties can be accommodated throughout the route by sending over on the stage either with or for work.

Any account of the business interests of Hastings which neglected to include

THE MISSES CAHILLS

would be essentially incomplete. These young ladies who are milliners and mantle makers started in business in Peterboro some years ago, and pre-to-day conducting the largest millinery establishment in that town. Learning from various sources of the splendid opening for their business in Hastings, and securing the premises lately occupied by Mrs. Porter they at once set about preparing for the grandest millinery display Hastings has ever viewed. Their buyers spent several weeks in the wholesale markets looking up the styles and securing the latest novelties in millinery and mantles. Their trimmings worked with all of the leading wholesalers of Toronto and Montreal, and the ladies of Hastings can feel assured they will see the latest styles in millinery, mantles and novelties. Their purchases having been made early in the season they are enabled to offer special prices. Miss Cahill who is in charge is both expert and obliging. The ladies of Hastings can be congratulated on having placed at their disposal the experience and talent of these ladies.

The GRAPHOPHONE

Most fascinating invention of the age. Always ready to entertain. It requires no skill to operate it and reproduces the music of bands, orchestras, vocalists or instrumentalists. There is nothing like it for an evening's entertainment. Other so-called talking machines produce only records of cut-and-dried subjects, specially prepared in a laboratory, but the Graphophone is not limited to such performances. On the Graphophone you can easily make and instantly reproduce records of the voice, or any sound. This is constantly a new and new interest and its charm is ever fresh. The reproductions are clear and brilliant.

Graphophones are sold for $10 and

better known as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, has made a record for its remarkable cures of asthma. Cases that have been considered beyond hope or help have been cured by this remedy. We give two examples of such cures out of the many on record:

"My mother has been a great sufferer from asthma for the past ten years, and her recovery is almost without a parallel. On account of her advanced age—over seventy—we had but little hope of ever seeing her well again; but we are now happily cured by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The first bottle afforded me so much benefit that I continued the use of the remedy until entirely cured."

JOSEPH KLOKE, Charlotte, N.C.

"I was a sufferer for a long time from asthma, vainly endeavoring to procure relief in the use of ordinary remedies. At length I was induced to try a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The first bottle afforded me so much benefit that I continued the use of the remedy until entirely cured."

Wrecked Horse Section.
Last night when the horse cart was going down George street on its way to the fire at 63 Alymer street, the horses dashed into a large box of sand and a quantity of other material, which is being used in connection with the street pavement. The vehicle passed entirely over the obstruction and it is a great wonder that it did not result more seriously. As it was the received a severe shaking up.

Last Night's Blast.
The brigade was called out at half past eight o'clock last night to extinguish a fire at 63 Alymer street. The fire started in one of the bedrooms, when the occupants of the house were away, but owing to the prompt work of the brigade very little damage was done.

The house was owned by Mrs. Bailey and was occupied by an employee of McDonald's mill, named Courier. The cause of the fire is unknown. (Later)—An alarm was again sent in at half past eleven, the fire having broken out in another room of the same house. It was put out with very little trouble.

Gentlemen's Gaiters.
The number of bald heads is surprising. Over 50,000 men wear Prof. Dorewood's Art Hair Coverings, however there are many yet who should use them, both for the sake of health and appearance. Prominent men all over the continent wear them, and it is only necessary to try one to be convinced of their ability of possessing one. It prevents the dangers incidental to cold, catarrh, neuralgia, other troubles. The Prof. is to be at the Oriental Hotel on Tuesday, Oct. 4, where he will be pleased to show all the value of his productions.

BARS MUST BE CLOSED

And the License Holders will not Dispute the Point.

A meeting of the License Holders' Protective Association was held at Toronto Monday, there being a large attendance and a protracted discussion on the coming plebiscite vote, and the question as to keeping the barrooms open on that day.

Mr. James Haveron, solicitor for the Association, was of opinion that there was no law to compel the closing of barrooms on the day in question, and some of the members were anxious to make a test of it, but as other eminent authorities had given the opinion that it was against the law to open the barrooms the Association decided to allow each hotel man to use his own discretion, with the understanding that in case of prosecution he would be individually responsible. It is understood that the Association has been notified from hotel men in country districts that they purpose keeping open on plebiscite day and should charges for the breach of the law follow, Solicitor Haveron will fight the matter out in the courts.

"It would be a mistake to keep the barrooms open in the cities on the day of the plebiscite vote," remarked a hotel man, "and would cost the hotel men more than they could take up. We would simply have to keep open house and give away the liquor to a great many of our customers in order to coax them to the polls. I don't see any money in that, and my bar doors will be hermetically closed on 'plebiscite day.'"

PETERBOROUGH PRESBYTERY

Met in the Mill Street Church, Port Hope, Yesterday.

The Peterboro Presbytery convened yesterday in the Mill street church, Port Hope. Rev. John Hay, of Cobourg, was chosen Moderator for the next six months.

There were present:
Rev. Hay, Moderator.
Rev. Wm. Bennett, clerk.
Rev. Dr. Torrence, Peterboro.
Rev. J. K. Smith, Port Hope.
Rev. A. K. McLeod, Brighton.
Rev. S. O. Lord, Grafton.
Rev. A. Laird, Port Hope.
Rev. R. Laird, Campbellford.
Rev. J. V. Tanner, Oshawa.
Rev. J. G. Potter, Peterboro.
Rev. D. A. Hamilton, Havelock.
Rev. E. F. Hunter, Baltimore.
Rev. J. W. McIntosh, Centerville.
Elders: Thomas Spence, Cobourg; Robert Robertson, Cold Springs; John Stewart, Centerville; Alex. Pringle, Port Hope.
Rev. Alex. Laird was chosen treasurer of the Presbytery Fund in room of the late Rev. Jas. Clelland.

Very interesting reports were received from the delegates who had visited the several mission fields and augmented congregations and suitable action taken upon them.
The clerk was instructed to give a letter of transfer to Rev. Dr. Smith, who is about to remove to the bounds of the Presbytery of Toronto. The following resolution was adopted in connection with the death of the late Rev. Jas. Clelland: "The Presbytery of Peterboro desire to express their sense of the deep loss which they have sustained in the death of their venerable father, the Rev. J. C. Clelland, who came within the bounds of the Presbytery in 1875, until his death, on July 4th, 1898, he had been a prominent member of the Court and had endeared himself to prelate its well being. He was modest and unassuming, a man of wide reading and scholarship, of judgment, wise in counsel, and unwavering in his allegiance to the Word of God."

A committee consisting of Rev. J. G. Potter and the clerk were appointed to draw a minute expressive of the feelings of the Presbytery towards the late Robert Tully.

The following committees were appointed:
Home Missions—Rev. E. F. Torrence, Rev. J. G. Potter, Rev. Wm. Bennett, Peterboro; Rev. Mr. McMullen, of Springfield, and Messrs. Graham, Lakefield, and the St. Andrew's elder.
Augmentation—Rev. J. Hay, Co. Andrews, Keene; McLeod, Brighton; Hunter, Baltimore; and Messrs. Spear, Cobourg, and Robertson, of Baltimore.
Church Life and Work—Rev. J. G. Potter, Peterboro; P. Duncan, Oshawa; W. Johnston, Millbrook; J. W. McIntosh, Centerville; Messrs. McNelly, Port Hope, and Mr. Collins, of Peterboro.

Sabbath Schools—Rev. D. A. Thompson, Hastings; Richard Hyde, Warsaw; R. Laird, Campbellford; O. C. Reeves, Lakefield; and Messrs. Bonbrugh, Grafton, and Butters, Hastings.

Young People's Society—Rev. A. O. Reeves, Lakefield; J. V. Tanner, Oshawa; J. Ross, Roseneath; D. A. Hamilton, Havelock; and the representative elders of Frafton and Cobourg.
Superintendence of Students—Rev. C. S. Lord, Grafton; J. F. Somerville, Norwood; R. Laird, Campbellford; and Messrs. John Clark, Campbellford; and R. Stewart, Centerville.
Statistics—Rev. A. Laird, Port Hope; Wm. Bennett, Peterboro; R. Robertson, D. P. Oswald, Janerville; A. Cameron, Port Hope, and the Millbrook elder.

Steps were taken to effect a union between the two congregations in Port Hope, recommending a conference to be presided over by the Moderator of the Presbytery.
The next meeting of the Presbytery will be in St. Paul's church, Peterboro, on the second Tuesday in December at 9 o'clock.

Mr. E. J. Wolstenholme's Livery Barn a Total Wreck—No Insurance.

Fire broke out in the livery barn of Mr. Wolstenholme, on Charlotte street, at about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The brigade was promptly on hand, but owing to the advanced state of the fire before notice and the inflammable nature of the structure, all attempts to save the building were fruitless.

A rather stiff breeze from the south blew the burning embers to the tops of the houses close by, and it looked for a time as if a more serious conflagration was imminent.

Fortunately there happened to be only one horse in the stable at the time, and this was rescued with considerable difficulty.

All of Mr. Wolstenholme's cutters, a good hack, three single sets of harness, and all the winter's stock of hay, together with a quantity of oats, were consumed.

An effective work of the brigade kept the fire from spreading, although a number of buildings received a very close call.

Much sympathy is felt for Mr. Wolstenholme, as he carried no insurance, and it is only a short time since he was burned out before.

The property is owned by Mr. Wm. Snowden, who had $400 insurance on house and barn.

The cause of the fire is rumored to be the result of some small boys who were smoking at the rear of the stable.

Be wise and buy your peaches to-day cheap at the "Spot Cash."

THE CHEESE BOARD

The Regular Meeting was Held Yesterday Morning.

The regular meeting of the Peterboro Cheese Board was held yesterday morning in the council chamber, President Drummond in the chair. There was a good attendance of salesmen and others.

The buyers present were Messrs. Wrighton, Rollins, Whitton, Sanderson, Bailey, Fitzgerald, Hodgson, Jones and Cook.

The number of boxes boarded by each factory was as follows:

Reese	150
Warmwater	110
Shearer	150
Central Smith	110
North Smith	190
Warsaw	148
Westwood	200
Oakdale	120
Milling Link	120
Norwood	175
Melrose Abbey	127
Lakefield	145
Pine Grove	110
Peterboro	99
Oshawa Union	66
Maple Leaf	125
Myrtle	102
Ormond	240
Young's Point	70
Langton	120
Indian River	92
Ballyluff	63
Lakeview	85
Freemans	110
Beaufort	125
Oakdale	65
Swan Lake	160
Cornville	96
Mr. Pleasant	90
Daisy D.	90
Electrowood	185

Mr. Cook opened the bidding by offering 81-4c. Mr. Sanderson followed with 83-8c. Mr. Fitzgerald, 81-2c. Mr. Bailey 82-4c. Mr. Whitton 87-8c. and Mr. Fitzgerald came in again at 81-16c.

At this figure he got Pine Grove, Lakefield, Keene, Frasersville, Trewhar, Central Smith, Peterborough, Lang, and Young's Point.

Mr. Whitton bid 81-16c. for the next, securing Ormond, Indian River, Melrose Abbey, Westwood, Shearer, Electrowood, Cornville and Daisy D.

Mr. Whitton bid 87-8c. for further secured all the remainder of the lot, offering bid 87-8c. but the factories called all refused.

Mr. Whitton then got Oakdale and Norwood at 81-16c.

There was still considerable cheese on the board, but none of the buyers would offer 81-16c., and the salesmen refused a lower bid. On motion they were given permission to sell off the board.

A motion, introduced by Mr. Sanderson, that the next meeting be held in three weeks instead of two weeks as usual was well down.

Mr. Cook extended the salesmen of the necessity of having fires kept in the factories during the cold nights to the fall.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

H. P. Kennedy is in Toronto to-day.

Miss Delaney returned from a trip to Toronto on Tuesday.

Mr. "Chick" McRae, passed through town on his way to Kingston.

The Rev. S. J. Shorey returned home yesterday evening from Conference.

Mr. Robert Hamilton, of Ashburnham, is present visiting with friends in Oakdale.

Mr. W. S. Pickup, reeve of Millbrook, was in town yesterday on his way from Lakefield.

Miss Maud West returned yesterday after spending the summer with her sister in Havana.

Conductor Pym, of Lindsay, who is visiting friends in town on sick leave, is gradually improving.

The Lindsay Post says: Messrs. W. J. Scott and T. H. Hamilton, of Peterborough registered at the Simpson House yesterday.

At All Jackson, representing the Dominion Brewery, of Toronto, has been in town for a few days, on business.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Kelle, of Millbrook, and Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, of Elizabethtown, N. J., spent yesterday in town, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Armstrong, King Street.

Mrs. Dawson Kennedy is visiting friends in Oakdale, and will also spend a few days in Bradford before returning home.

Mr. Milne Hamilton, son of Mr. Peter Hamilton, returned to Montreal last night to resume his studies at McGill University.

Mrs. W. J. Morrow and children left Tuesday to return to Charlotte, South Carolina, after spending a month in town at the residence of Mr. John Delaney.

Miss Mary Graham, of Rochester, N. Y., on her way home after spending a month at Buzzards Point and Fenton Falls, is spending a few days with Miss Maclean, corner Stewart and Shortbrooks streets.

Mary Dorecher, Gertrude Phillips, Marion Hayer, John Mape and Albert Lawson, living in town, returned to school for the term in Belleville to-day, after their summer vacation. John Crough does not this year.

Mr. K. Mark, who has been suffering for some time from an appendicitis attack, resulting from the rupture of a blood vessel in the brain, is improving, and the specialists he has consulted in Toronto think that his recovery will come in a short time. He is at present with his son Mr. Donald Mark, Havelock.

Mr. Donald Hagarth, of Mattawa, who has been attending the Booness College here during the summer, left for the east with the lacrosse club last evening, and will not return, having finished his course. During the summer Don made many friends in town, especially amongst the lacrosse boys, with whom he was a prime favorite. After identifying himself with the lacrosse club in June, he speedily worked himself into a position on the team, and during the season he was one of the team trained more conscientiously or did better work. He will be greatly missed amongst the boys.

The "Spot Cash" have a large stock of peaches to-day.

SMART-MARON

Daughter of the Late David Smart Married at Toronto.

St. James' Cathedral was converted into a perfect garden of beauty yesterday afternoon on the occasion of the marriage of Miss Lillian Constance Smart, daughter of the late David Smart and Emily Smart, of this city, to Mr. Alfred Conrad Maron, of Philadelphia, Pa.

The ceremony took place at 2 p.m. The officiating clergy were Bishop Du Moulin, of Hamilton, assisted by Canon Sanson, of St. James' Cathedral. The exquisite decorations of the cathedral interior, through a lavish display of palms, hydrangeas, together with the attractive attire of the wedding party made a charming scene. Miss Mabel Smart, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Miss Jean Smith and Miss Eleanor Phillips. Mr. Chas. Fearon, of Philadelphia, was best man. The ushers were Mr. D. Worth Smart, brother of the bride, Mr. Willie Funk, Mr. Clement Devine and Mr. Theodore Reimer. The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. D. W. Smart. After solemnizing the nuptials a reception was held at Lindenwood, palatial Jarvis street home of the bride, which was attended by a large concourse of friends and relatives.

The bride wore a beautiful dress of white duchesse satin, ornamented by a handsome floral relief, with ruffles of white chiffon and point lace and a magnificent train of ruffled satin. The skirt bore a splendid wreath of white orange blossoms. The bride also wore a prettily conceived tulle bridal veil with coiffure orange blossoms. Dresses of white corded satin, trimmed with green and gold, were worn by the bridesmaids.

The couple will take an extended tour in the British Isles and the Continent, returning to a permanent residence in Philadelphia. The groom is a well-known banker. City, Montreal, and Mr. Maron left for New York last evening. Passage has been secured on the Cunarder Umbria out from the metropolis on the 24th inst.

The bride is a niece of Mr. W. E. Beatty and Mr. E. S. Cox, of Toronto, and formerly was a resident of Port Hope, Ont., where she is exceedingly popular.

A large number of admiring friends were attracted to the ceremony at the cathedral.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Peaches! Peaches! Peaches! Lots of them at the "Spot Cash."

The lacrosse match yesterday between Perth and Peterboro, at the former place resulted in a draw, each side scoring five goals.

It has been decided to award the beautiful medal, so kindly presented to the committee by the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Peterboro, for competition, for the best stallion on the grounds, instead of for Cydeadele horse or mare, as announced in Monday's local papers.

The "Spot Cash" have a large stock of peaches to-day.

The People's Coal Co. have given one ton of their coal as a prize to the Central Exhibition, but it was omitted in prize list. It will be given as a special prize, as follows: half ton to best team of draught horses; half ton to best ten pounds of butter.

The Toronto News says: Pharmacy will be considerably strengthened this season by the accession of Geo. Riley, of Peterboro, the all-round champion of Varsity games of '29.

Millbrook Expedition

The prominent position occupied by the annual exhibition of the East Durham Agricultural Society held in Millbrook has been on the lips of every visitor to the Fair for some years. What has contributed largely to its success has been the faithful aid kept before the minds of the directors, to give every exhibitor and visitor prizes worth contending for, and attractions delightful to the eye, and at the same time or practical usefulness.

The exhibition this year will be held Thursday and Friday, Oct. 6th and 7th. The great aim of country and township fairs should be to cultivate a higher standard of farm stock and agricultural products, as well as manufactured and domestic articles, and Millbrook annual exhibition is doing good work along that line. There will be many special attractions this year of an interesting character, and on the evening of the second day grand contests in the town hall. Large prizes for horse races are being offered. Those who attend Millbrook Fair on the above dates will be grateful and amply paid.

Esterhazy's Ruin

DETERMINED UPON—HE WAS TO BE MADE A SCAPEGOAT

He will Write a Book—The Whole Unhappy Dreyfus Story to be Given to the Public—M. Cavaignac and Paty du Clam Involved

London, Sept. 22.—The Daily News this morning says that Comte Esterhazy has been sojourning in London in the guise of an Italian Count. He speaks Italian fluently. A representative of the Daily Mail caught him at Charing Cross as he was about to start for Paris. In the course of the interview Comte Esterhazy said he had constantly passed the detectives detailed to watch him in Paris in his present disguise and that nobody had recognized him.

HIS RUIN DETERMINED UPON.

"But," he added, "I mistrust even this. I told General Pellieux after the suicide of Colonel Henry that it would be impossible to stop things and that the movement would be formidable. The generals lost their heads. I wrote to M. Cavaignac a long letter acquainting him with the salient points of the affair. He refused to see me. My ruin had been determined upon; I was thrown overboard and have nothing left but to go away and wait developments."

Comte Esterhazy proceeded to declare that he had vainly tried to convince General Pellieux that the Henry document was a forgery, but that General Pellieux had declined to listen to him.

THREE PERSONS KNEW IT.

"There," said Comte Esterhazy, "but three persons who knew the truth of the matter—Cavaignac, Henry and myself. The first two are dead and I alone hold the secret."

Comte Esterhazy complained bitterly of the treatment of himself and Madame Payas, who is in prison in Paris. He declared that the Judge d'Instruction had Madame Payas brought from St. Lazare prison and offered her her liberty if she would reveal all she knew about the general's.

HE WILL WRITE A BOOK.

After reference to other phases of the affair, Comte Esterhazy said: "I intend to publish a book that will throw light upon the unhappy Dreyfus affair. Cavaignac made a mistake in pursuing me, because he struck at the same time his relation, Col. Du Paty de Clam. I may mention that I have already declined a pension offered me by the general bullet."

Just as he was taking the train he said in a sharp, nervous tone, without pausing for breath, "I don't know whether I shall make use of the documents in my possession. It will be dependent upon the march of events."

A REVOLUTION IMMINENT.

Paris, Sept. 22.—The situation here is generally admitted to be grave by both press and people. The conflict between the civil and military authorities is becoming acute. The sudden and unexpected action of General Zurlinden, the military governor of Paris, in prosecuting Col. Picquart on the charge of forging and using forged documents assumed a grave aspect, on account of the circumstances attending this intervention of the military authorities in a civil court.

THE FEELING IS INTENSE

At the present moment, when the political atmosphere is surcharged with dangerous electricity, generated by the Dreyfus affair, the General, who has just quitted the Cabinet, defying civil authority, takes without consulting his successor or the Premier, a momentous step. In ordinary circumstances, the military governor is empowered to act independently, but now that the Dreyfus question has become a great national matter, every proceeding in the affair has State importance. General Zurlinden's ignoring this obvious fact is very significant. He comes forward as the defender of the army, the prosecutor of its supposed calumniators, and the resolute opponent of a revision of the case. From this to an appeal to the public in the line of the establishment of a dictatorship there is no wide step.

STAMPING OUT HOG CHOLERA

Inspector James Says the Piggeries Near Ottawa were Infected

Ottawa, Sept. 22.—There was an immense crowd at the Central Fair today, excursion parties having reached the city from all directions. Dr. A. E. James is still engaged stamping out hog cholera in Carleton County. Altogether he has slaughtered 35 hogs, and has quarantined 157. Since the hog cholera was first discovered over 350 hogs have died. The greater number of these are not more than four miles out of the city. All the piggeries under quarantine will be kept so until the diseased hogs are killed off. The piggeries will be disinfected and thoroughly cleaned. The hogs which are being killed will be cremated. The inspector says that the state of these piggeries was most unwholesome, and that such should not be allowed to exist at or near a city.

His Excellency Lieut.-Governor Barker, Governor of the Barbados, arrived here last evening, and was this morning escorted over the Parliament buildings and other places of interest by Hon. R. W. Scott.

Mr. MacFarlane of the Dominion Steamship Company, and Mr. Hanna, of the Allan Company, were in the city yesterday in connection with the tenders for carrying the Atlantic mails, the time for receiving which closed at midnight. Three tenders were received and have been forwarded to Quebec.

MAJOR WALSH'S REPLY

He Makes a Definite Answer to Mr. Belyea's Charges

Claims to Have Acted Wholly Within His Rights—He is Prepared to Stand by the Position

Brockville, Ont., Sept. 22.—Major Walsh, who has recently returned from the Yukon where he acted as administrator for the Dominion Government, has made the following statement in reply to the charges made against him by Mr. Belyea in the North West Legislature.

"I am not seriously alarmed at the threats of Premier Haultain, and so far as my position in reference to the management of the liquor question in the Yukon is concerned, I did what I thought to be in the very best interest of that district, for the government of which I was responsible to the Dominion Government. Mr. Belyea, who was sent out to the Yukon by Premier Haultain, is an old acquaintance of mine. We met at Bennett in March. He left for Dawson some time before I did on my second trip down the river, but before doing so we freely discussed his mission to the Yukon. He said he was going to issue licenses and permits to saloon and hotels according to the regulations of the territories."

"I begged him not to do so, telling him that we had refused to grant licenses and permits, and gave as my reasons that a bill would be introduced, if it had not then been introduced, in the Dominion Parliament repealing the Yukon district from the territories, and I had not the least doubt the bill would become law. With this new law coming into force placing the regulation of this traffic in my hands, it could easily be seen that great annoyance and inconvenience would be caused by having to meet the conditions created by the granting of licenses under the act of the Territories that at the time, or in a very short time later, would be without jurisdiction in the district."

"I also informed Mr. Belyea that I thought our policy in the Yukon in regard to the liquor traffic would be altogether different to that existing in the Territories, and intimated to him that I had some idea we might find it necessary to prohibit the sale of liquor altogether. When Mr. Belyea left Bennett for Dawson I was strongly under the impression that he would not issue the licenses or permits, after the conversations we had had, although he did not expressly say he would not. Before leaving Bennett I was informed, though not officially, that the bill repealing the Yukon from the Territories had passed, and I proceeded to Dawson believing that to be the case, and I might say that the bill did become law very shortly afterwards."

"On arriving at Dawson I was very much surprised and disappointed that Mr. Belyea had issued many licenses. I sent one of our men out to ascertain to what extent these licenses had been issued, and he reported that Mr. Belyea had collected from $32,000 to $33,000 for licenses, and a large number of licenses had been granted for a year. To Mr. Belyea I expressed my surprise and regret, for, as I stated to him, the granting of these licenses would greatly interfere with the policy we had anticipated adopting."

"I understood that quite a number were selling without license, and Mr. Belyea entered actions against these people. At this time the act had passed the House providing for the government of the Territories, and I accordingly instructed the officer commanding the police that these people were not to be prosecuted. I informed the police that in a short time we would be officially notified of the passage of the act of reversion and would then decide on a policy for the district in regard to the liquor traffic."

"That's the entire situation," said the Major, "and I am prepared to stand by that position anywhere and at any time."

LOST IN THE MARSHES

Party of Seven Men With Outfits Missing

MONTREALER GOT THROUGH

He was a Year on the Road and was the First of 600 to Succeed.

He Fleeted 600 Miles on the Peace River—Among the Men Lost was Frederick Short, of Chicago.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 22.—A rush to the Klondike, a part of which went overland through Canadian Territory, has given the terrible floating marshes between the Nelson and Peace Rivers more victims. Among them was Frederick Short, of Chicago. Early last Spring a party of seven men, all easterners, started from Fort St. John, on the Peace River, to cross the marshes to the Nelson River. They did not return to Fort St. John, and later it was found that they had not reached either Fort Nelson or Fort Halkett. All must have gone down in the marshes with their horses and outfits. Frederick Short is the only man in the party whose name was known.

Joseph Hotz, of Montreal, the first of six hundred pilgrims who tried the route and got through, brought the news to Dawson. He was a year on the road, and travelled 4,500 miles. He got through safely by floating 800 miles in an easterly direction on the Peace River to Lake Athabasca, and on portions of the Mackenzie and McMillan Rivers.

IDENTIFIED AT LAST.

Police are confident that the man is the same.

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 22.—Chief of Police Birmingham said today: "There is no reason to doubt any further that the mystery of the Yellow Mill Pond has been solved. The victim was beyond the shadow of a doubt Emma Gill, of Southington. Her mother, we expect, will be here today to see the head, and strengthen the identification. So will the dentist who looked after the girl's teeth."

"Outside of this, however, the identification is complete. Now, while we have Charles Pism under arrest, I do not believe that he was implicated in the crime to any great extent, if at all. He may have known something about it, but not enough upon which we can hold him for anything."

"This day will probably see the end of the misery. As to Foster I have no doubt in the world but that he knows all about the manner in which the girl came to her death. I think I can safely say that we can secure the person who cut up the body any time we want to make an arrest. It is impossible for the party returned to get away. Whether or not it is a man or woman I decline to say at this time."

Goddard Arrested.

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 22.—Harry Goddard, son of Dr. "Nancy" A. Goddard, was arrested about three o'clock this afternoon as he was about to enter his mother's house on Gilbert street. The house had evidently been under surveillance of the police, for the young man had not time to enter the house after he had placed the key in the door to unlock it when he was arrested. He was taken to the police station and looked up.

SPANISH TROOPS FOR HOME

Departure From Porto Rico of soldiers both sick and well

San Juan, Island of Porto Rico, Sept. 22.—The repatriation of the Spanish soldiers began today. Four hundred men, of whom two hundred were sick and two hundred belonged to the engineer corps, sailed for Havre on board the French steamer Chateau Lafite. Eight hundred infantry will sail tomorrow on the steamer San Francisco.

The water front was crowded with thousands of people when the Spanish engineers marched down to the docks of the Spanish quai to the wharf, where they were received by Captain-General Macias and General Ortega. The Captain-General did not make a speech, but he shook hands with the officers and men. There was no demonstration made by the people.

The Captain-General today gave notice to the Spanish troops to retire from Abbonito, Barranquitas and Barro Colorado, and from Humacao, Guama and Cayey on Monday. The American troops will move up and occupy these towns as soon as they are evacuated, and the Spanish troops in position near the capital will enter the city in order to be ready to embark on the arrival of the transports there.

They are rejoicing over the prospect of an early return to their homes. The water front was crowded with thousands of people when the Spanish engineers marched down to the docks of the Spanish quai to the wharf, where they were received by Captain-General Macias and General Ortega. The Captain-General did not make a speech, but he shook hands with the officers and men. There was no demonstration made by the people.

Santander, Spain, Sept. 22.—The anchor line steamer City of Rome, chartered by Admiral Cervera to transport to Spain the Spanish sailors captured at the battle of Santiago, who were recently released by the United States authorities, arrived here today from Portsmouth, N. H., which place she left on Sept. 12. Captain Eulate the former commander of the Spanish cruiser Victoria, and the other Spanish naval officers landed and were mistaken for a party of which Admiral Cervera was a member. The latter, however, was still on board the City of Rome; but a crowd of people followed the officers and cheered for Admiral Cervera. Captain Eulate refused to make any statement for publication, declaring he reserved what he had to say for the court-martial.

ABOUT PROHIBITION

"The taxpayer objects to direct taxation and does not like the idea of paying a few dollars a year extra. In fact he would like to see his fellow citizens ruined rather than pay a little extra. Of this man I can only say that he is the meanest man out of hell, mean as the devil himself."

The above are the words used by Rev. William Patterson of Cooke's church, Toronto, in his sermon on prohibition on Sunday evening. Pretty strong words they are too. Mr. Patterson evidently realizes that nothing is to be gained by attempting, as many advocates of prohibition are doing, to argue that prohibition does not mean direct taxation. He evidently accepts the only logical conclusion to the adoption of a prohibitory law and then goes on to characterize the man who objects to paying a direct tax as he did.

Well, if the man who objects to paying a direct tax is that kind of a man, this country is full of them.

Credit should, however, be given to Mr. Patterson for his outspoken declaration that prohibition will involve direct taxation, and it rests with the opponents of direct taxation to exercise their Christian charity and forgive the reverend gentleman for calling them as he did.

Mr. Patterson also said that Mr. Gladstone referred to the liquor traffic as the "nation's curse." Seeing that Mr. Gladstone drank good wine regularly, it is only reasonable to suppose that he was referring to intemperance when he spoke of the "nation's curse." Mr. Gladstone's ideal was evidently not teetotalism, or he would have lived that life for he had the will power to lead the life he thought proper for a Christian gentleman.

Mr. Patterson had the courage to frankly admit that both local option and the boot act had failed. They were prohibitory measures and yet Mr. Patterson plus his faith on prohibition. WHAT SIR WILFRID LAURIER SAID

Speaking at the meeting of the Canadian Temperance League in the Pavilion on Sunday afternoon last, Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that the loss of revenue would be met not by additional taxation, but by the displacement of the taxes. What Sir Wilfrid Laurier really said, as reported in the Globe, May 14, 1897, was as follows:

"If prohibition were applied, revenue to the amount of $2,500,000 would be wiped out at once and would have to be made up in some other way. What source of revenue is there that has not been tapped already? Direct taxation is the only source open."

Rev. Mr. Brown says that the statement that prohibition means direct taxation is "false and libellous." He refuses to admit that prohibition means direct taxation. Rev. William Patterson admits that it does and calls the man who objects to paying a direct tax "the meanest man out of hell, mean as the devil himself."

Rev. William Patterson is evidently not agreed on this point. Mr. Patterson should meet Mr. Brown and argue the point. At any rate he should be sure that he is not circulating a "false and libellous" statement when he says that prohibition means direct taxation.

Rev. Morgan Wood has hit upon the shortest and best way of getting over all difficulties about direct taxation and enforcing a prohibitory law. According to the Globe Mr. Wood says that the people should not be worried whether the law, if placed upon the statute books, would be enforced if the penalty carried. The problem, he said, could be solved afterwards. What does Mr. Wood mean? Does he mean that the people should "go it blind" without considering the consequences of their vote on this question? The voters generally like to know exactly what they are voting for, and no doubt they propose to find out on this occasion too.

While the small guns are rattling away, it might be well to fire a couple of shots from the big guns just to hear what kind of noise the big guns make. The Marquis of Lorne, who left from Kensington Palace, Jan. 15, 1895, said: "Prohibition has been tried over and over again in the United States and Canada, and has failed. To make their prohibition effective they would probably ask powers to employ a large detective service, pry into all men's business, stop smoking in the street and roadway and dance attendance on every man going to his dinner."

Sir William Macquart said: "I know some people imagine that if you could only enforce sobriety by law, you would get rid of the great part of the misery and vice in the world. But, unfortunately for this theory, we know that the most sober races in the world are among the most miserable and most vicious. The southern people are far less addicted to drink than those of northern climes. They are not more virtuous, more industrious or less criminal. These people have missed the point. What really makes sobriety valuable is the voluntary self-control, the deliberate self-denial which resists temptation and leads a man, for the sake of himself, and others, to abstain from vicious indulgence, and this is a thing that you cannot create by Act of Parliament."

UNDER THE THAMES

The vote on prohibition will take place on Thursday, Sept. 23, and all sensible people will vote "No."

At least London has an underground electric railway. It is not a very long line to be sure, but traversing as it does a congested district, it has for half a century been sorely needed and therefore is highly appreciated. It runs from Waterloo station, where the English continental is set down by various suburban lines, to Mansion House, which is in the very heart of London's business district. Heretofore this distance the Londoners have traversed by the slow and precarious buses, which were often so numerous as to choke the Strand for hours at a time. Now the trip is made in a very few minutes.

The new railway is a mile and a half long. It runs in double steel tubes at depths varying from 40 to 60 feet below the surface level. It goes underneath the Thames, and it was constructed in four years, without a single serious accident. The fare is only twelve pence.

A writer in the London Sketch, after enthusiastically dwelling on the electrically lighted, white walled tunnels and stations and the easy glide of the train, goes on thus:

"Waiting by the platform is an electric train and the train is nearly the only thing that has to do any waiting. For a five minute service runs all day. All the traveller has to do is to pay his twopenny and take his seat. The carriages are something like long tramcars, and not unlike the third class dining cars which run on the long journeys of the northern lines. They are not expensively upholstered, but that probably will aid the maintenance of their cleanliness, and each passenger can be sure of a seat to himself, because each seat is divided from its neighbor by arms. The compartments, which on each train are four in number, and which together will seat 200 persons, are brightly lit by electricity, and the traveler will be able to read his paper without feeling that he is doing irreparable injury to his eyesight."

He will be strengthened in this confidence by the very, ordinary, unassuming of the train. It glides out of the station almost imperceptibly, and except for the cool draft of air that filters into the carriages as the train slips down the incline it would be hard with shut eyes to realize that one was in a swiftly moving train. But the white painted tunnel is studded with electric lights, which rush swiftly by.

"Hardly, however, has this novelty of sensation passed away and just as the traveler is beginning to think or realize that the silver Thames has flowed over his head, when the speed begins to slacken, and in a twinkling much more space of time than the five minutes which the journey has actually taken he finds himself at a point that is only 40 steps below the Mansion House. It is a delight to see the place to which the journey from the one place to the other has been, a Gipsy's said of marriage, 'a continual struggle,' and has occupied any time from three-quarters of an hour to an hour."

MAY WED A PRINCESS

The reported engagement of Captain Putnam Bradley Strong to Princess Kaiulani brings both those young people again into prominence. Most people will insist on believing the report to be true, for it makes an exceedingly romantic story and a very pretty one. It will take more than the protestations of Captain Strong's mother, who declares that "Bradley is not the kind of a boy to fall in love so suddenly," to change public opinion. Where is the mother who imagines that her boy could fall in love with any young woman?

It is to be hoped that Mrs. Strong is mistaken, for this is an international alliance to which few good Americans would object. Just think how romantic the last representative of a vanishing royalty wedding a soldier of the country which has just absorbed her race and native land. It is almost as good as a fairy story.

More than all this, it is extremely probable. The young people have been acquainted for several years. Captain Strong, who has been assigned to duty on the staff of General Otis, stopped on his way to the Philippines at Honolulu with the rest of the expedition. The Hawaiian annexation had just taken place. Of course he went at once to pay his respects to Princess Kaiulani. They got together on horseback in the cool of the morning and drove together when the sun's glimmered. They skinned over the sun's glimmer in the same canoe and side by side swam out to the coral reefs beyond the breakers where few swimmers are strong enough to go.

The gossip says that the princess did not look unkindly upon the broad shouldered fellow who wears the blue of Uncle Sam, and one day when Captain Strong plunged into the surf and swimming out through the foam capped breakers, placed on his back a private soldier who had ventured too far and was drowning and brought him back in safety to the shore the princess was the first to praise him for his gallant feat.

Captain Strong is a fine looking, manly young chap of 23 who has not been long in New York. Two years ago he was a private in the ranks of the Sixty-ninth New York national guard. He was promoted to quartermaster-sergeant and rose to the position of battalion adjutant. Early in the year he was elected captain of Company D simply because he was a good guardman and very popular. When the war broke out, he enlisted with his regiment and was made an aide on the staff of General Otis.

It is extremely probable that Captain Strong found it hard to admit in Princess Kaiulani, for she is a strikingly attractive young woman. The princess, or more properly, Miss Cleghorn, I suppose, is just Captain Strong's age, and she looks as much unlike an uncivilized hawaka as Captain Strong looks different from an American Indian. In appearance, in fact, like a very well bred and very handsome English girl.

Kaulani, you know, is half English, anyway. Her father is the Hon. A. B. Cleghorn, a prominent English resident in the Hawaiian Islands. Her mother was the Princess Miriam Mahele, sister of Liliuokalani and former King Kalakaua. Mr. Cleghorn has held some of the most important offices in the islands, among them being that of governor of the Island of Oahu.

Princess Liliuokalani named her niece the Princess Kaiulani, her appearance on March 9, 1891, the fact being officially recognized by the government of the United States. The princess left Honolulu in 1897 for England, where she lived for several years in the family of the Hon. Theodore H. Davies.

With the family of Mr. Davies she visited this country to protest against the Harrison treaty of annexation. She issued in 1893 an eloquent and pathetic protest directed to the American people. Governor Cleghorn returned to Hawaii with his princess daughter less than a year ago. She has not seen her home since she was a little girl. She returned a tall, finely proportioned, graceful woman.

TRAINMAN'S TOOTH ACHED

So He Decided to Get a Freight Train to Pull It.

"Say, did you hear about my friend Bill?" said a trainman. "Well, that fellow has made me laugh more times than soon. Not long ago Bill gets a jumping toothache. He wants to have the tooth out, but he don't want to pay the money, nor he ain't got the nerve to have the thing done. All the same that tooth is keeping him up at night, and Bill he almost goes wild. 'Either me or that tooth,' says Bill; 'one or the other. I ain't going to stand this sort of life.'"

All the same, when Bill starts to go to the dentist he begins to bend, and he is so scared that the tooth stops hurting. But when he turns back and reaches the house the tooth is plugging him again. Now, Bill thinks of a great scheme. What does he do but buy a piece of strong string (say, you know this kind of silk thread), and he waxes that end to his tooth so tight that it cannot come off. Then Bill walks down to the railroad station. You see, it was his idea to tie the string to a freight car, and then when the train started it would jerk the meanly tooth out.

"He finds a freight and ties the string to the coupler of the last car and stands around so wait until the train starts. Well, sir, he begins to feel chilly about the gills. The more he thinks of the time when the train is going to move the worse he feels. Every time a whistle blows he jumps. 'Well, I guess I'd better untie,' thinks Bill, 'and come again another day,' but when he goes to loosen the string he finds that it's too tight, and he can't jerk the thing loose because the other end is on the tooth."

"Well, sir, that train begins to start, and Bill he doesn't have the nerve to stand back, so he just trots on behind like a little pup on a lead of a chain. 'Where are you going, Bill?' hollers out a fellow. 'You seem to be in a hurry,' says Bill, 'I'm beginning to go a little fast, but he has to commence to lope like a jack rabbit. You see, the train had been going through the city, but now it started to get outside. Bill didn't have the nerve to stand still, so he just jumped himself after the train like it was something that he wanted bad. 'Say, mister, why are you running that way?' asked a brakeman who got on to the thing. Of course that sort of guy made Bill madder than ever, but he had to lope on. Lucky for Bill the train had to slow up for a crossing, and while it stopped he borrowed a knife and cut the string. But, say, it was funny to see Bill shaking the freight."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Catching Thieves by Code.

"Most folks think an elevator starter has a very easy job, but they're wrong," said the man who has charge of the elevators in a La Salle street skyscraper.

"It seems to keep you busy, but the work looks easy," remarked a bystander.

"You think you know what the others do—that we have nothing to do but tell the conductor of each elevator when to start up," replied the starter. "Seeing that the elevators are not overloaded and that they are not all at the top or bottom of the building at once is the hardest part of our work. The hardest is stopping thieves. Pickpockets and overcoat thieves work the elevators regularly. I've spotted these fellows in this building, though."

"How?"

"I have arranged a code of signals by which I can, without attracting the attention of anybody else, warn the elevator conductor to keep his eye on certain persons while in the car, or when they get any pocketpicking and notices at which floor they leave the car. For instance, if on a cold day like this two men well dressed, but without overcoats, come in here, as soon as they step into an elevator I say, 'That's all right, No. 7.' All you see is the elevator starts up at once. The elevator man, however, knows that I suspect the last person entering his car may be overcoat thief, and it is his duty to notice at what floor they leave the car and, if possible, which room they enter. If instead of saying, 'That's all right, No. 7,' I had said, 'Go ahead, 7,' the elevator conductor would have known I suspected the last two men—for pocketpicking work in pairs—in his car were pickpockets, and he would keep a constant watch on them."

"How does your system work?"

"Well, we've caught four pickpockets and seven overcoat thieves already this winter, and the season isn't half ended. The police don't realize how much is over to the elevator starters, who are generally caught and a lot of fellows with an easy job."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

SERVANTS' LIVERIES.

They Had Their Origin During the Reign of King Pepin of France.

So far as the present writer is aware, the earliest mention of "liveries" made in history was during the reign of King Pepin of France, who flourished about the year 760 A. D.

A form of amusement to which King Pepin was partial was what were termed scene playments. These were assemblies at which, upon the king's invitation, all the lords and courtiers of France were expected to be present. They were held twice in each year—at Christmas and Easter—and generally lasted for about a week at each time. Sometimes these gatherings took place at the king's palace, sometimes in the neighborhood of one of the larger French cities and sometimes in some rural district. While the festival lasted the king took all his meals in public, bestowed and shared alone being privileged to sit at the royal table. A second table was provided for abbots, counts and other leading men, and at both tables there was always more profusion than delicacy, both in the quality of the meats and drinks and the manner in which they were served. Fruits, hantboys and other musical instruments were played before the banquet of each course as it was removed from the table.

When dessert was served, 50 heralds, each holding aloft a jeweled goblet, shouted thrice, "Largesse, largesse from the most potent of kings!" As they shouted they scattered among the crowds handfuls of gold and silver coins. Then the trumpets were blown, while the better class spectators shouted and the meaner sort applauded and often fought vigorously for the money scattered by the heralds.

Charles VII of France put a final stop to the scene playments, alleging that the expense attendant upon his wars with England made it impossible for him to continue them. One of the severest causes of expense, it was explained, arose from the fact that, beginning with King Pepin's time, etiquette and custom alike demanded that the king should upon these occasions give an entire suit of new and gorgeous clothing not only to his own servants and retainers, but also to those of the queen and all the princes of the blood royal. These garments were said to be liveries—that is, "delivered" at the king's expense—and from this word the English word "livery" was derived, as was the custom of providing servants with "liveries" from the above mentioned practice of certain of the French kings—London Standard.

THEY ARE EVACUATING PORTO RICO SATISFACTORILY

Lighthouses now Re-Lit—Great Demonstration to be Made at San Juan when the American Flag is Raised Over the City

San Juan, Porto Rico, Sept. 23.— Everything regarding the evacuation of the Island of Porto Rico by the Spanish troops is proceeding satisfactorily.
The Spaniards are acting in perfect good faith and are turning over everything as they quit the various towns.
Preparations are being made for an elaborate and impressive ceremony when the American flag is raised over San Juan.
The lights on the north coast of the island, which have been dark ever since the war began, have been re-lighted by the Spaniards, except at San Juan, where the lighthouse was destroyed when this place was bombarded by the fleet under Rear Admiral Cervera.
United States Consul Hanna is flooded with letters from fortune-hunters.
He strongly advises all the Americans to remain at home until the Americans are in complete control.

EMPEROR'S LIFE IN DANGER.
London, Sept. 23.—According to special dispatches received from Peking members of the European community there believe the life of the Emperor of China is in danger.
It is added that the Dowager Empress desires to place Prince Kung's grandson on the throne. The Emperor, it is added, realizes the strength of the conspiracy against him, and has ordered the guards at the palace to be strengthened.

THE KAISER IN EGYPT.
Cairo, Sept. 23.—The German Emperor and his suite of 60 persons are expected to arrive here on November 15, and will remain two days as the guests of the Khedive. The Egyptian Government is spending no pains to entertain the Kaiser. Already a grant of $100,000 has been made, and it is thought this will have to be increased to $200,000. The Khedive, out of his own private purse, has expended $90-000 on carriages and horses for the occasion.

MILITARY MANOEUVRES.
London, Sept. 23.—The great military manoeuvres on Salisbury Plain have at last been concluded, and the Commander-in-Chief of the British army has issued an order recording his sense of the skill shown by the generals in the military operations. He states that during the operations, which included long days of work in very hot weather, the willing spirit and good marching powers shown by the men have been remarkable, and their conduct leaves nothing to be desired.

OVER 300 LIVES LOST.
Kingston, Jamaica, Sept. 23.—Mail advice, which reached here to-day, brought details of the hurricane disaster at the island of St. Vincent.
Lucia and St. Helena, showing that the loss of life was not exaggerated.
At St. Vincent about 300 lives were lost, not counting the loss of life suffered through the destruction of shipping. The coast is strewn with the wrecks of vessels.

GLAD TO GET BACK.
Seattle, Wash., Sept. 23.—The steamer Humboldt arrived here to-day, 12 days from St. Michael's with 230 passengers, from Dawson City. The missionaries of the "Cheboks" glad to get back to civilization. They had only a few weeks of gold dust.
Twice they had to go down the treacherous trail, and the loss of the treasure brought down on the steamers at $100,000.

THE TROOPS THAT WERE TAKEN UP FROM
St. Francisco on Humboldt left St.
Michael's on September 9, for Rampant City.

GAVE $20 FOR FINDING $61,000.
San Francisco, Sept. 23.—George Mulligan, a miner who recently returned from the Klondike, lost a purse containing $61,000 on a street car a few days ago. It has been found. A man turned by John Donahue, the groom-man of the car.

WITH the exception of $40 in currency the money was in cheques, one of which was a draft for $57,000 issued at Dawson City on the Bank of British Columbia. In this city, Mulligan left $30 in the car for the honest groom.

RIOT OF LONGSHOREMEN.
Galveston, Texas, Sept. 23.—The Military Steamship Line labor riots broke out afresh here last night by the striking negro longshoremen, making an attack upon the guard at the wharf. The police repelled the attack with pistols.
One of the attacking negroes was killed, and one of the negroes employed on the wharf was wounded. The police captured one of the rioters. There has been an ominous quiet in the situation for several days, but six policemen were guarding the shed. The negroes made a sortie in the shadow of one of the sheds and overpowered the sentry.
They announced that they were after the leaders of the rioters. The police employed at the docks. The negroes were asleep, but they soon got to cover, and although over a hundred shots were fired but one of them was wounded.

HOW TO WIN WOMEN

A Recipe Given by a Man Who Ought to Know

New York, Sept. 23.—If you have to do to win a woman is to tell her she is beautiful, then tell her you love her, and she'll give you her hand right away. —Biggest Heckling's recipe for winning a wife.
Mr. Heckling owns up to eighty love affairs, with marriage as a result of a majority of them. He was arrested Wednesday in Newark and locked up at Police headquarters, awaiting requisition from New York on charges of bribery and obtaining money under false pretences.
"Oh yes," he laughed, when Detective Sergeant Christie took him in charge, "I'm a married man."
"How many wives have you got?"
asked the detective.
"About eighty or thereabouts," replied the prisoner. "At least I made love to that many. Say, see that tolley car? Well, there wouldn't be room for the conductor and me if I had my wives aboard."

Heckling has been in matrimonial trouble many times before. He is locked up owing to charges made by Miss Agnes Heinman of 251 East Seventy eighth street. She made affidavit before Magistrate Mott that on Sept. 9 the guy Luthario married her and disappeared next day with the $500 she had drawn from her savings bank to add to her own husband's capital.
So a warrant was issued and the quarry was rounded up yesterday.

"That's all," exclaimed Miss Heinman when she saw portrait 109 in the New York Budget's gallery.
And the police knew it all. Heckling was at it again, though he had "done time" often before for the same offense—making love to women and then off with their hard won savings, and if he had to marry them to boot.
Heckling is 36 years old. He is fat. He dresses exquisitely. He wears satin-lined overcoats and red cavats.
He likes only Yang-Yang perfume.
He would never guess he was a day over 45.

Heckling has a wife, a respectable woman who owns her living in Newark as a dressmaker.
"I only marry 'em," he explained,
"when I can't get their money any other way."

Heckling usually met his finances in the same way—by the insertion of an advertisement. He had a small place at No. 36 Broadway street, where he used to take his various victims. There he'd explain that he only needed a little money to embark in a prosperous business, and after getting it he'd promptly disappear.

TIPS IN THE YUKON

Charge That the Postal Clerks Take Tips for Favoritism

Ottawa, Sept. 23.—Mr. Charles Mac-gill, president of the Ottawa Bank, has returned from a visit to the Pacific coast. He visited Seattle and other places, and talked there about the Yukon.

"The boom seems to have burst and the great rush is now over," he said,
"as there are over 20,000 men about Dawson City who cannot get either work or claims."
He said that from Victoria to Seattle with crossed from 500 who had arrived the night before from St. Michael's, and a sadder and more disappointed-looking lot of men you never saw. Several were carried on board, being too ill to walk.
They all seemed to be pleased to get back to civilization again.

Yes, I talked with many of the men about the complaints against the Canadian Government officials in Dawson, and if one-half they said is true, favoritism and official corruption are running riot there, and Canada is being disgraced in the eyes of men from all parts of the world.

"The chief complaints are made against the gold commissioners, officers and the postoffice. The officials of the latter get as much as a dollar a letter delivered to the owners from the side door, or brought to them."

Judge McGuire was highly spoken of as an honest, straightforward man, but all the others either took bribes or tips, as some of these men called it, or winked at it being done by those under them.

"Some allowance, of course, should be made on account of the majority of those returning having failed in getting gold, but there must be some truth in their reports, and the Government should institute a searching investigation."

MAY RESULT IN TWO DEATHS

Probably Fatal Accident at Collingwood Fair

Collingwood, Ont., Sept. 23.—The Great Northern Exhibition held here this week has been a great success, the exhibits being far ahead of former years. More especially is this the case in the fruit exhibit, the quality being excellent and the quantity enormous.
The attendance is far ahead of former years and the directors will have to enlarge their buildings and extend their grounds, as all the enclosure was very much crowded.

An unfortunate accident happened, which spoiled the enjoyment of the spectators and will perhaps end in the loss of two lives. In the second heat of the free-for-all running race, immediately after the start, a young man attempted to cross the track and was struck down by the front foot of the leading horse, Lady Marr. Her hind foot also struck him and lifted him off the ground and threw him under the rest of the horses, where he was terribly mangled. Lady Marr's jockey, a lad named Bellwood was pitched on his head and picked up senseless. The other lad was got out as quickly as possible and Dr. McKay of Collingwood who was on hand ordered his removal to the hospital. He also attended to Bellwood. No one on the grounds could identify the first boy.

Dr. McKay was interviewed to-night coming from the hospital and his report is that the unknown man is still unconscious and very badly injured, both on the head and body, however he thinks he has a chance to recover. The jockey, Bellwood, he is not so sure of,
as he has a nasty scalp wound and depressed concussion of the brain. He also is unconscious.

THEIR VIEWS IN WRITING

International Commissioners
Getting Things in Shape

ARE DELAYED IN TWO WAYS

Throngs of Lobbyists and Plenty of Social Festivities Hamper Them

The Canadian Coal missionaries and President Hardy of Ontario are Hardly on Speaking Terms

Quebec, Sept. 23.—The social pleasanties of the last few days no matter how flattering to the Americans, can hardly have the effect of smoothing the way of an international understanding on the questions outlined in the protocol. The deliberations have proceeded thus far that the views of the respective countries have been reduced to writing.

A VARIETY OF VIEWS.

The interest of the industries to be affected so widely differ that it has been found an almost impossible task to reconcile them. A deputation comes on day, lays its representations before the United States or Canadian delegates, and then along comes another entirely opposite in its opinions.
Thus the commissioners, far from being assisted, find themselves working on what seems to be in the main a hopeless task.

THE SEALERS CASE.

Capt. Cox, the official agent of the British Columbia sealers, has been in town for several days. He is authorized to sell out their sealers, involving as well any future right to engage in pelagic sealing in Behring Sea. His demand for $750,000 from the United States is regarded as modest.

AN ALASKA LOBBY.

By an amusing coincidence the strong lobby maintained here by the Alaska Commercial Co. is actively but indirectly cooperating with the Canadians. Senator Mark Hanna, and other plutocrats who enjoy the friendship of President McKinley, are interested in the Alaska Co.

THE BONDING QUESTION.

When Mr. Clarke, of Boston, had a through with his presentation of the New England view on the issue of bonding question yesterday, he was congratulated by Hon. Mr. Coole, chief of the United States Commission.

The ideas of the people of Maine and Massachusetts are in accord with those of Canadian railways.
Congressman Tawney, of Minnesota, had an hour's conference this morning with Senator Fairbanks. He is the official spokesman of the Western American lumbermen. He is renewing his efforts to prevent any arrangement that would enable the Canadian lumbermen to ship their produce to the United States at a reduced rate of duty.

MR. WALLACE'S STATEMENT.

Hon. N. Clarke Wallace, representing the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, to-day submitted in its behalf a statement in writing. In it he emphasized the necessity of the continuance of the National Policy, inaugurated by the Conservative party.

IS MR. FIELDING SURE?

Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, who has quarreled with his colleagues on account of his omission from membership in the commission, has sent a lobbyist here to insist on the abolition of the duty on United States soft coal, in exchange for a mutual privilege, enabling for Nova Scotia miners to ship to the New England markets.

The Ohio coal operators are willing to grant free coal for New England in return for the abolition of the Canadian duty of 60 cents a ton (from United States soft coal). They realize that they would have a monopoly in the richest portion of Ontario, as Canadian coal cannot be delivered at a profit west of Toronto. The amount of coal utilized by Canadian railways in Western Ontario also figures in these calculations. The views of the United States coal operators were presented yesterday to Senator Fairbanks.

ONTARIO'S PART.

The Canadian coal missionaries and President Hardy of Ontario are hardly on speaking terms. The former insist that the Ontario Government abolish the legislation providing that all logs cut in Ontario shall be manufactured in that province. Mr. Hardy declines to yield, and it is alleged, is threatened with the disallowance of his pet statute by the Dominion Government.

THE CANAL TOLLS.

A big United States delegation from Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago and Duluth will be here next week to urge the abolition of Canadian canal tolls. The compensation offered for such a privilege of canal that have cost the Canadian people so many millions has not been mentioned, but the Canadian commissioners are disposed to favorably consider the matter, if the United States grants reciprocity in coasting and wrecking privileges on inland waters.

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 24, 1898

MAY REVOLUTIONIZE OCEAN TRAVEL.

Two boats, now in process of construction at Wallsend-on-Tyne, are exciting the liveliest interest in naval circles, not only in England, but on the European Continent generally. They are to be fitted with the new system of turbine propulsion, which proved so brilliant a success on that living wonder, the Turbinia. They are both much larger than the pioneer vessel, and both are guaranteed, by the builders' contract, to attain a minimum speed of 35 knots. It is hoped that they may reach fifty.

One of them is for the British Admiralty, while the ownership of the other is uncertain. Already there are visions of an impending revolution in ocean travel. The suggestion has been made that sea-going vessels of this kind might run on regular trips from the west coast of Ireland to Half's Bay in Newfoundland, where they would connect with the rail-road system. This would make a forty-hour trip across the Atlantic possible. The distance from Galway Bay in Ireland to Half's Bay in Newfoundland is only 2,650 miles, whereas the distance from Liverpool to New York is 3,130 miles. In connection with this scheme, it has been proposed that a tunnel be built between Scotland and Ireland. Surveys have been made by engineers at the narrowest point between the two countries, and the construction of a tunnel is reported to be feasible. The intending traveler to America would then go from London straight to Galway Bay in Ireland without a change. There he would board one of the new turbine transatlantic steamers, which, in less than two days, would land him at Half's Bay, Newfoundland.

The fall of Khartoum must have been in the nature of a dull sickening thud to the Khedive.

Galt municipality has decided to abolish the ward system, and has also decided to take over the electric light company's plant. Galt is a progressive town.

The interior decorations of Willie K. Vanderbilt's rooms at college cost many thousands of dollars. One cannot help but wonder whether the interior decorations of Willie's head at the end of his course of study will have justified such expense.

The officers in the German army are high-headed fellows. At the recent maneuvers in Alsace-Lorraine Captain Count Stoffberg-Wernigrode bowed Sergeant Scheinhardt's ears for insolence. The sergeant turned sharply when he was hit and the Count ran him through the neck with his sword and killed him. The Count has been arrested.

In London yesterday there was an unsupported rumor to the effect that the Egyptian flag was flying over Fasboda in Paris, there is a growing disposition to belittle the gravity of this Fasboda business, and the sinner papers are telling their hysterical colleagues to keep their heads. M. D. D'Arce, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, has assured Sir E. J. Monson, the British Ambassador, that the Marchand expedition is geographical and not political. From all this it would appear that Britain and France are so likely to come to blows about Fasboda.

Mr. Bromley, Not Mark Twain.

Andrew Lang, discussing rhymes in the London Daily News, turns for an illustration to those tantalizing verses; Punch, brothers, punch with care; Punch in the presence of the passerelle and credits them to Mark Twain. This is not unusual, since they are most commonly associated with the story which Mark Twain wrote about the effect which they had on him in common with every body else who once had their jingle fixed in mind. But Mark Twain is not the author of the verses. They were written by the late Isaac H. Bromley, and were first published in the Tribune. Their origin was due to a suggestion from a colleague of Mr. Bromley, who in the days of horse-cars, bell-punches and various colored trip slips, had his attention attracted one night as he was making a lonely journey down town to the sign in the car informing the public that the conductor would "punch in the presence of the passenger." The sound drummed itself into his brain, and the result was so curious that he copied the phrases of the notice and handed them to Mr. Bromley as something which seemed to him funny. So they seemed Mr. Bromley, and from them he evolved the much quoted lines. Their publication in the Tribune brought them to the notice of Mark Twain, who found in them a text, as he himself says in his story—its truth being so much stronger than fiction that his readers have persisted in regarding it as fiction and believing that he wrote the jingle for the sake of the tale, and not the tale because he was tormented by the jingle—New York Record.

WHAT IS GOING ON AT QUEBEC

Quebec, Sept. 23.—The Assiniboian came down like a wolf on the fold, but what shall we say to describe the badging rush to "wolf" the international commission. There was a little lobbying before adjournment, but it was nothing to the present condition of affairs at Quebec. The tourist has given place to the lobbyist of the Frontenac to the most with interest. The visitors range from great merchant princes and railway magnates of continental reputation, who talk of national affairs as if they looked them up every night in their sleep, down to the humble and less presumptuous folk who are content to let their neighbors keep the axle of the universe round as long as a little of the lubricant drops on the wheels of their particular industry. To the spectator who has no business infant to keep him awake nights the panorama is thoroughly enjoyable. In one corner of the smoking-room we may see Mr. Clarke Wallace, the Canadian manufacturer's champion, years of his joy on the neck of Mr. Albert Clarke of Boston, the eminent New Englander who represents the Boston Home Market Club. They both bow the knee at the altar of high protection and find the ritual to the liking. Their meeting to-day was a real love feast, for both have as their ideal that well-known picture of the building with the motto underneath, "What we have we'll hold."

In another corner the Premier of Ontario is discussing the lumber and log duties with Congressman Tawney of Minnesota, the gentleman who has tried hard to make a tariff fence that would let through a log two feet thick, but keep out a seven board of only an inch. He would have succeeded, too, if the Ontario Government had not done a little fence building of its own. The discussion between Mr. Hardy and Mr. Tawney may not be altogether without benefit. There is a notion abroad that the American lumbermen do not adopt an entire hostile attitude. The suggested compromise of free trade or a bid duty on the higher grades of lumber in return for free logs is one, however, that will need a great deal of thinking out. Fine lumber naturally goes to Great Britain, and it is the coarser sort of which Mr. Tawney says the States themselves have a surplus that as outlet is needed here.

In still another corner Col. Walker, Chairman of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, is exchanging opinions with Mr. Heyes of the Grand Trunk. One would never think that the Colonel was making preparations to scold his Canadian friend, but that, nevertheless, is just what he is in Quebec to do. He has been here for several days, but we of the press did not learn his mission until Mr. Clarke of Boston came to town. Colonel Walker was formerly a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and is an eminent authority on railway affairs. He is here on behalf of powerful railway interests desirous of stifling Canadian railway competition to ask that the American commissioners shall in the treaty to be made formally bring Canadian railways under the operation of the Interstate Commerce law and provide that in the event of a breach of its provisions the offending Canadian railway shall be excluded from participation in the carrying of American goods from one point of the United States to another.

Now here is what Mr. Clarke says about this campaign. "Colonel Walker represents a great railway system, with a capital perhaps of $250,000,000. I represent 2,000 manufacturers and merchants of New England, with over $700,000,000 of capital—not watered—and employing hundreds of thousands of people. We market our goods all over the world and we want the greatest possible competition in means of distribution. We insist that there shall be no interference with the bonding arrangement, which is already amply protected by law, and which therefore need not be mentioned in the treaty at all. So long ago as 1891 the Canadian roads agreed to be governed in regard to business originating in the United States and destined to other points in the United States by the laws of the Interstate Commerce Commission. An American road violating the interstate law is fined, but he proposes a different penalty altogether for Canadian roads—nothing less than shutting them out of the United States for the fault perhaps of some agent, of whose conduct the managers are ignorant. Our desire is the free commerce between New England and the west, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas and the Pacific, should be free to take the most convenient and the most economical route.

Mr. Clarke, if a free trader in transportation, is a thorough protectionist in trade affairs, and probably Colonel Walker thinks he thereby displays some selfishness. Mr. Clarke was the friend of Mr. Blaine, and had much to do with the inserting of the reciprocity provision in the McKinley law. Reciprocity with the country having dissimilar products is easy to secure, and natural in operation, because such countries are complementary to each other in the inserting of a tariff can be prepared that will hurt no business in the United States, but he is very doubtful as to the possibility of getting such a list. The first duties of each country is to the manufacturer, mechanic and farmer within its own borders, and the United States is not prepared to sacrifice any one of these interests for the good of another, as England sacrificed the farmer to her manufacturer and her mechanic. Even with countries of similar products, however, where a vast territory is involved, Mr. Clarke thinks reciprocity might be possible on this one principle. He has not thought out the idea, but points out that Nova Scotia coal only gets up to Montreal, while Pennsylvania bituminous only gets down that far. In zones where Canadian coal could come into the States without competing with American coal, duties could be laid, and vice versa, he thinks limited reciprocity might be secured. The idea is decidedly novel, and local reciprocity may yet have a place with local option. The difficulty, Mr. Clarke says, is to grow up with once a year, but he points out that Nova Scotia coal only gets up to Montreal, while Pennsylvania bituminous only gets down that far. TALES OF IMPRISONMENT

A Cave for Prisoners During the Revolutionary War

Nothing marks the growing humanitarian side of warfare to a greater degree than the treatment given to prisoners of war. Cervara and his men were fortunate that they did not become prisoners on this side of the Atlantic during the Revolutionary War, says the New York Sun. Instead of being treated as honored guests and made to feel entirely at home, the fine old Spanish Admiral would have been taken many miles inland, through a forest dark and wild, there to be shut in darkness in a cavern many feet under ground.

There is such a prison on the western slope of Talbot Mountain, in the town of Granby, Conn. High, jagged rocks are to the east, a beautiful view of the Farmington Valley to the west, it is within an easy wheeltrip of Hartford, twenty miles to the north-west, and is visited by many persons from various parts of the land, affording at least an instructive lesson on the advance in civilization in the treatment ment of prisoners of war.

So startling is the first glimpse of the prison—called Newgate, after the famous prison in England—that the eye refuses to recognize it in keeping with the commonplace objects of a New England landscape. At first glance the place appears

TO BE A LARGE BARN.

covered with straw hills. But the deep woods throw the tumbled and vine-clad walls into such bold relief that soon it is perceived the ruins of a remarkable and picturesque character are near. They stood close to the west side of the road, and just across the way from an ordinary farmhouse, making the ruins more remarkable by contrast.
The entrance is gained by a circular gateway in the east wall to a sort of courtyard surrounded by ruined walls, and in the centre is the tower keeper's lodge, now used as an office building.
In revolutionary days the building was a blackhouse.

Here was the State prison of Connecticut between 1790 and 1820. On the sides of the enclosure were the workshops for the convicts. The only remaining prison building proper is at the south west corner, and was used for cooking, sleeping and hospital apartments. A small sentry box, from which the guard appeared to show escaping prisoners, partly remains on the wall to the left of the entrance.

But the revolutionary prisoners had no shelter except the caverns, which were reached by a narrow passage under the enclosure and out into the adjoining fields. Just how the entrance was obtained to the subterranean lookup is told by two escaped prisoners in an interview in the Gazetteer, a Tory paper published in New York. Said they:

THROUGH A TRAP DOOR

down stairs into another upon the same floor with the kitchen, which was divided from it by a very strong partition door. In the corner of this outer room and near the front of the stairs opened another large trap door covered with bars and bolts of iron, which were hoisted up by two guards by means of a tackle, while the hinges grated as they turned upon their hooks and opened the jaws and mouth of what they called hell, to which we descended by means of a ladder, about six feet more, which led to a large iron gate or hatchway, I looked down over a shaft of about three feet diameter, sunk through the solid rock, and which we were told, led to the bottomless pit.

"Finding it not possible to evade this hard, cruel fate, we bade adieu to the world and descended the ladder, about 38 feet more, when we came to what is called the landing; then marching shelf by shelf till descending about 30 or 40 feet more we came to a platform of boards laid under foot with something put overhead to carry off the water, which keeps continually dripping. Here we found the inhabitants of this wretched mansion, who were exceedingly anxious to know what was going on above. We told them that Lord Cornwallis had beat the rebel army, and that their money was gone to the deuce, with which they seemed satisfied and rejoiced at the news."

The present entrance to the caverns, so called, is accomplished more easily and pleasantly. All that is necessary is application at the office and payment of a small fee. The guide leads the visitors to a small shed at the rear of the office building, and requests each member of the party to put on a thick cloth ulster, which is furnished, to keep out the chill and moisture. While the visitors stand around

CLOTHED LIKE GREY FRIARS

the guide steps to a wall hole, through which the top of a ladder protrudes.
Here was the first trapdoor mentioned by the prisoners. He descends the ladder without hesitation, and is hidden in the deep darkness. The visitors follow, as a matter of course, and many women make the exploit without fear or nervousness. (As the visitor descends he is cheered by the guide's voice and reaches a landing about the size of a large closet. He finds the guide busy lighting a tallow dip, with which each visitor proceeds.)

Then with a warning to stoop low, the guide leads the way down a gallery of slippery and steep rock, soon entering a large turtle-backed cavern.
It was here the prisoners said they found their unfortunate comrades.
The cavern is about twenty feet in diameter, and a tall man cannot stand erect in the centre. The floor is strewn with pieces of wood, the remains, the guide says, of the cots filled with straw which the prisoners occupied.
The water dripping in frequent drops from the roof, and every word spoken finds reverberating echoes in the rocky galleries. In this gruesome place the revolutionary prisoners were kept in some instances for years without once seeing the light of day.

The fare of the prison could not have been sumptuous, because a prisoner wrote this pathetic letter to the keeper:

"Mr. Vint—If you have any meat cooked you will much oblige me by sending a dinner for I suffer want."

And that George Washington endorsed this treatment of his foes is shown by a letter written by him to the Committee of Safety at Simsbury when he sent from Cambridge a detachment of prisoners to be kept there at the Continental expense. But the Father of his Country, as well as Congress, came in for a liberal share of criticism when the Rev. Simon Barter, a Tory clergyman and a prisoner, preached a very vehement sermon to a prostrate but sympathetic audience.
How the clergyman must have made the dark recesses of the prison

RESONED WITH HIS BITTER WORDS

when he called on his hearers to passionate the patriots at their first opportunity, and he bade Washington and Congress to remember that Judas was not a patriot till he hanged himself for betraying his Savior. "Go thou and do likewise," he exhorted the general, "and you will prove yourself a real savior of America, and, like him, hold a place in the temple of ver-gaming fame."

Unless the Rev. Simon was a man of low stature, it is difficult to conceive how he could have maintained a dignified position in such a low audience room.

The prisoners kept burning pots of charcoal to dispel the foul air, which was somewhat relieved by shafts or wells in the mines cut through the solid rock to a height of eighty feet or more. The guide explains all these matters to his gray-frocked listeners in a quaint, doleful voice in keeping with the surroundings. He then leads the way through many narrow galleries of the mines, which extend a considerable distance. In many places the sides are bordered by piles of broken rock held in place by wooden supports, which have given away in some places and the rock has blocked completely the passages. It is difficult to pick the way through the mines owing to the low and steep condition of the galleries.

A short distance from the main cavern the visitor comes to a well of water 18 feet deep, but so clear that the bottom is easily seen. The sunlight peeps in at the top of the well hole 50 feet to the surface. The well used to be a rope and bucket in the well, the top of which was secured by a trap door to prevent any prisoner escaping. However, one prisoner

DID MAKE THE ATTEMPT

one night, having bribed the guard to unlock the hatch, but after the prisoner had climbed the rope nearly to the top he was struck on the head by the descending bucket, and his body was found the next day at the bottom of the well.

Most gruesome of all is a dungeon known as the "Sounding Room." It is deep within the mines and was used for the solitary confinement of the prisoners. Here the echoes are remarkably intense, and even a whisper is repeated, while a groan will resound as if made by the whole mountain. The refractory prisoner was shackled to the stone wall, his only refreshment being a spring, which is so near he could reach it by stooping over. Near a shaft where the copper ore was raised to the surface is a hole, hardly large enough for a man to crawl through, which was used as a drain.

Yet a Tory named Wooster made his escape by this difficult way. It was closed by iron bars, which Wooster loosened by picking the mortar with his knife. He had brought undetected in the prison. He stayed many nights within the drain, enlarging it by chipping the rocks. One night he was thus at work trying to bore his way out far within the drain, when a large stone fell behind him, making him a prisoner in this tomb. He thought he must die.

A TERRIBLE DEATH OF STAR-VATION

when to his delight, he found he could kick back the rock a little way.
He struggled desperately, fearing at every moment that the stone would reach a place where he could not move

it. Finally he shoved it to a hollow place and was able to crawl by. Torn and bleeding he was able to report to the guard next day and escaped detection. A few days later he, with several others, escaped through the drain, but all were captured except Wooster, who made his way to the sea coast and entered His Majesty's service.

Another desperate attempt to escape was joined in by the men who gave the account of their entrance to the prison. With several others they overpowered the guards, fatally wounding one and took the rest prisoners. They then released their companions, and, although some were wounded in the scuffle, many escaped. A committee of the Council of Assembly investigated their escape, and in its report made very sarcastic comments on the inefficiency of the guards.

"Jacob Southwell was awakened by the tumult," said the report, "took a gun and ran out of the guardhouse, and durst not go back for fear they would hurt him. N.B.—A young man more fit to carry fish to market than to keep guard at Newgate. Nathan Phelps was also asleep, but could do nothing, the prisoners having possession of the guardhouse (a small lad, just fit to drive plough with a very gentle team). He went to Mr. Viet's and stayed till morning (poor buy)."
The blackhouse was burned three times while the English prisoners were kept in the mines.

Bright green and dark steel grey colors will be noticed in the rock. This is the copper which at one time

GAVE A FABULOUS REPUTATION for richness to the miners. Many attempts have been made to extract the ore, but always have ended in financial failure. The first attempt was made in 1727 by a company formed of the land owners of Sunbury. The company made a contract with three clergymen to smelt the ore but the British restrictions on smelting were too severe to leave any profit. Another attempt was made just before the Revolution, but in 1778 the works for mining purposes were abandoned for many years.

In 1890 the Phoenix Mining Company was formed of New York men, but the company went under during the panic. The last attempt was made in 1855 by the Connecticut Copper Company, which built a sizable plant and for many years carried on the undertaking. While the ore yields 10 per cent., and in some specimens as high as 40 per cent., the difficulty is in extracting the metal.

S. D. Viet, of Springfield, Mass., a great-grandson of the first keeper of the prison, now owns the property, and secures a comfortable revenue from lightkeepers. The caverns were first used as a prison, in 1773 by the Connecticut Assembly, and were formally adopted as a State prison in 1790, when most of the buildings now in ruins were built. There were many thrilling escapes, rebellions and insurrections among the convicts until the prison was abandoned in 1820 for the present State prison at Wethersfield.

What Will You Do?

Your Life is Precious, Save ItPaines's Celery Compound Can Restore You'TIS FOLLY AND MADNESS TO DEFER THE USE OF THE GREAT MEDICINE

"I am tired and weary of this continued life of misery and suffering!"
This is the heart of thousands of poor nervous and sleepless men and women craved with headache, rheumatism, neuritis, dyspepsia, and blood troubles.
Such people usually are filled with gloom and despondency, memory fades and they are often found on the strait path that leads to the dark grave.

Have courage suffering brother and sister! Paine's Celery Compound has cured thousands of cases in the past far more desperate and terrible than yours. It has proved an agent of life to others, and it will certainly do as much for you in this your time of adversity and distress.

What will your decision be? Suffer?
Will you allow the many symptoms of disease and death to more fully develop, or will you, by the aid of nature's medicine, Paine's Celery Compound strike just now at the root of your trouble and be made sound, healthy, and happy?

The ablest physicians admit that the Paine's Celery Compound is the only true nerve food and medicine that has ever been given to suffering humanity. It strengthens and builds up the nerves, tissues and muscles, it purifies the life stream, casts out disease of every form, giving a fresh existence and a long and happy life. A trial of one bottle will convince you that Paine's Celery Compound is a life-saver and a disease banisher.

THE STOMACH'S WOES—Are pleasantly and positively healed by Dr.
Van Stan's Pineapple Tablets. They act upon and digest the food, prevent fermentation and all diseases of the stomach. Eminent physicians have noted their sterling merit and the wonderful cures wrought right in their own practice and prescribe to relieve and cure. 35 cents.

Songs That Sing Themselves
How the music comes from a Graphophone cylinder is a mystery that adds much to the fascination of the instrument. The Graphophone and its cylinders are literally songs that sing themselves. The Graphophone is marvelous as an entertainer. The Graphophone might be described as all musical instruments in one. You can get from it any kind of music you want, vocal or instrumental. It is the perfect talking machine; for entertainment at home it has no rival as its repertoire is unlimited. Furthermore it costs less than a cheap medical instrument. Write for catalogue No. 29,

SPAIN'S DANGER AT HOME

While the peace negotiations with America are in progress Spain is confronted with serious trouble at home the danger of an outbreak by the Car-lists for whom the opportunity now appears ripe. The loss of the colonial possessions means the wiping out of one-half of Spain's export trade, and this in turn means the closing of mills and factories and the throwing out of employment of thousands of workmen.
Already these mills and factories which have hitherto found a market for their goods in the colonies, the Antilles and Philippines, have begun to close, and the employees are turned adrift with nothing but starvation before them. Their numbers are being added to by the returned troops from Cuba, who have no alternative but to fall in with the ranks of unemployed.

The Kidneys

are the seat or the starting point of many maladies, all of them serious, all more or less painful, and all of them tending, unless cured, to a fatal end. No organs of the body are more delicate or more sensitive than the kidneys. When symptoms of disease appear in them not a moment is to be lost if health is to be restored. The best way to treat the kidneys is through the blood, cleansing it from the poisonous matter which is usually at the bottom of kidney complaints. For this purpose there is no remedy equal to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For many years I have been a constant sufferer from kidney trouble, and have tried a number of largely advertised kidney cures without benefit. At last a friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The use of eight bottles of this remedy entirely cured my malady."—MART MILLEN, 1206 Hancock Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Between forty and fifty persons took in the extension to Belmont Lake yesterday under the auspices of the Board of Trade. Had the weather been more favorable there is no doubt but that a large crowd would have taken in the trip.

To Change the Venue

An application was made at Osgoode Hall this morning by Mr. Leighton McCarthy, on behalf of the Crown, for a change in the venue in the Napanee bank robbery case, in which W. P. Weston, Wm. Mackie and Charles Holman are charged with robbing the Dominion Bank of $31,000 in August, 1897. The Crown's application is based upon the contention that public feeling in Napanee is prejudicial in favor of the prisoners, and a fair trial is impossible. The Crown would be satisfied to have the case tried anywhere but in Napanee. An adjournment was made for a week to allow counsel to obtain more material.

Lawn Tennis

A number of the representatives of the Peterboro Club visited Uxbridge today and played in the wet, which prevented first-class tennis. The same club won by five events to one. The score being as follows:

Boscom, Uxbridge, beat Boucher, 6-3, 6-4.
Clark, Uxbridge, beat Parker, 6-0, 6-0.
Willis, Uxbridge, beat Macnee, 8-6, 6-0.
Doubles.
Boscom and Vyryan, Uxbridge, beat Boucher and Lefevre, 6-2, 4-6, 6-4.
Parker and Kerr, Peterboro, beat Clark and Sharpe, 6-6, 6-4, 8-6.

For Good Roads

Mr. A. W. Campbell, the provincial inspector in roadmaking, who has just returned from Berlin, mentions as proof of the rapid strides being made by the good roads movement throughout the province the fact that since the propaganda has been initiated two years ago, the towns of Niagara Falls, St. Catharines, Gen. Berlin, Stratford, Chatham, Owen Sound, Colborne, Brockville, Cornwall, Kemptonville, Ingersoll and Woodstock have undertaken the macadamizing of their streets and roads. Up to the present time towns together have expended the sum of $100,000 in road-making machinery, and at a low estimate, $150,000 in material and labor, which indicates the importance of the movement in the province. At Berlin four streets have been finished and work is being performed upon two others.

The Wife's Ten Commandments
These are the new commandments ten, which wives now make to married men.
1—Remember, that I am your wife.
2—Thou shalt cherish all thy life.
3—Thou shalt not stay out late at night.
4—When lodges, friends or clubs invite.
5—Thou shalt not smoke indoor or out.
6—Thou shalt not "round about."
7—Thou shalt with praise receive my gifts.
8—Nor pouty make by me despise.
9—My mother thou shalt strive to please.
10—And let her live with us in ease.
Remember, 'tis thy duty clear
To dress me well throughout the year.
Thou shalt in manner mild and meek
Give me thy wages every week.
Thou shalt not be a drinking man.
But live on prohibition plan.
Thou shalt not flirt, but must allow Thy wife shall freedom, anyhow.
Thou shalt get up when I am clear
And try the child to tranquility.
Thou shalt commandments, from day to day
Explicitly thou shalt obey.
The best medicine you can take is that which builds a solid foundation for health in pure, rich blood—Hood's Sarsaparilla.

PLEBISCITE CAMPAIGN

The Prohibition Party Have Got Down to Work—Meetings to be Held

Although the prohibition campaign has been going along rather quietly, the Peterborough County Plebiscite Association is actively engaged in arranging meetings, etc., and from this out the fight in the cause of temperance will no doubt be of a vigorous kind.

The Association has opened a committee room at 430 Water street, which is in charge of Mr. Prally, who is kept busy arranging the many matters that are essential to a successful campaign. The Association claims to have no knowledge of the persons who called the meeting for last night, and deny any responsibility in the matter. They were asked to supply speakers for the night, but the parties who advertised the meeting would not give their names to the Association, and as there were no responsible names on the posters, the temperance association did not feel themselves bound to supply the talent.

The following meetings have been arranged for throughout the county: Sunday night, 28th, meetings at Westwood, to be addressed by Rev. G. E. Moore; Salem church, Otonabee, speaker Rev. S. J. Shore; North Monaghan, town hall, to be addressed by prominent speakers from town. Tuesday night, in Union Hall, Mother's Corner. This meeting will be addressed by Rev. C. D. Elliott, as well as speakers from Kettle.

Wednesday night a grand rally will be held in the George street Methodist church, when Mr. Joseph Gibson, of Ingersoll, the celebrated temperance lecturer will speak. His subject will be "objections against the plebiscite answered."

Although "discussion invited" was omitted from the bills advertising this meeting, the speaker will be pleased to allow a reasonable time to any one who may wish to speak against the plebiscite movement. Every person is invited to the meetings.

Y. M. C. A. OPENING

Classes for the Season Formed and a Successful Season Promised

Thursday evening was the formal opening of the work of the Y. M. C. A. for the season of 1898-99. Commencing next Monday the gymnasium classes will be resumed. The following week the evening school will open, and during the week beginning Oct. 10th the Bible classes will be set in running order. Unfavorable weather affected the attendance at the reception last evening to the young men of the town, though a goodly number attended and enjoyed a special social evening.

An excellent musical programme, which lasted through the entire evening, was given in the parlors. Those who took part were Messrs. A. G. Smith and E. Slope, who furnished piano solos; Mr. Pidgeon with the mandolin; Mr. E. Hall, whistler; and Mr. James Browne sang several numbers in a pleasing manner.

After fruit had been served a basketball game took place in the gymnasium between the "Whites" and "Blacks." The teams were composed as follows:—Blacks—S. Hall, R. Irwin, H. Morgan, C. Matthias, and W. Maguire. Whites—J. Sheridan, J. Cox, T. Glover, H. Goidley, and M. McDonald.

The program of the gymnasium classes, as they begin next week, is as follows:—Young Men's Senior Class—Tuesdays and Fridays, at 8 o'clock.

Business Men—Mondays and Fridays at 8 o'clock, and Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

Intermediate (boys employed during the day, from 14 to 17 years of age). Thursdays and Saturdays at 8 o'clock. Collegiate Boys—Wednesdays, 4 to 5:15 p.m.; Saturdays, 10:40 to 11:20 a.m.

Boys—Tuesdays 4:15 to 5:15 p.m.; Saturdays 9:30 to 10:20 a.m. Members are urged to be present at the opening of the classes.

The prospectus will be out to-morrow. Every young man should secure one and read it.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

I trust other sufferers may follow my example with as satisfactory results." Mrs. Bates, 71 Gloucester street, Toronto. Sold by H. S. McDonald.

NORTH HASTINGS IRON MINES

A Visit to the Coe Hill District—Signs of Art Truly Once More Apparent

The following is taken from the Belleville Intelligencer.
On Sunday the visitors drove to Ormby. A visit was paid to a claim near there, reputed to be valuable. The only mineral visible was pyrrhotite.

In the evening sitting on the veranda of Mr. Standick's very comfortable little hotel, the visitors chatted about the present and future of North Hastings with Mr. C. S. Saunders, local manager of the Anglo-American Iron Co. A few facts about Mr. Saunders' company may be interesting. Their headquarters are in Cleveland and their business in one of the most extensive in America. They own great mineral properties in different parts of the States, are largely interested in Saultury nickel, have just purchased great iron properties in Cuba, besides owning the C.O.R. and 80,000 acres of mining and timber lands in Hastings and Peterboro counties. Up to the present they have done very little in mining, but they have shipped immense quantities of timber, and have paid out immense sums of money to the settlers for pulp wood and ties. On their lands is a great quantity of miscellaneous schist, containing a large proportion of garnets, and Mr. Saunders believes this latter to be having some of more commercial value than trundium.

Asked as to the reason which had prevented the development of our North country he said that one great reason was that the country had been afflicted by a number of curl stone breakers who were only object was to dispossess of property at a profit. By means of persistent puffing and paid essays, they usually succeeded in selling properties at such prices that to work them at a profit was an impossibility. Newspapers had assisted these men by sending reporters all through these districts, whose only object was to fill columns with matter which would tickle the imaginations of their readers, and who were willing to listen to the stories of every outlandish promoter instead of going to practical mining men for information.

The main difficulty, however, is the want of a proper process, suitable to the minerals found here, for the concentration of the ore, i.e., the separation of refuse from the pure mineral. There was no doubt that there was any quantity of minerals, but no process had yet been demonstrated which would enable his company to place them upon the markets of the world, at a profit to themselves. "We are willing to pay any man as much as $5,000 a year who can come here and demonstrate to us that he can take even the low grade ore and convert it into marketable products, and we would be satisfied with a small percentage on the outlay invested. (We will supply with any reasonable amount of money and hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of tons of ore, if necessary, in connection with the early condition being that he will give securities that he will perform what he undertakes. We have had many offers of men who alleged that they had such a process, but somehow or other they failed. Not long ago we spent $10,000 of our own expenditure of free milling gold quartz and received $100 return and the rest of the money is in the tailings at the mill. On that account we insist on security. At present we are negotiating with a local firm who claim that they have a process by which the ore can be extracted. They claim to have experimented with the tailings of a North Hastings gold mine and to have realized $7 a ton. We should like to see some process for extracting the sulphur from the magnetite. We have in the location for the association a camp next summer. Commodore Thorn has discovered a spot on Seneca Lake, which he thinks will be a good one for the camp, and will describe its advantages to the committee when it meets.

On the way home the visitors fell in with Mr. O. R. Sprague, manager for the Sovereign Mining Co., of Toronto, and also for an American company. The former company are the owners of several promising claims in the vicinity of Malone, which are being developed. He showed some fine samples of free milling gold quartz and sulphur containing gold.

Prof. Barlow, of Toronto, and two students Mr. Stephens, of the Kingston School of Mines, and Mr. Ross, of Toronto, on behalf of the Geological Survey of Canada, are working in Lake Umbagog.

Government Assayer Wells, when asked his opinion of what he had seen on the trip, said that he thought the Mr. Saunders of the Anglo-American Co. was right when he said that the North Hastings area required a change but men of brains, with a technical experience in place them upon the market. Mr. Wells would like to see some experiments on the separation of the sulphur from the magnetite of the Coe Hill iron ore. Such a separation would more than triple the value of the ore, and if Edison can make money out of a rock containing 8 per cent. magnetite, surely some process can be invented for a similar separation in the case of the Coe Hill ore.

Perfectly Cured

Weak and Low Spirited—Nervous Prostration—Appetite Poor and Could Not Rest.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Hood's Sarsaparilla to others. It has been the means of restoring my wife to good health. She was stricken down with an attack of nervous prostration. She suffered with headaches and her nerves were under severe strain. She became very low spirited and so weak she could only do a little work without resting. Her appetite was poor, and being so weak she could not get the proper rest at night. She decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, as we had heard it highly praised, and I am glad to state that Hood's Sarsaparilla has perfectly cured all her ailments." G. —Owing to the very disagreeable weather last night the entertainment that was to have been held under the auspices of St. Andrew's Mission Band, was postponed until some date in the near future.

—Mr. Alfred McDonald's request for additional fire protection has been granted, and a hydrant will be placed at the corner of Perry and Crescent streets. Mr. McDonald thought the present fire protection insufficient for his new mill.

—The Provincial Synod in session at Montreal, passed a resolution warmly congratulating the following members of the Synod who this year celebrate the jubilee of their ordination: Archibald Lewis, Archibald Allen, Millbrook; Archibald, Ikon, Guelph; Canon Worrell, Hamilton, and Canon Ellwood, Montreal.

—A good story is being told at the expense of an angler, who recently spent several weeks in Muskoka. Having enjoyed an unusual measure of success one day, he wired his wife: "I've got one, weighs seven pounds, and is a beauty." In reply came the following, signed by his wife: "So have I, weighs ten pounds, he isn't a beauty—looks like you."

—The annual harvest festival in connection with Christ church, Belleville, will be held on Sunday and Tuesday, September 25th and 27th. Service will be held on Sunday at 3 p.m., conducted by the Rev. H. Burgess, of Belleville, and on Tuesday tea will be served in the basement from 4 to 7 p.m. The choir of St. John's church, Peterboro, will assist in the programme prepared for the occasion.

—A. Connelley and yachtmen high up in the American Canoe Association will visit Buffalo the middle of next month, the occasion being the annual meeting of the Executive Committee of the association, which will be held in that city. About twenty members of the committee will assemble there on October 15th, and their meeting will probably extend over several days. One of the matters of importance to be decided is the location for the association's camp next summer. Commodore Thorn has discovered a spot on Seneca Lake, which he thinks will be a good one for the camp, and will describe its advantages to the committee when it meets.

THEIR VIEWS IN WRITING

International Commissioners
Getting Things in Shape

ARE DELAYED IN TWO WAYS

Throngs of Lobbyists and Plenty of
Social Festivities Hamper Them

The Canadian Coal missionaries and Premier Hardy of Ontario are hardly on speaking terms.

Quebec, Sept. 23.—The social pleasures of the last few days notwithstanding, the American and Canadian delegates, can hardly have the effect of smoothing the way of an international understanding on the questions outlined in the protocol. The deliberations have proceeded thus far that the views of the respective countries have been reduced to writing.

A VARIETY OF VIEWS.

The interest of the industries to be affected so widely differ that it has been found an almost impossible task to reconcile them. A deputation comes on day, lays its representations before the United States or Canadian delegates, and then along comes another entirely opposite in its opinions. Thus the commissioners, far from being assisted, find themselves working on what seems to be in the main a hopeless task.

THE SEALERS CASE.

Capt. Cox, the official agent of the British Columbia sealers, has been in town for several days. He is authorized to sell out their sealers, involving as well any future right to engage in pelagic sealing in Behring Sea. His demand for $750,000 from the United States is regarded as moderate.

The United States Commissioners seemed disposed to settle the question on a satisfactory basis.

AN ALASKA LOBBY.

By an amusing coincidence the strong lobby maintained here by the Alaska Commercial Co. is actively but indirectly cooperating with the Canadian Senator Mark Hanna, and other plutocrats who enjoy the friendship of President McKinley, are interested in the Alaska Co.

It is well understood that if the Canadian competition is disposed of by the acquisition from the Russian Co. of the rights to seal exclusively in the waters of the Behring sea, adjacent to Siberia.

THE BONDING QUESTION.

When Mr. Clarke, of Boston, had got through with his presentation of the New England view on the railway bonding question yesterday, he was congratulated by Hon. Mr. Cook of the United States Commission. The idea of the revivification of Maine and Massachusetts are in accord with those of Canadian railways.

Congressman Tawney, of Minnesota, had an hour's conference this morning with Senator Fairbanks. He is the official spokesman of the Western American lumbermen. He is renewing his efforts to prevent any arrangement which would enable the Canadian lumbermen to ship their produce to the United States at a reduced rate of duty.

MR WALLACE'S STATEMENT.

Hon. N. Clarke Wallace, representing the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, today submitted in its behalf a statement in writing. In it he emphasized the necessity of the continuance of the National Policy, inaugurated by the Conservative party.

IS MR. FIELDING SORRY?

Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, who has quarrelled with his colleagues on account of his omission from membership in the commission, had sent a lobbyist here to insist on the abolition of the duty on United States soft coal, in exchange for a mutual privilege, enabling for Nova Scotia miners to ship to the New England market.

The Ohio coal operators are willing to grant free coal for New England in return for the abolition of the Canadian duty of 60 cents on the United States soft coal. They realize that they would have a monopoly in the richest portion of Ontario, as Canadian coal cannot be delivered at a profit west of Toronto. The amount of coal used by Canadian railways in Western Ontario also figures in their calculations. The views of the United States coal operators were presented yesterday to Senator Fairbanks.

ONTARIO'S PART.

The Canadian coal missionaries and Premier Hardy of Ontario are scarcely on speaking terms. The former insist that the Ontario Government abolish the legislation providing that all logs cut in Ontario shall be manufactured in that province. Mr. Hardy declines to yield, and it is alleged, is threatened with the dissolution of his pet statute by the Dominion Government.

THE CANAL TOLLS.

A big United States delegation from Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago and Duluth will be here next week to urge the abolition of Canadian canal tolls. The compensation offered for such a privilege of canals that have cost the Canadian people so many millions has not been mentioned, but the Canadian commissioners are disposed to favorably consider the matter, if the United States grants reciprocity in coasting and working privileges on inland waters.

HOW TO WIN WOMEN

A Recipe Given by a Man Who Ought to Know

New York, Sept. 23.—All you have to do to win a woman is to tell her she is beautiful, then tell her you love her, and she'll give you her hand right away. —Bigamist Heckling's recipe for winning a wife.

Mr. Heckling owns up to eighty love affairs, with marriages as a result of a majority of them. He was arrested Wednesday in Newark and locked up at Police headquarters, awaiting requisition from New York on charges of bigamy and obtaining money under false pretences.

"Oh, yes," he laughed, when Detective Sergeant Christie took him in charge, "I'm a married man."

"How many wives have you got?" asked the detective.

"About eighty or thereabouts," replied the prisoner. "At least I made love to that many. Say, see that trolley car? Well, there wouldn't be room for the conductor and motorman if all my wives were aboard."

Heckling has been in matrimonial trouble many times before. He is locked up owing to charges made by Miss Agnes Heiman of 251 East Seventy eighth street. She made affidavit before Magistrate Mott that on Sept. 9 the gay Luthario married her and disappeared next day with the $500 she had drawn from her savings bank to add to her new husband's capital. So a warrant was issued and the quarry was trailed up yesterday.

"That's hell," exclaimed Miss Heiman when she saw portrait 109 in the Newark Regue's Gallery.

And the police knew it all. Heckling was at it again, though he had "done time" often before for the same offense—making love to women and then off with their hard won savings, even if he had to marry them to get it.

Carl Heckling is 66 years old. He is fat. He dresses exquisitely. He wears satin-lined overcoats and red cavats. He likes only Ylang-Ylang perfume and silk handkerchiefs. You would never guess he was a day over 45.

Heckling has a wife, a respectable woman who earns her living in Newark as a dressmaker.

"I only marry 'em," he explained, "when I can't get their money any other way."

Heckling usually met his finances in the same way—by the insertion of an advertisement. He had a small place at No. 98 Academy-street, where he used to take his various victims. There he'd explain that he only needed a little money to embark in a prosperous business, and after getting it he'd promptly disappear.

TIPS IN THE YUKON

Charge That the Postal Clerks Take Tips for Favoritism

Ottawa, Sept. 23.—Mr. Charles Macgee, president of the Ottawa bank, has returned from a visit to the Pacific coast. He visited Seattle and other points and talked there about the Yukon.

"The boom seems to have burst and the great rush is now up get home again," he said, as there are over 20,000 men about Dawson City who cannot get either work or claims. I crossed from Victoria to Seattle with over 500 who had arrived the night before from St. Michael's, and madder and more disappointed-looking lot of men you never saw. Several were carried on board, being too ill to walk. They all seemed to be pleased to get back to civilization again.

"I talked with many of the men about the complaints against the Canadian Government officials in Dawson, and if one-half they said is true, favoritism and official corruption are running riot there, and Canada is being disgraced in the eyes of men from all parts of the world.

"The chief complaints are made against the gold commissioners' office and the postoffice. The officials of the latter get as much as a dollar a letter delivered to the owners from the side door or brought to them.

"Judge McGuire was highly spoken of as an honest, straightforward man, but all the others either took bribes or tips, as some of these men called it, or winked at it being done by those under them.

"Some allowance, of course, should be made on account of the majority of these returning having failed in getting gold, but there must be some truth in the reports, and the Government should institute a searching investigation."

BILIOUS-NESS

Poses many a body and bur-

the food you like because you are bilious. You take all sorts of pre-leaps on you like a tiger from ambush.

You know the feeling! The blood seeming on fire with a dull heat; the boring pains in the eyes; the head seeming to open and shut; the horrible nausea. You know the irritability which precedes the attack. It's miserable, isn't it? Why not cure the biliousness. Dr. J.C. AYER'S PILLS are an acknowledged specific for this derangement.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Work on the Canal.
The continuance of fine weather of late has somewhat retarded the work on the canal. The excavation for the big lift-lock, near Armour's hill, is being made rather slowly owing to the fact that the rain makes it difficult to work in the clay at this point.

Patrick Lavery in Trouble.
Patrick Lavery, who was in a rather hazy condition on Saturday afternoon, was up against Officer Stewart at the corner of George and Simcoe streets.
He gave the officer no little trouble when being brought to the police station, but is now safely behind the iron bars.

A Small Fire.
The brigade was called out at 11:30 o'clock Saturday night to attend a small fire on Ayler street, between Simcoe and Hunter streets. A small burned by some unknown means taken fire, but the flames were quickly extinguished. The property is owned

Have Shipped Out.
The two thieves who a few days ago broke into Leach's liquor store, Mil-brook, have left the country. It will be remembered that out of respect to the relatives of the two Mr. Leach did not intend prosecuting them. The number of petty thefts around the village being so numerous, however, certain of the merchants of the place reported the matter to the County Crown's Attorney, Mr. John Kerr, of Oshawa. Warrants were immediately issued for their arrest, but before the same could be put into execution the birds had flown. One of them is a blacksmith, who possessed a good business, and has a wife and family in Milbrook. The other is a young man about twenty years of age, and was of a very respectable family.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Happenings in the Town and District During the Past Twenty-Four Hours

—Tuesday evening has been fixed as the date for the postponed entertainment under the auspices of the St.
Andrew's Mission Bank.

—The stage business between Colborne and Warkworth has again changed hands. Mr. Burton is the new proprietor, having bought the business from Mr. John diarmid.

—The P. O. Inspector has been infringing the postal law by enclosing correspondence in a newspaper sent through the post.

—Madoc has purchased at the cost of three thousand, three hundred dollars a new fire engine. It arrived on the 7th inst., and was tested. Using cold water they had three streams playing in seven minutes and these at a height of more than seventy feet.

—Mr. Wm. Mitchell, of Warkworth, the Journal says, made ten trips to the back country for berries during the season, and one of these was a very long journey to Deer River flats, in the township of Lake, about 60 miles northwest of Warkworth. At these places he found blackberries in great abundance, and sold them readily at Norwood, Hastings, Havelock and Warkworth.

—On a certain night last week some parties very kindly helped themselves to a bite of beer and honey belonging to Mr. Chas. Easton, Havelock. The liver contains some thirty pounds of honey. Mr. Easton states that he has obtained a clue to the obliging party, in the shape of a bunch of cotton threads which they fortunately dropped near the spot, and thinks that the wisest course for the erring one is to exit and sweeten up.

DON'T WANT FREE LOGS

The Orillia Board of Trade Vigorously Protests

At the last regular meeting of the Orillia Board of Trade, it was decided to send the following resolution to Sir Wilfred Laurier.

"This Board of Trade, in council assembled, desires to enter their earnest protest against any interference either on the part of the Dominion Government or the Ontario Legislature with that legislation believing that any such interference would result in waste of our chief natural asset, and in much injury to the trade and commerce of this country in general, and taking into account the reduced supplies of pine lumber, both in the United States and Canada, free lumber would be no fair equivalent for free logs; and that free logs should only be considered in exchange for reciprocity in lumber, agricultural and mineral products, and that they should not be separated. Failing which we would further recommend the Dominion Government to impose an import duty upon all American lumber imported into Canada, equivalent to the duty imposed by the Government of the United States upon Canadian lumber entering the United States, as well as to make regulations governing the importation of logs from that country into Canada."

Change of Business.
Messrs. Green Bros. have brought out the grocery business recently owned by Mr. R. S. Richardson, corner of Charlotte and Downie streets.

Messrs. Green Bros. have put in an additional stock of fresh goods and will be pleased to have Mr. Richardson's old customers call on them, where their wants will be carefully looked after.

The New Punishment.
The rawhide cure is receiving considerable patronage at the police court these days, and it proves to be not only cheap but effective. Saturday afternoon a dose was administered to young Cooper as a penalty for breaking into Meldrum's warehouse a few days ago. The punishment was administered with the town rawhide by the big's father.

Another young urchin who was brought to the police station by his mother, awake the stillness of the afternoon by his repentant cries as a good thrashing was harshly given to him.

If the rawhide has the desired effect at the police court, why could it not have the same effect if applied at home?

Bar Dress Caught Fire

On Thursday, 9th inst., Mr. and Mrs.
Jno. Spinks, who reside at Blenheim station, left home to do some shopping in town, leaving the house in charge of their 15-year old daughter and Maggie, 4 years old. While the eldest daughter was putting out some of the little lot endeavored to put a stick in the stove, and while doing so her dress caught fire, and in an instant she was enveloped in flames.
Her cries had scarcely quickly brought her sister to the spot, who with great presence of mind seized a bucket of water and quenched the flames but not until the little girl was very severely burned. The sufferer is now in charge of the trained nurse, Miss Denne, of Peterboro' and is doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances.—Havelock Standard.

Wedded in Hastings

On Wednesday evening, in the brilliantly illuminated residence of Mr.
Wm. McCracken, Alowick, the joyful wedding of music, the gaiety and bustle which prevailed led to the supposition that an event of great importance was taking place, which upon enquiry proved to be the case, the occasion being the celebration of the nuptials of Miss Louise, the youngest daughter of the house, to Mr. Jas. Colquhoun, of Havelock.

The ceremony was performed at Haglings by the Rev. R. J. Weaver. The bride was assisted by her sister, Elizabeth, while the groom was assisted by Mr. Wm. Beatty, of C.O. Junction.

After the ceremony the contracting parties returned to the residence of the bride's parents, where a magnificent wedding dinner was partaken of, and the celebration of the event kept up until the wee wee hours of the morning. The happy couple drove to Havelock the following morning, where they will reside in future.

AMATEUR SPORT

Important Meeting of the Executive of the Amateur Athletic Association

The Executive of the Amateur Athletic Association of Canada had a meeting in Montreal on Friday when a number of applications for reinstatement were received, including the applications of Barney Quinn, Eddie Gleason, J. Powers, and W. G. Ayer. It was decided to leave the applications to be dealt with by the new Executive.

The application of the Osgoode Hall Athletic Association for admission to the association was rejected, as the club had not made a proper application. The application of the Capital Amateur Athletic Association was also rejected after some discussion.

Secretary Higginbotham of Toronto made a fierce attack on the Capitals and declared that they should be left out until they showed their readiness to follow the rules of amateur sport.
On Mr. Higginbotham's motion the application was rejected.

An application for membership from the Amateur Hockey Association of Canada was unanimously granted.
In answer to an inquiry from the Ontario Rugby Football Union, it was agreed that if an official received any remuneration for his services it would constitute a breach of the amateur rules and make the recipient a professional.

At the afternoon meeting it was agreed to change the name of the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union, and also change the day of meeting.

The proposal to hold a registration of all athletes was approved.
The application of Thomas Humphrey of Toronto for a reinstatement was rejected.

"Penny Wise and Pound Foolish"

To the Editor of The Times.
Sir—In the extension of the new grandiose sidewalk southwards from King street to George street, I notice that the walk is made narrower where-ever there are no shops or other buildings abutting the street, in order, I suppose, to save a few dollars. It is a pity that our Council should be "penny wise and pound foolish" for it will only be a few years before new buildings will be erected all the way along to the C. P. R. depot, when it will be necessary to add a new piece of walk to the present one, thereby making it more expensive than if done in the first instance, besides giving the appearance of unsightly patchwork; and if the wider portions are necessary for the accommodation of pedestrians, as I take it, then there should be a uniform width all along the line between these buildings, for the accommodation can only be secured by the narrowest pass. Now that the harm is done and past remedy, let those in authority see to it that it does not occur again, and more especially on Charlotte street, where the work is now in progress.
I would also like to call their attention to another absurd idea upon which they are bent apparently. It appears that the skating rink is a bit or two on the street, and instead of extending the walk regardless of that fact, having a due regard to the proper limits of the street only they are actually widening the walk a foot or two before reaching the rink, in order that they may have the prescribed width in front of the rink, thereby encroaching upon the sidewalk of the street, traversed by vehicles and the heaviest cars, which is already too narrow for such purposes, and adding to the expense of construction. Besides, it necessitates the cutting down of the beautiful trees in front of the Snowden House and Mr.
Hill's block, as well as those further westward, to the great detriment of the street and private property. I am glad they see the necessity of building a similar walk on the south side of Charlotte street, and thereby have two walks to the C. P. R. station in order to accommodate the traffic therefrom.
For the same reason let there be another walk on the east side of George street leading to the C. P. R. station, regardless of the interests of one person, and for the convenience of all others. Treat both railways alike.
Yours, etc.,
EQUITY.

The Wm. Hamilton Co's Loss

To the Editor of The Times.
Sir—By the town papers I notice that the Council in their wisdom have decided to submit to the ratepayers on the 18th prox., a by-law loaning the Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Co. the sum of $30,000. Now, notwithstanding the fact that this company is looked upon as one of our solid manufacturing companies and one which gives employment to a large number of men, I am glad that the whole matter is one which should receive the serious consideration of every ratepayer before arriving at a decision either pro or con. The question should be viewed from a purely business standpoint—a principle which I haven't the right-est doubt over, and has always governed the operations of the Hamilton Co. and to which may be attributed a great measure their phenomenal success. The business of the town should be conducted on the same principles as those governing the operations of private business concerns. This latter hypothesis being correct, I would like to submit a few pertinent questions to the people who are requested to make this loan.

1. Would any rational ratepayer with personal assets of $100,000 and liabilities amounting to considerably over twice this amount ($250,000) for a moment entertain a proposition to loan $30,000? Again, if by any possible stretch of imagination we can picture such an individual, would he accept as security for such a loan a $40,000 structure that would in the event of his being compelled to realize on it, not be worth more than the material used in its construction? Another question and I am through: What right—if the loan is to be made—has the town to pay the cost of the special legislation necessary and also the expenses in connection with submitting the by-law?
These items alone will amount to between $800 and $1,000.

On these grounds alone, the by-law should be opposed, but there are other important considerations in this connection which I will refer to in a later letter.
Yours truly,
PROPERTY HOLDER.

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 27, 1898

A PLEBISCITE PROBLEM.

One of the side issues raised by the Plebiscite is the problem suggested by the old saying, "Silence gives consent." The electorate are called upon to vote "Yes" or "No" to the question whether they approve of legislation being enacted by which the manufacture, importation and sale of alcoholic beverages would be prohibited. The "Yes" voters will doubtless turn out in force as the Plebiscite has been arranged at their request, to use a common phrase, it is their show or funeral, not that of those who object to prohibition, or of those who are indifferent.

Those who do not pull their vote certainly cannot be reckoned as having shown approval of the legislation in question. Will it be fair to count them on the other side? It seems reasonable to conclude that silence in this case does not give consent to the prohibitive proposal, for there are two issues presented for a verdict to be given upon. When a man is given an opportunity to vote "Yes" in order to express his desire, to secure a certain thing, and he declines to express such a desire, it seems reasonable to conclude that he does not desire the thing in question. The "Yes" vote implies a wish for a change. Such a change being made is indeed contingent upon the extent of the vote in its favour. Those who abstain from voting will thus not show wish for the change proposed. Their attitude as non-voters may be described as that of persons who prefer to leave matters alone, which necessarily and logically means that they do not desire any new legislation of a prohibitive character. Those who abstain from voting must therefore be counted as having voted "No."

So far as the cases of the prohibitionists goes this puts it in serious jeopardy, because the result of the Plebiscite will not depend upon the "Yes" vote exceeding in numbers the "No" vote, but upon the respective proportion of each vote to the number of possible voters. For instance, suppose the total possible voters number say 500,000, and the "Yes" voters number 200,000 and "No" voters only 100,000, the vote for prohibition if decided by a mere majority of the votes cast pro and con would be very decisive in favour of that policy. But, such an aggregate vote being only a verdict of three-fifths of the jury and the affirmative section being only that of two-fifths, the result of the plebiscite would be a nullity. This view of the possible result of the plebiscite was expressed a few days ago by Mr. George Casey, M. P., who is and for many years has been one of the prominent and most able members of the Liberal party and an ardent prohibitionist. He said: "If the poll is small and does not truly show the will of the majority of the people, its results will be inconclusive, misleading and disastrous."

Most persons are under the impression that the question will be decided in the same way as that of an ordinary election contest. In such affairs, the voters may number 10,000, but if candidate A. gets only 2 votes and candidate B. only 1 vote, the former is elected, although 9,997 voters out of 10,000 were absent from the polls. The Plebiscite is a wholly different matter, as it is morally and reasonably certain that unless those who desire prohibition secure a decided majority of the total possible vote, the verdict on the 27th inst. will have no result beyond, to some extent, satisfying curiosity. We regard this as an undesirable outcome of the Plebiscite, because in this matter, as in all public elections, we regard it as better to have the judgment of the constituency expressed by the great bulk of the electors rather than by a section.

That Chicago man who says his artificial egg invention will dispense with the chickens is very likely counting before they are hatched.

The formation of a plug tobacco combine simply goes to show that these trusts and monopolies are gradually biting off more than they chew.

The Toronto World continues its crusade for the reduction of sleeping car charges. While the Anglican Synod alleges that the birth rate in Ontario is too low, the World asserts that the birth rate is too high.

Referring to the plebiscite, Mr. Geoffrion, in a speech at a late Montreal banquet, said that the Liberal party had, in a moment of weakness, placed the plebiscite clause in its Ottawa programme, but in doing this they had not pronounced in favour of prohibition. Mr. Geoffrion said, in fact, that he considered prohibition the most illiberal measure that could ever be submitted to Parliament.

Admiral Cervera is treating the Spanish Minister of Marine with a haughty coolness. When Senor Anson met him at the depot in Madrid he saluted stiffly "I am at the orders of Your Excellency," he said, "and shall present myself to the Ministry to-day, as is my duty." Then he drove off, refusing Senor Anson's carriage. In an interview afterwards he said that Spain had been living in a dream and had been weakened to reality. His warships had not been destroyed in battle, but by fire. The next announcement will most likely be that he is going to prosecute the U. S. gunners for arson.

Paine's Celery Compound

Renews the Life Of a Government Official

After the failures of physicians the great medicine does a marvellous work for Capt. A. A. Mooney, of Mansonville, Que.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO.
Gentlemen,—For the last twelve months I have been suffering with poor health. Meeting with serious financial loss, I began to feel nervous and exhausted, and my mind was so confused that I found it difficult to perform my routine duties in the Customs service. I was obliged to stop work, and was granted a three months' leave of absence by the government. I consulted some of the best physicians in the country but they did not agree about what ailed me, and I felt but little relief. At last I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound with the request that I take it. I am now taking the sixth bottle and am doing my work regularly. I gained several pounds in weight, my appetite has improved, and I am able to perform as difficult mental work as at any time in my life. I am confident that Paine's Celery Compound has been of great benefit to me.

TRANSPORTATION PROBLEMS.
Professor Robertson in his report to the Minister of Agriculture, dealing with transportation problems, says:—The difficulties in shipping perishable food products to Great Britain, have been the long distance deterioration in transit and the cost of freight have been reasonable. The freight charges from points in Canada to Great Britain on fine food products, are a very small proportion of their value to the farmers here. As a rule the actual freight charges on cheese shipped from Ontario and Quebec, between the shipping station nearest to the factory, and the ports of London, Bristol, Liverpool or Glasgow, do not exceed five or six per cent. of the value of the cheese as sold at the factory. The average freight charges on creamery butter, with cold storage, do not exceed four per cent. of the value of the product. These figures refer to transportation charges only, and not to any charges for insurance or commission in selling. The cost of transportation for farm products is one of the very important questions affecting the profits of the farmers. An improvement in

AND FURTHER, that on the Fourth day of October, next, at Sheriff's Office, Peterborough, at the hour of Eleven o'clock a.m. I shall open the ballot boxes, sum up the votes given both in the affirmative and in the negative on the question and make my return accordingly in obedience to said Will. Of which all persons concerned are hereby required to take notice and to govern themselves accordingly.

Given under my hand at Peterborough, this Twenty-ninth day of August, in the year 1898.

J. A. HALL,
Returning Officer.

IS IT PREJUDICE?
Marriage is Happiness, It is Claimed, is the Wife No Godless.
Every one has his own idea as to what will constitute a happy marriage, but there is one point on which nearly all agree—the wife must not be older than the husband.

People who look complacently on the spectacle of a girl of 16 or 18 marrying a man twice her age are ready to declare it a violation of the marriage after the bride is a few years older than the bridegroom. It would be a curious study in sociology to trace this prejudice to its source. A prejudice is undoubtedly in the mind of the hapless marriage known to the world have been those in which the wife was the older of the two.
Every one who knows his Rowell knows the extraordinary devotion of Johnson to the lady widow whose manners were amiable and who was nearly twice his age. The happy marriage known to the world have been those in which the wife was the older of the two.
Every one who knows his Rowell knows the extraordinary devotion of Johnson to the lady widow whose manners were amiable and who was nearly twice his age. The happy marriage known to the world have been those in which the wife was the older of the two.

The marriage of Margaret Fuller and the Count d'Ossoli was a brilliant event in the history of the world. Margaret was seven years older than her husband and refused him several times on this ground, but his devotion and persistence overcame her reluctance, and the result of the marriage fulfilled her dream of such happiness. It is said that all who saw them together were struck by the loving fondness and exquisite delicacy of D'Ossoli's manner toward the plain New England woman, seven years his senior, whose only attraction apparently was her great intellect. Mrs. D'Ossoli says of him: "No woman was too trivial, no man too great. When she was ill, he attended her and watched over her with the tenderness of a woman. Such love, such love I have never seen. It made me feel that I was a woman, and gave me an expression of peace and security which before was a stranger to me."

D'Ossoli's wife was his cousin, yet the marriage was a notably happy one.—Paris Herald Tribune.

LUMBERMEN WORKING

Hard so as Not to Have the Duty Lowered

ADVISE NO CONCESSIONS

Americans Rushing in Telegrams to Commissioners Not to Yield

A Lengthy Memorial From Southern Lumbermen Reaching Forth Their Position and Strong Views

Quebec, Sept. 24.—Strenuous opposition is being developed by the American representatives and deputations here to any concession by the commissioners to Canadian lumbermen. Senator Fairbanks, of the American commission, is being deluged with telegrams from all parts of the United States. Over 300 telegrams have been received by him in the last two or three days. The Pacific coast lumbermen are just as strong in opposition as the Michigan men.

OPINIONS OF SOUTHERNERS

A memorial from Southern lumbermen comes as follows:

"That we ask no special privilege legislation or protection not granted to other manufacturing interests, and that no recommendation be made by your honorable body, i. e., the American commissioners, looking to a reduction of the present rate of duty on lumber, which is no less than 18 per cent. ad valorem, but of necessity reduce many highly protected articles, such as cotton and woollen goods, iron, steel, machinery, etc., which bear duties ranging from 40 per cent. to 60 per cent. That we are in full accord with the Government in the endeavor to establish closer commercial relations with our northern neighbors, and while responding most heartily to a happy growing sentiment of closer alliance and good will because of the sympathetic attitude of our Mother Country—our best customer—and her colonies during the war so happily ended, we must respectfully and emphatically protest against bearing more than our just share of the sacrifice necessary to bring about the desired end.

WANT NO FAVORITISM

"We fully appreciate that the President has authority under the reciprocal clause in the Dingley bill to rebate not exceeding 40 cents per 1,000 feet, and that no tariff legislation can be passed without the action of both Houses of Congress, yet we fully understand the weight which would attach to any recommendation made by your honorable committee. We therefore earnestly pray that our interests be not ruthlessly sacrificed for the sake of a passing sentiment or interest of a favored few individuals."

The marine interests of Canada have communicated with the British commissioners asking that in case a proposal is made by the American commissioners to free our canals to American vessels, that, in return therefor, Canadian vessels shall be admitted to the coasting trade of the States.

LORD DUFFERIN NOT BOUGHT

London, Sept. 24.—The subject of noblemen lending their names to city companies has been reviewed by a speech which the Marquis of Dufferin made on Wednesday last, when he presided at a shareholders' meeting of the London and Globe Company which among other enterprises, comprises the British-American corporation of British Columbia, and which achieved unpleasant notoriety by sending a large cheque to the financial editor of the Pall Mall Gazette. The Marquis said that in view of certain incidents which had recently occurred he wished to give the assurance that neither he nor his co-directors had ever received any consideration joining the directorate, beyond that which was provided for in the articles by the officials of the association.

The Marquis of Dufferin's speech is much criticized, and there is considerable lamentation over the fact that men in his position should lend historic names to companies.

More light has been thrown upon the titled "guinea pig" in the "Pall Mall" article, in which a list is given of peers who have been directors of unsuccessful companies. It includes 75 peers, 190 companies and a capital of £84,000,000, on £24,213,414 of which no dividends have ever been paid. Many of the peers are directors in several companies. The list is headed by Lord Donoughmore, with fourteen companies and includes the Earl of Essex and Lord Arthur Butler.

TO ARM FILIPINOS

San Francisco, Sept. 24.—The Post today publishes a sensational story to the effect that Germany is planning to send numerous trading vessels to the Philippine Islands and will run 150,000 Filipinos besides furnishing Krupp guns and artillery for field use. The islanders, the Post alleges, will be thoroughly drilled by German officers, and by February Aguinaldo will be prepared to make an onslaught on the American forces.

According to The Post, German agents have made a report to their Government that it will be impossible for the United States to land more than 50,000 men in the Philippines before Aguinaldo is ready to make his coup. According to the German correspondent, from whom the Post story comes, America's only hope of avoiding trouble with Aguinaldo is to disarm the insurgents.

PRINCE FRENCH SOLDIERS.
London, Sept. 24.—General Bates, the United States military attaché here, has returned to London, after following the French army maneuvers. He said in an interview: "I am profoundly impressed by all I saw. The French officers showed more interest in their profession than any officers I have met elsewhere. The men were perfectly trained and hardy; but, as with all other European soldiers I have met, they lacked the intelligence and smartness of the American regulars."

"I was much struck with the perfect condition of the troops and the efficiency of the commissariat arrangements and general organization. I have never seen such close attention paid to the smallest details."

In conclusion, General Bates remarked: "The European generals have now seen the problems of the organization and management of armies, and it would seem unwise for the United States, in any contemplated military reorganization, not to take advantage of European experience in reorganizing our army. It is not so necessary for the United States to invent as it is for us to copy and adopt what is best in the armies of Europe."

COMMITTED SUICIDE

Berlin, Sept. 24.—A dispatch from German East Africa states that the Wahhe rising has come to an end in consequence of the death of the Sultan of Quana. When the chief's hiding place was divulged by the natives a detachment of troops was sent to capture him. The Sultan was so hotly pursued that, to avoid capture, he shot his last adherents and himself just as the troops came up.

KILLED ON HIS YACHT

San Francisco, Sept. 24.—Capt. Brooks of the yacht Chiapa, which was anchored in the bay off Sausalito, was murdered early this morning by two bay pirates. They boarded the little vessel, bristling with revolvers, and without warning, they plundered the lockers and were about to pull ashore in a small boat when Capt. Brooks and a companion, who had been asleep in the cabin, were aroused and made their appearance on deck. A desperate fight ensued, during which Capt. Brooks was killed, and the other man, whose name was not learned, was wounded. The murderers then made their escape.

PEACE COMMISSIONERS

Liverpool, Sept. 24.—The United States Peace Commissioners landed here early this morning from the Cunard Line steamer Campania, which reached her landing stage before daylight. They are all in good health, and refreshed by the voyage for the work to be done for them. The Mayor of Liverpool extended to the commissioners an invitation to attend a function to be held this evening in honor of the British warships now here. The invitation, however, was declined, the commissioners deeming it unwise to accept it.

DREYFUS REVISION

Paris, Sept. 24.—The Cabinet met today and decided to postpone its decision on the question of the proposed revision of the Dreyfus case until Monday next, owing to the absence from the meeting of the Minister of Finance Mr. Peytral, and the Minister of Agriculture, M. Viger.

DESPERATE TRAIN ROBBERS

Seven of Them Made an Onslaught Upon a Pacific Express Car

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 24.—Seven masked men held up the westbound Missouri Pacific passenger train known as the Little Rock and Wichita express, at a point in the woods between Leeds and Dawson, seven miles from Kansas City, at 9:40 o'clock last night. To prevent interference they first smashed the telegraph instruments at both line stations, the junction of the belt line and the Frisco, near the scene of the hold-up, and marched the telegraph operator, D. M. Hisey, before them to a point half a mile east. Two men covered Hisey while the other flagged the train as it approached, quickly covering engineer Slocum and fireman Weston.

COMPELLED TO DISMOUNT

The latter were compelled to dismount and detach the engine and Pacific express car, and run them down the track a mile and a half beyond Dawson. The passengers were unmolested, but the porter, who attempted to interfere, was quickly sent to cover by a shot directed by one of the robbers. At a desolate spot on the road the baggage car was quickly overturned, great quantities of dynamite placed upon the thorough safe and the local safe placed on top of it. So much explosives were used that the car was literally blown to pieces and the mules away to one side of the track.

The Dipper or the Dropper?

There are cough medicines that are taken as freely as a drink of water from a dipper. They are cheap medicines. Quantity does not make up for quality. It's the quality that cures. There's one medicine that's dropped, not dipped—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There's more power in drops of this remedy than in dipperful of cheap cough syrups and elixirs. It cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Colds, Coughs, and affections of the Throat and Lungs.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Two Dollars and Costs
Michael Lavery, who was arrested on Saturday afternoon for raising a disturbance on the street, was yesterday fined two dollars and costs for being drunk or for other reasons. Lavery's name that appeared in all the local papers. It should have been Michael Lavery.

George Gordon's Interventions
Mr. George Gordon, who has for the last three years filled the post of ledger-keeper in the Dominion Bank here, has resigned that position. Mr. Gordon left last evening to spend a few days with relatives at Belleville prior to leaving for Toronto, N. W. T., where he intends entering the service of the Northwest Mounted Police—Monday.

Last Night's Entertainment
A good sized audience assembled in the opera house last night to hear Don Oscar de Bazzan, which was produced by the Columbia Stock Company. Don Oscar de Bazzan, as Prince Minister, a street singer, and Don Oscar de Bazzan, as an adventurer, were received with great applause. Last night was particularly striking, and the vocal selections rendered by Orpha Taylor during this act were well received.

Oldest Woman in Canada
Mrs. Timothy C. Hamill, who died at Port Hope on Saturday at the unusually old age of 107 years, was a great aunt of Conductor Huskell and a great aunt of Conductor Huskell. Mrs. Hamill, of town, the deceased lady was born in Vermont, in 1791, and came to Port Hope in 1862. She retained her faculties and could recount experiences and give descriptions of early life and early scenes. On her hundredth birthday, seven years ago, a large gathering of Port Hope friends met at her house and presented her with an engraved address and a purse. She was a remarkable old lady and was undoubtedly the oldest woman in Canada.

Epworth League Convention
The fourth annual convention of the Peterborough district of the Epworth League, will be held in the Charlotte street Methodist church, on Tuesday October 4th.
The executive will meet at 10.30 a.m. and at 2 o'clock in the afternoon the convention will be formally opened.
The afternoon session will consist of reports from societies, appointment of nominating committees and addresses on various subjects by W. J. Gardner, B. A., Millbrook, Rev. D. N. Drew, Bethany, and Rev. A. C. Cross, Toronto and reports from the returning officers.

The evening session will commence at 7.30 o'clock in charge of Rev. D. O. Crossley and among those who will take part in the programme will be Miss N. Sherrin, Lakefield, Rev. W. D. Harrison, Bridgton and Rev. Mr. Emerson.

FIRE, WATER AND LIGHT

Committee Meet Last Night—The People's Coal Oil Company Got the Contract

A meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee was held last night, those present being The Mayor, Messrs. J. M. White, Allen, Cobb and Robertson.
Moved by W. H. White that the election of the fire engine be postponed to the Gutta Partha Rubber Company, and that they be asked to repair it properly as it was not done so before.
The Engineer was instructed to try reducer on engine with hydrant.
The matter of purchasing a truck for the hook and ladder truck was then taken up, and it was decided to ask for tenders for a truck, the Chief and Councilor Cobb to prepare specifications.
It was also decided to call for tenders for the supplying of winter suits for the drivers and engine.
A report was read from the Chief of the fire brigade with reference to some trouble that had arisen between certain of the drivers and members of the company.
The matter referred a thorough investigation, before the committee, and the men were told plainly that any more quarrelling occurring there would surely be a change made.
Tenders were received from the different coal companies in town, and that of the People's Coal Coy. was accepted, being $4.95 per ton. The contract calls for forty tons.

The meeting then adjourned.

Will They Play or Not?
A despatch to the Toronto World says: T. Herbert Lennox, president of the C. L. A., has ordered the Orillia-Peterboro game to be played at Orillia on Wednesday, Sept. 28. This should be one of the best games of the season, as both teams are in first-class form. The Orillia-Peterboro people are making great preparations and will have the grounds in first-class condition.
Everything seems to be quiet in lacrosse circles in town, and there is very little probability that the Peterboro aggregation will obey the order of the president, and will let the game go by default.

Victims From Peterboro
The Lindsay Post says: "About forty of the leading citizens of Peterboro" arrived in town yesterday morning on the early train, and boarded the Alice-Elbel for a trip to the Balaun Lake section of the Trent Valley canal. The outing was under bond of trade auspices. Among the excursionists were Messrs. H. M. Allen, H. C. Winch, H. LeBrun, R. E. Wood, A. L. Davis, B. Shortly, T. Blear, M. L. R. McKee, Robert Fair, R. J. Finch, A. E. Parker, T. W. Martin, F. H. Dobbin, (Rev.), Frank Adams, E. H. Hall, John Carnegie, E. Brown, R. B. McKee, D. Davidson, A. H. Stratton, J. R. Stratton, M. P. P., Dr. Bradd, R. B. Rodgers and others. They returned in time to take supper at the Brown House, and left for home on the 6 o'clock train."

Mr. John Dixon left this morning for Guelph.
Mr. Chas. Lockerville is very ill with erysipelas.
Mr. C. D. Starr, of Cornwall, was in town yesterday.
Mr. Richard Morgan, of Ashburnham, who has been in Toronto for the last six weeks, has returned home.
Mrs. Ellsworth Stoddard, of Fenelon Falls, has returned home after a pleasant visit in town with friends.
Mr. Hudson, of Perth, formerly connected with the local branch of the Bank of Montreal, spent Sunday in town with friends.
Miss Annie Armstrong, head milliner for the Golden Lion, was in Toronto yesterday, making extensive purchases for her department.
Miss Mabel Roy is recovering from a severe attack of illness. She leaves to-day with her grandmother, Mrs. Roy, to spend a month convalescing in Belleville.

Dr. Payne, of Messrs. Webster & Payne, of New York City, who has been spending some days on the back lakes, was in town yesterday, on his way to Montreal.
Mr. F. H. Pope left yesterday morning for Toronto, much to the regret of his numerous friends in town. Mr. Pope was moved from Kingston to the local branch of the Ontario Bank a little over a year ago, and is now transferred to the head office in Toronto. During his residence in town he became most popular in social circles.

Toronto Saturday Night says: The marriage of Miss Macdougall, eldest daughter of His Honor Justice Macdougall, of Carlton Lodge, and Dr. Young, of Peterboro, will be very quietly celebrated at the family residence on Oct. 12th. Mrs. Macdougall's delicate health makes it inadvisable for her to undertake the care and fatigue of an elaborate celebration, and only the immediate relatives will witness the ceremony. An announcement that Miss Macdougall was to be the bride, instead of her eldest sister, caused some confusion among congratulating friends.

VICTORIA CHEESE BOARD

1000 Boxes Were Sold on Saturday at 15-15 Cents

Pursuant to adjournment, a meeting of the Victoria County Cheese Board was held in Lindsay on Saturday morning at 11 o'clock, President Robertson, Treasurer, Sandford and Secretary Shins and other officers being present. The factory boarded the number of cheese placed opposite:
Lorneville.....100
Cambridge.....35
Dundas.....85
Stirling.....70
Cambridge.....75
Jambville.....82
Dundas.....125
Fenelon Falls.....77
North Verulam.....71
Stirling.....135
Stirling.....100
Maple Leaf.....115
Palestine.....107
Red Rock.....154
Oakford.....40

Mr. Flavell led off with an offer of $3.40 for selections. Mr. Fitzgerald called $7.80. Mr. Whitman remained silent, and Mr. Fitzgerald named Oakford, Cambridge, and Cambridge.
Mr. Whitman made the same offer to Maple Leaf, North Verulam, Fenelon Falls, Dundas, Janetville, Dundas and Lorneville, with no takers.
Mr. Flavell—"The difference in the freight coupled with the cost of inspection really makes a difference of a sixteenth of a cent per pound as compared with Peterboro." He then offered $7.80 for Cameron, Pine Grove, Palestine and Red Rock, but all refused.

Mr. Whitman finally said he would make his bid $15.15, and called Dundas, Jambville, Fenelon Falls, North Verulam, Red Rock, Maple Leaf and Dundas, the latter refusing.
Mr. Fitzgerald withdrew in a sense of his duty and also offered $15.15 for selections taking Stirling, Mariposa, Cambridge, Babbington, Oakwood and North Open.
Mr. Flavell offered to clear the rest of the board at $7.80, but finally consented to do so as well as the buyers, and took Red Rock, Palestine, Pine Grove and Lorneville at $15.15.
The board was thus cleared at the highest figure ever received since its formation. The next meeting will be held on Monday, Oct. 12th.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Happenings in the Town and District During the Past Twenty-Four Hours

—One hundred and twenty fine, and healthy girls arrived at the Barnado Home yesterday morning at 6.30, under the care of Mrs. Brown.

—The telephone posts on Charlotte street are being moved out onto the street further, so that they will not interfere with the street pavement.
—Belleville is offering a $50,000 bonus to F. A. Mitchell, of Norwich, Connecticut, to remove his rolling mills there. A similar dicker fell through a few months ago.

—Sterling, Ont., has voted funds to establish a system of sewerage, the sewer to be brought from Lake Simcoe, two miles away, and 300 feet above the town.

—Mrs. Emory of Marmora, near Belleville, has been found guilty of arson. The village blacksmith declined to marry her, and she set fire to his barn. She was sentenced to three years in prison. Judge Lister holding that she was subject to delusional insanity.

—Owing to the very unfavorable weather the local rugby men have had very little chance to see what kind of material the team is made up of. A number of matches are being arranged, which it is likely that the local team will be down at an early date.

—Mr. George Migh, the Peterboro boy who enlisted in the United States army during the recent war, and who has been home on a few weeks leave of absence, left on Saturday to join his regiment, which he will immediately receive his discharge.

HON. M. O. CAMERON IS DEAD

The Governor of the Northwest Territories Dies of Pneumonia

London, Sept. 26.—Lieut. Governor M. O. Cameron of the Northwest Territories, died at the residence of his son-in-law, Mayor Dr. Wilson, at 9.15 a.m. Mr. Cameron was born in 1831, and was descended from a Highland Scotch family, and was educated at Knox College, Toronto with the view of becoming a Presbyterian minister. He changed his mind, however, and went to law, and was called to the bar of the Supreme Court of Ontario in 1860. In 1866 he began his political career as councillor for the town of Guelph, being twice years a member of the city council, one year mayor, and four years mayor. He had a leading part in the establishment of extensive salt works in his county. Towards the construction of the free harbor of refuge at Guelph, and of the commercial harbor at Bayfield, he did great service by his extraordinary energy. He entered the House of Commons in 1867, and was an unflinching Liberal from the outset. In May, 1885, he married Jessie H. daughter of Dr. McLean who was concerned in the exploration and survey of the western lakes under Capt. Bayfield. They had seven children, one of whom died in Jacksonville in 1876, aged 17. The eldest daughter married John Galt, son of the registrar of Huron, grandson of the novelist, and nephew of Mr. Alexander and Judge Galt.

EAST PETERBOROUGH WON

They Beat the West End Team by a Score of 124 to 120

A cricket match was played on Saturday last between West Peterborough and East Peterborough, the teams being composed principally of players from Peterborough and Lakefield respectively.

West Peterboro won the toss and batted first at a slow wicket. Dr. Boucher's 42 and Dr. Young's 31, not out were the highest scores. It is to be regretted very much that members after being chosen to play in a match have not the courtesy to appear on the field to take part in the game, but leave it to four or five players as was the case on Saturday last.

East Peterborough ran up quite a score. Mr. Hilliard's 64 and Mr. Rogers' 30 were the highest. Mr. Hilliard played fine cricket. And he was loudly applauded on retiring.

A Gay Candidate

On the return of the appointment to examine Mr. Samuel J. Fox, for West representative and sitting member for Victoria, Friday last, before his honor Judge Dean, Mr. McDonald, Mr. Steers and Mr. Vance appeared for the petitioner, and Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Francis Drake Moore, for Mr. Fox. On Mr. McDonald asking for the production of Mr. Fox for examination, Mr. Hopkins stated that he declined to produce him while Mr. Vance was present. The maidenly coyness and retiring bashfulness on the part of Mr. Fox is very charming, but is unusual in a politician. It is probably due to the fact that Mr. Fox is anxious that his good deeds should not see the light, and to his desire that his generosity and works of charity during his election campaign shall remain unknown.

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 28, 1898

IF THE PLEBISCITE OARRIS, WHAT THEN?

A great deal of thoughtful consideration and argument has been given the Drink Question during the past month. Able writers and profound thinkers—clerical and lay—have given their views on the subject. The whole ground has been gone over again and again, the old arguments pro and con have been repeated, the evils attending the too free use of the glass have been insisted upon and deplored. All this is of great value to the "temperance" movement, not however to the "Prohibition" movement.

The voters qualified to cast their ballots on this occasion are those who are Dominion electors. The last revised list of 1897, as authorized by the Franchise Act of 1896, will be used. The total number of such voters is not as yet ascertained, but a close approximation may be got at by referring to the Dominion election returns for 23 June 1896.

The total number of voters on all the Dominion rolls for that year was 1,353,735. The votes cast were 890,711.

Thus nearly one-third of the registered electors failed to vote at the Dominion election. If, under the conditions of a fierce party strife, when every available vote was asked after on both sides, only 890,711 out of 1,353,735 could be polled, how many voters may be expected to come forward on the Plebiscite occasion? Doubtless the full strength of the Prohibition party will be pulled, although indications are not wanting that many men who are enthusiastic "temperance" workers fail to see in Prohibition, if carried, a cure for the evils for which it is held by many to be a remedy. Then, again, a large number of men who use distilled liquors and fermented beverages in moderation may not take the trouble to attend and throw their ballots in the anti-prohibition scale. A strong effort is being made to induce the "anti" not to vote against the plebiscite, and very many will doubtless comply.

In view of all the circumstances, it is probable that the plebiscite will carry; that is, that more votes will be cast in its favor than against. Even so what would be the practical result of the vote? Supposing, for the sake of argument, that 800,000 voters (as against 890,711 who voted in 1896) should attend the polls, and that out of this number 400,000 voted for prohibition and 200,000 against, how would such a vote be considered by the politicians? That would indicate that the pro-prohibition vote of the entire Dominion did not amount to one-third of the total number of qualified voters. Would the Government, in view of such a small majority—less than one-third of the whole—be justified in introducing prohibition legislation which would affect over two-thirds of the entire electorate who had either voted against such a measure or who had been indifferent as to the actual result? Would it be possible to get the House of Commons to pass a Prohibition act on the demand of less than one-third of the electors and if it did, could prohibition become such a law as would be respected by the bulk of the Dominion population?

Everybody is aware that there is a great deal of what is known as "politics" in the granting of the Plebiscite. The late premier, Sir J. A. Macdonald and Sir John Thompson, plainly and distinctly told the prohibition party that the attempt to enforce prohibition in the Dominion would be impossible. In the spring of the 1896 campaign Mr. Laurier was approached on the subject, and hesitatingly agreed that if he were returned to power he would certainly grant a plebiscite to ascertain the actual sentiment of the country on the prohibition proposal. It is well known that Mr. Laurier is opposed to prohibition. He has made no secret of his opinion. Through granting the plebiscite to satisfy his temperance supporters who looked to him as a sort of political Moses to carry them into the promised land, his heart is not in the proposal. So when in May 1897, a deputaion waited on Mr. Laurier on the proposed plebiscite bill the Premier pointed out the obstacles that lay in the way, here we quote the Montreal Herald (government organ) of 17 May, 1897—

"Mr. Laurier, in his reply, pointed out the necessity for a strong sentiment in favor of prohibition. He told them that to be made efficacious, it would be necessary to have a direct taxation would have to be taken into account in connection with a prohibition law; and he intimated that the question of compensation would receive consideration."

Here we are informed that the Premier told the temperance delegates that a "strong sentiment" behind a prohibitory measure would be necessary to make it efficacious. Would one-third of the electorate in favor be considered to be a sufficiently "strong sentiment"?

And even if the plebiscite vote should comprise a majority of total electorate, over 676,867 votes, the question would arise whether such a vote would be decisive. The "strong sentiment" referred to by the Premier might be considered effectual if say two-thirds of the electorate voted for prohibition, or about 902,490 votes. In the face of such a question expressed by the electorate, the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, would then be strictly within his line of duty in introducing prohibition as a government measure.

Twice it and turn it as we may, the argument is conclusive that the government of the day, whether Liberal or Liberal-Conservative, could not in justice to the country at large introduce a prohibition bill unless a clear majority of the electorate demanded it under the approaching plebiscite count. This, then, will soon become the crucial test. As to the fiscal view of the subject, how, if prohibition should be carried, the loss of revenue is to be made up, it is hardly worth while to discuss. Time enough for that if the forthcoming plebiscite should develop the "strong sentiment" demanded by the Premier.

AN CONVERSATION

"I am thinking very seriously of voting for prohibition," said a well-known hotelkeeper of Middlesex County the other day, says the London Free Press.

His friend looked at him in surprise.

"Why so?" he asked.

"Well, you see," he replied, "it pays better to sell liquor under prohibition than it does under license; at least it has been my experience."

"Do you mean that seriously?" his friend queried.

"I certainly do. I am telling you the exact truth. At our place in— (naming it) we did a better business while the Scott Act was in force than we did before or since. Doing away with the licensing and inspection in those three years just put us off our feet, I tell you. We cleared $7,000. There's no such money made in bootlegging nowadays."

"How in the world did you manage to do it and escape the law?"

"Ha! ha! You see there was no liquor law in those years. It was Scott Act times. Everything was 'open.' No one was looking after the trade, except a couple of sneaking informers that came around once a year, but they were sent flying very soon. Every one having a bar just sold right along, and charged higher prices, on pretence that they were being watched, and were running risk of being fined heavily. I tell you, I would like to have such times back again in— and if my vote could secure prohibition, I think I would vote for it."

The above is true.

PETERBOROUGH AS A SUMMER RESORT.

Elsewhere we publish a letter which speaks for itself, dealing with this subject. There is no reason why Peterborough should not become one of the most popular summer resorts in Canada if not on the continent. Situated as it is in the centre between the Rice Lake and Stoney Lake waters, within easy distance from each, it has superior advantages over all other places.

It is only of late years that the waters of Stoney Lake are becoming known to our friends across the lines, while Rice Lake, although nearer to the "front," is still more in obscurity than the northerly lakes.

What is needed to boom the town as a summer resort is the extension of the Electric railway to Chemung Lake and Lakefield as well as to the river below the locks. The sooner this is done the sooner we will see our waters and our streets filled with guests the entire summer through.

WHAT IT MAY LEAD TO

It is possible that, as many very worthy and sensible people think, total abstinence from spirituous liquors may be good for us all, without regard to individual constitution, age, climate, or the general elements of the diet. That is a question for medical science, and one on which medical science has not yet pronounced a decisive verdict, many physicians, including some of the most eminent, still recommending, or not forbidding, temperate use. About this we suspend our judgment till that of medical science shall have been declared. But, granting that total abstinence is good, our belief is that its sudden enforcement by law upon a whole population which has been accustomed to the use of liquor, and of which a very large portion still desires, and believes in the right to use it, is impracticable; and that the attempt will lead not only to loss of revenue, wreck of invested capital, and ejection of thousands from employment, but to moral evils in the shape of contrabandism, perjury, and discord, not less grave in their way than intemperance itself. Such seems to be the result of multiplied experiments, both in the United States and in this country. The consequences of failure, which would be disastrous in proportion to its scale, could not fail to be injurious to the cause of temperance itself.

A WINE LUNCH.

At Which Prohibition Was Spoken of as an Impossibility.

The new wine and liquor trade of Lawrence A. Wilson Comp. Co., at 87 S. J. street, Montreal, were formally opened by a wine lunch given by Mr. Wilson on the premises. Fully two hundred invited guests were present, these including, besides His Worship Mayor Prefontaine, ex-Mayor McShane, Hon. G. A. Nault, late C. minister of Agriculture, and others, all the principal wine and liquor clients of Mr. Wilson in the city.

The gathering resolved itself naturally into an anti-prohibition meeting. Mayor Prefontaine was voted into the chair, and in a brief address, in which he eulogized the new enterprise of his host, he took a glass to the health of the public. The plebiscite, he said, whatever its result, would be without effect so far as the possible enactment of a prohibitory law as concerned. Wine was a drink supplied by nature. It had been used for centuries, and would continue to be in use in Canada after the plebiscite. The fascias who sought to impose their views on the rest of the population would find that their efforts were fruitless.

Mr. James McShane was then called upon for a few remarks, and spoke in a simple and straightforward manner of the evils of intemperance, and of the necessity of prohibition, and there would be no prohibition. In reply to the compliments heaped upon him, Mr. Lawrence A. Wilson spoke at length upon the subject of the plebiscite. He said that a prohibitory law would result from the vote, he said, whether it showed a majority for prohibition or not. The question of revenue was an important one, and he said that the Government would be obliged to consider it. He said that the Government would be obliged to consider it.

How to Cure skin Diseases

Simply apply "Swayne's Ointment." No internal medicine required. Cures tetter, eczema, itch, all eruptions on the face, hands, neck, etc., leaving the skin clear, white and healthy. Songs That Sing Themselves

How the music comes from a Graphophone cylinder is a mystery that adds much to the fascination of the machine. The songs of the Graphophone are really songs that sing themselves. The Graphophone is marvellous as an entertainer. The Graphophones might be described as all musical instruments in one. You can sing from it any kind of music you want, vocal or instrumental. It is the perfect talking machine; for entertainment at home it has no rival as its repertoire is unlimited. Furthermore it costs less than a cheap musical instrument. "Three from two you can't," says the schoolboy. Right! Three from two you can't, either in dollars or dividends or sarsaparilla. It takes the best sarsaparilla root to make the best sarsaparilla extract. The best sarsaparilla comes from Honduras, C. A., and the Dr. Ayer Co. practically controls the entire product. Yet others claim to be making "best" sarsaparilla. They must be making it out of the remainder left after subtracting three from two. But, "three from two you can't." You can't make the best sarsaparilla without best root. You only get the best when you which is made wholly from the best root imported from Honduras.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Exhibition Opening

The Central Exhibition will open on Thursday, and the indications are that it will be a big success. The entry list is larger this year than ever, and the special attractions will be of the very latest kind.

Yesterday's Practice

Fine weather favored the local rugby men yesterday afternoon and the boys indulged in a good hard practice. Among those conspicuous on the field were Mr. Williams, Hollingshead, N. Bell, C. Bell, McClelland, Revell, Manson, Burnham, R. Collins, A. Collins and McDonald.

A Grand Concert

A very brilliant programme is being prepared for St. Joseph's hospital concert under the direction of Mr. G. R. Vinton. Two choruses new to Peterborough are in rehearsal, one being from Canada, and among the numbers, Miss Rose d'Erna will sing Zingarelli's grand aria supported by the chorus. Several specialties will be introduced, and altogether will be presented what promises to be the best musical treat Peterborough has enjoyed for some seasons. Miss d'Erna and Mr. Vinton for the second time will open their Canadian season here. We are glad to learn that tickets are selling well and indications point to most deserving charities. Everybody who is taking tickets and who is probably more reserved seats will have to be added.

Y.W.C.A. Convention

The third biennial convention of the Young Women's Christian Association of Canada will be held in Peterborough on October 4-6. The officers of this association are Mrs. John McDougall, president, Ottawa; Miss Blackburn, treasurer, Ottawa; Miss Minnie McDonald, recording secretary, Toronto; Miss J. Baxwell, B.A., corresponding secretary, Montreal; Pro incision vice-presidents, Mrs. John Housless, Hamilton; Mrs. Gordon Grant, British Columbia. The convention opens in the Y.W.C.A. buildings on Tuesday, Oct. 4th, at 2.30 o'clock p.m.

Between 60 and 100 delegates are expected to be present. Addresses are to be given by Mrs. John Harvie, of Toronto.

The members and friends of the Young Women's Christian Association of Canada have their attention called to the fact that the third biennial convention of the Young Women's Christian Association of Canada will be held in Peterborough, and they and the citizens generally should extend to the delegates every hospitality.

A Record Wedding

One of the most interesting events possible to a community took place at the residence of Wm. Brokenshire, Esq., of Rosedale, Victoria county, on the 21st inst.

The contracting parties were Mr. Richard A. Payne, of Winnipeg, formerly of Peterborough, and Miss Sarah Brokenshire, youngest daughter of the above named.

The impressive service was performed by the Rev. R. H. Leitch, of Fenelon Falls.

The bride who was given away by her brother, Mr. David Brokenshire, was dressed in Salvation Army attire, as was also the groom. Her bridesmaids were Miss Emma Ellery, and Miss Susan Worley, and Mr. John G. Brokenshire and Mr. Richard Comer acted as groomsmen.

After the ceremony the congratulations and good wishes were very heartily heaped upon the new husband and wife by a large number of relatives and friends, who also admired the handsome and useful assortment of wedding presents and partook of a bountiful and enjoyable wedding breakfast, while music-instrumental and vocal-regaled the evening. May happiness and prosperity attend them in their home-making in the West.

OUR SUMMER TRADE

Toronto People After American Cities and why not Peterborough?

To the Editor of the Times:
Sir,—We have the authority of the Toronto press for a hint that the influx of visitors from the western States this season has been phenomenal, and to their credit be it said, they are already discussing ways and means of securing a still greater share of such patronage. Now, if Toronto, with few, if any, exceptions, can so successfully draw for each patronage, what ought not our town to do to capture the same? It is fair and just to such large cities as Toronto that people flee to avoid the heat and crowded places to seek the fresh air of the country and enjoy the scenic scenery and when possible indulge in the sport of fishing. Such attractions we possess in a pre-eminent degree all around us. To the south we have the ever-winding Ottawa river presenting a picturesque panorama, until Ride Lake is reached, and famed for its beautiful scenery and its cool climate and fishing, swimming, as it does, such summer resorts as Jubilee Point, Idyl Wild and Gore's Landing, at which latter place is located one of the finest summer hotels in the country, with all modern conveniences. To the north of us we have magnificent water stretches, comprising numerous lakes joined together by narrow inlets, unbroken chain, which are equally famed for scenery, sportfishing and fishing. Here, too, at different points are good summer hotels and good summer resorts. What and more delightful than over the recent course from Chemung Park to Lakefield, or vice versa, or among the rocky isles of Stony Lake. Now, then, does more for us than most of places, but we have no public sports grounds to supplement her handicraft. It is true we have a Board of Trade, composed of three-fourths of whom never think of the public welfare, but who like to see their names in print. We want a few enterprising citizens who are willing to put their hands down into their pockets and give tangible evidence of their sincerity to help the town along. I would recommend to the Board of Trade and the fish-hunting council a perusal of an article in Saturday's Toronto World, "Advertising Toronto."

Yours, etc.,
CITIZEN.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Happenings in the Town and District During the Past Twenty-Four Hours

—The Hunter street bridge is being re-planked and receiving general repairs.

—Hiawatha Entertainment, No. 66, meets to-night. A full attendance is requested by the Chief Patriarch.

—St. John's choir drove out to Halliwell last night, where they gave a concert for the benefit of the Anglican church there.

—The Battalion Band drew the first installment of the new Government issue of overcoats yesterday. They are similar in pattern to the old issue, with the exception that they are Rigby provided.

—Mr. J. H. Cliff, representing the Safety Light and Heat Company of Dundas, is in town in the interest of his firm. He is at present engaged in installing a twenty-five light incandescent gas machine in Mr. H. Calcutt's brewery.

—The water pipe from town over to Ashburnham, being laid across the river. The men engaged in the work are having some trouble in digging out a bed for the pipe as there is considerable amount of rock to be encountered.

GENERAL POSTAL NOTES

Some Suggestions Made—Where the Revenue Comes From

Mr. A. T. Drummond has published a pamphlet entitled "Some Further Suggestions for the Postmaster-General," the advance sheets of which are to hand and contain interesting information about the postal affairs in general.

If the penny postage leads to our writing three letters to our Canadian correspondents where before we wrote two, and to our increasing our correspondence with Great Britain to an extent equal to this heavy reduction in postage, the writer avers that the Postmaster-General will probably feel satisfied.

The different provinces show great diversity in the use which they make of the postal service. Ontario now contributes 100 cents per head of population to the gross postal revenue, whilst Nova Scotia contributes 70 cents, New Brunswick 67 cents, Province of Quebec 60 cents, and Prince Edward Island only 10 cents. There is much room for improvement in Ontario for which Great Britain shows 45 letters posted per head of population, in Ontario there are only 31. And yet, each resident in Ontario writes on the average nearly twice as many letters as each resident in the Province of Quebec, and two and a half times as many as each resident in Prince Edward Island.

An important feature of Mr. Mulik's may apply the pruning hook is suggested. If only ten per cent of the gross postal revenue is saved, bringing the average compensation to 25 per cent, the saving effected would amount to $200,000. At present the average show, deducting the business of the city post offices, that the compensation, salaries and allowances paid to postmasters in British Columbia equal $20 per cent, and in Ontario 32 per cent of the gross postal revenue of those provinces. Quebec expenses are similarly 31 per cent of its gross postal revenue, whilst those of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba amount to nearly 40 per cent, and Prince Edward Island to 47 per cent of their respective revenues from their post offices. Going further into detail, the compensation and allowances in the country offices vary from 30 to 50 per cent of the gross revenue of the offices, and those of the non-accounting offices are generally higher, reaching in Prince Edward Island 54 per cent.

There is an immense field for the development of the parcel post, for in all Canada the public only send 1,000 parcels daily through the post-office. Only one post-office in nine on an average sends even one parcel daily. The reason is that the present charges are prohibitory. With rates of 6 cents for each box, a 25 lb parcel sent from Toronto to Belleville or Kingston, cost 72 cents, a rate which in most instances adds so much to the cost of the article sent as to be simply prohibitory. The postal fee, in fact, so large as to drive the business into the hands of the express companies.

The British parcel post and the British railway parcel service expanded enormously by the introduction of reasonable rates. There a pound parcel will be taken 100 miles for ten cents; a 3 lb parcel the same distance for 14 cents, and an 11 pound parcel for 24 cents. On the other hand the British parcel post has uniform rates irrespective of distance, and will take a 1 pound parcel to the most remote point in the kingdom for 6 cents; a 3 pound parcel for 12 cents, and an 11 pound parcel for 36 cents. One firm alone sends about 1,000 parcels daily by post and rail, or as many as our whole Dominion does in the same time.

The 3 pound parcel sent from Toronto to Belleville will cost 72 cents in postage; but it would be taken by the same postal authorities from Toronto to England for 40 cents. An even heavier parcel will be carried to England and from points in Canada to points in Canada.

C.P.R. DOUBLE TRACK

Work commenced on the Double Track from Montreal to Toronto

It will be of interest to the people of Peterborough to know that the Canadian Pacific Railway are contemplating the laying of a double track between Montreal and Toronto. The work has already been commenced at the Montreal terminus and is being pushed forward with great vigor.

It will be remembered that this improvement was authorized by the shareholders at the last annual meeting, so that little time has been lost in getting to work. The first section of track to be laid is the section between Montreal and the Jacques Cartier crossing, just beyond Montreal Junction, to St. Anne's a distance of about 25 miles, and it is understood that this will be completed and perhaps pushed on to Audreault, where the new Ottawa branch joins the main line, early in the coming spring. Mr. Tait told the World that the culverts would be prepared this year and everything made for grading and track laying next year. Apart from this the C. P. R. has doubled the track around the mountain, a distance of over six miles.

The officials say that the traffic between Montreal and the Queen city is very much congested and, no doubt, a comparatively short time will elapse before the entire section is double.

Great preparations are being made for the anniversary services of All Saints church, which will be held next Sunday. The Rev. G. Mackenzie, of Brantford, one of the best known clergymen of Western Ontario, will officiate.

FRIENDS PREVAILED

A Nervous Toronto Woman Walked the Floor During the Night for Hours at a Time—She Makes a Statement.

TORONTO, ONT.—"I was troubled with nervousness. It was impossible for me to keep still and if the spells came over me during the night I had to get up and walk the floor for hours at a time. My blood was very poor and I was subject to bilious attacks. My feet would swell and I was not able to do my own housework. I treated with two of the best physicians here but only received relief for a time. I became discouraged. One day a friend called and advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I laughed at the advice but I was prevailed upon and procured one bottle. Before I used it all I began to feel better. I took several bottles and also several boxes of Hood's Pills. Now I can eat and drink heartily and sleep soundly. Hood's Sarsaparilla has entirely cured me and also strengthened me so that I now do all my own work. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all sufferers from nervousness, weakness or general debility." Mrs. H. F. PARM, Degraw Street.

AN EVIDENCE OF DURABILITY.

What the distinguished pastor the Rev. S. J. Shores, of George St. Methodist Church, Peterboro', says of the Newcombe Piano:

"I have been more than satisfied with the piano purchased nearly fifteen years ago from Messrs. Newcombe & Co. After all these years of constant use. The piano is still in first class condition."

The Rev. M. T. Campbell, Ex-President of the Bay of Quinte Conference says, "I had Newcombe Piano in my home for ten years—and when my daughter was married and wanted a piano it was the Newcombe I purchased for her."

DAY OF THE CLIPPER PART.

On the Stunna! Has Disappeared For Good From Most American Ships

"Stunna! out of fashion!" said the skipper, who he puffed vigorously at his old pipe, which has been around the Horn as many times as its owner. "The day may be, but it is because the economy has abolished them on American ships. However, an old shipmate of mine who is a bit of a crank and left this port the other day, still carries a topmast stunna! It may be for sentimental reasons, just as a Confederate veteran might display the flag under which he went to battle, but stunna!s are just as practical today as ever."

"Studding sail, you say? Oh, yes, studding sail may be literally correct, but I speak says 'stunna!.' He objects to mouth-studding parables and words with long endings. He wants briefly all the time—everything perhaps except rain. The sea is rapid, the wind by sailors is proverbial, Stunna! must be a contradiction, studding sail, but studding sail itself is a corruption of studding sail or steering sail, which in my opinion was the original term. The stunna!, although used only in moderate weather, was a driving sail. Our yachts carry stunna!s today in the form of the immense side sail that is called a spinnaker."

"It costs to fit a ship with a suite of sea sails. Their use means extra labor for the crew, or a larger crew, and their storage costs valuable cargo room. This means expense for the ship, which her earnings

MRS. DRIFTER'S SAY.

Mrs. Drifter grew confidential the other evening. Some of Drifter's friends had called, and the subject of his adventures in the South came up.

"Of course, it is all right," said Mrs. Drifter. "For Drifter to tell about the trials he endured when he was the editor of a paper in Texas. I never put in such a time in my life. I expected that Drifter would come home to me about all of hules some night. When I was down at his office reading the proofs of that cunning little paper he got out it used to make my blood run cold to hear those men talk about gun plays so and so had made up in somebody's session."

"Drifter reassured me by telling me that the crack of a pistol did not always mean that somebody had been hit. But you know what a brute man Drifter is. No, you don't, either. You say you don't know anything about the time he saved our lives down in Texas? I don't think I ever realized before I found those courageous Drifters. I know I don't even see a ranch nor a herd of cattle since I arrived in Texas, and I began the present carry today do not demand quick repairs. The sailing ship is a thing of the past. The modern sailing ship is built for speed, and has floating warehouses. It is not driven by spars and canvas as not pressed as they were before the advent of the steamship. Selling a ship to make a short passage is one of the lost arts. There is no longer any sailing canvas such as steamers. The Yankee clipper is out of it—obsolete.

"Away back in the middle of the century the bark and stripes floated over ships. These were really clippers before and aloft in competition with one another and with foreign ones. They carried tea from China, coffee from Rio and fancy merchandise to San Francisco. The steamships do the tea and coffee carrying now. It was not in those days a game as you please run. The clippers were under orders to get there to catch the tea of the market. The vessels moved at the will of the wind, though they meant many a disaster for all concerned. Ships were driven with canvas that fairly smothered them in fair weather and foul, and Yankee seamanship, with its characteristic judgment and nerve, was recognized and rewarded."

But all this is merely a memory now. Can fancy the clipper of the fifties cowering head on, riding against the clear sky of the lower latitudes, her sails mounting above the blue horizon, far upon tiercerags, moonrakers, cloud cleaners—snow white pyramid, an angel's foot on a pedestal, a white tower, a white sail? Ave, up to the royal yard. "—A—

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

A Resident in Brescia During the Italian Revolution of 1848.

The Count de Hubner tells in his Memories a thrilling story of an adventure in the Italian city of Brescia during the days of the revolution of 1848. When he was troubled here in the streets, he conceived the idea of taking refuge with his family in a neighborly house, thirty miles

"Times were very, very hard down there, and the packing house was closed, and we were very hard on our feet in the stockyards. We walked around and tried to imagine what it must be like when the cattle came out of the corral into the Panhandle. We had gone quite a little distance from the high board fence and were admiring the scenery, when we started to come strolling along. We stood sticking our heads over the fence about 50 or 75 had passed us, when all at once there loomed up before us an immense Texas bull. His manner was as dignified as a courtier. He looked at us, elevated his head, snuffed, and my heart gave a jump.

"That was when Drifter and his in-brother came to the front. It was needless to say that I was frightened. I thought my last moment had come. The fence of the stockyards must have been 10 feet high; at least it looked as if it was. Drifter was a big fellow, but he was not more than 15, but I know that the tree around it were not so high as the fence. He grasped me by the hand and said: 'Don't be afraid. This is my brother, and I will stay here and protect you.'

"I was brought up in the country, and I know it is the habit of foolishness to be afraid of things that are not so. I refused. 'If we are going to die, we will die together, Drifter,' said I, 'but the best thing to do is to back slowly away from that awful bull. He is backed toward us, never taking his eyes off us. I know I could hear Drifter's heart beat, but it must have been anxiety for me, for he was not breathing a word.' 'No.' 'Get behind that tree,' he said, 'and his voice sounded as if it was away off somewhere, and I felt as if we were to be separated forever. Reasonably he—'

"I will see that he does not touch you." With that he took out his little pocket knife, opened the blade, which was a very fine one, and said: 'I will do that.' There with as much defiance in his tone as if he had been behind a stone barricade and armed with a Ma-

A Prominent Physician.
A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tablets with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthropist, and do beneficent deeds that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Rosnovski hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tablets, and cause it to be put up in the form of a kechup and distributed among the poor."

Salute Increasing.
The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hagenau & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tablets were selling was sitting bought a five-ounce jar and asked: "Do you have much call for them?" He was referred to gentlemen who proved to be the head of the department. He said: "The sale of Ripans Tablets is constant and increasing, and especially so the phenomenal character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of them, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When they are here I realize that a great new customer for them is made. And I believe, in through their intrinsic merit, which proves the basic character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of ailments."

An Elderly Lady.
An elderly lady living at Furman Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tablets for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at first time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tablets recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a week. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tablets kept me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who frequently referred to the testimonial which should quote her name in the newspaper, but to do this the elderly lady agreed: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tablets to my own relatives as I do."

Dr. J. C. Smith. In the case about my case in the press, unlike some other persons who are inclined to be so greatly troubled as I have been, are no objection." The daughters, knowing how greatly she felt about the matter, were so interested, I decided to write quite fully.

As soon as possible. The firing grew heavier, and the rebels soon had possession of almost every house on the street.

On the 19th of March, Count de Hubner decided that he would do something to help his position in case of an assault, and he forced his only remaining servant to make a dash across the street to the palace where the Austrian general, Beck, was quartered, two blocks away and on the other side. The man was merely to let the general know that De Hubner himself was coming, and to ask that the gates be held ready for him.

"I was prudent and my honor had no less and better argument," says Count de Hubner. "Finally I pulled myself together. I had to let Prince Metetrach know about myself, to make a last report, and to keep my word about poor Mme. M. I undid the door, drew a long breath, and

"We sat there on the top of the fence until dusk, and Drifter never let go of the knife. I really believe that if the other fellow attacked, Drifter would have stabbed him with that penknife. In the evening, after I had mustered up courage enough, we made our way, keeping close by the fence, until we reached the stockyard. Drifter never said a word about the adventure, and you would not have thought he had done anything remarkable, but I know that he saved my life from the hands of the bull."

It took Mrs. Drifter's friends some time to rise to a proper appreciation of the courage displayed by her husband in that time of danger, and after a few faint remarks they again continued:

"You ought to get Drifter to tell you about the time he went out to the lake

"The Italian shooter from the stone pavement. As I arrived at the gates of the palace, they swung to and, and I stepped in. I was inside, and he was behind. But only half my journey was done; I had still to go back again."

"A letter, my last report—was sent me, signed for Mathew and my message to the husband of Mme. M. was given. And to return."

"Again the gates were opened and I descended forth. A veritable fusillade followed. From every window, balcony, and porch came a volley of hissing bullets, and I had to dodge at bullets at once. In a minute I had reached my own door, and I did so I turned to look back."

"Another man left the palace gates at all speed, but before he had half crossed the street a puff of smoke shot from the balcony of the palace and he was instantly killed like a log across the gutter. The rest stopped at once—what use would there be in shooting a dead man?"

"But on the second they all became silent to my great astonishment. I saw the 'dead man' rise to his feet and a few moments later he was standing in the doorway, and I saw the door waiting for him. The sharpshooters were taken by surprise and he escaped."

The Good Old Times.

"An increase of salary?" exclaimed the prosperous manager of a small cannibal company to a clerk who had just made an urgent request. "I am afraid, sir, that you are too extravagant."

He tapped with his heavy wooden stick and looked steadily at the young man who was so bold as to ask for a salary increase. It was this man's pleasure on each occasion, and the opportunity had risen in all his life. He meant to have that rise on—somewhere else.

"Thank you, sir," he replied respectfully. "I haven't any chance to be promoted."

"I might as well," said Drifter, "as get a drink of water. I would dry up there in Texas unless I could get within sound of the ocean's roar, so Drifter did the best he could. He went about five miles from the city, at a place called Arlington. The trolley cars ran there, and the company made a grant on the condition that if Drifter would be satisfied if I could spend a few hours in a sailboat out there. At any rate, I would see a body of water once again in my life."

"Well, we had our dinner at the hotel," and I said: "Now, Drifter, let us go right out on that lake as quick as possible. I want to see it, and I want to know what direction to walk to the lake, and we walked. We kept on walking, and just as we were about to turn back, and just as a sign of a lake was to be seen, a trolley car came along the tracks, and the trolley line, and asked one of the railroad men where the Arlington lake was. "Oh," he said, "I guess they have not turned the water on yet. It is not there," and he turned the water on. A crowd. Last Sunday there was a big excursion, then you could have seen the lake full of water."

"Turn the water on," I exclaimed. "I thought they had turned the water on and pond lilies and all that sort of thing?"

"No," he said, "no," said the trolley man, "but you know it's pretty dry country around here, and they have to waste water on that lake unless there's a crowd." Drifter bristled up and said: "What we want to know is where the lake is and when there is any water."

"The trolley man was accommodating. He walked along with us, took us up to the lake, he called it the Trinity lake, and he told us to get on the ground about 50 yards around, and as dry as the hotel porch. Of course, I was amused, but nevertheless disappointed."

"I thought," said Drifter, "I will make you for a sail on the Trinity River tomorrow afternoon. They are talking now of running a line of boats up the Trinity river, and I will be the first to take the line. I will get on a real big excursion

"For the next week of two Trinity River navigation was thoroughly arrested in the Texas papers. As near as I could make out, the principal difficulty seemed to be that they were clearing the river of snags. I had long suspected that some hoop No. 2 had got into Dallas, and I fairly revelled in the anticipation of a trip on the broad bosom of the Trinity. Then the newspapers began to print columns about the 'mad' snags, and it was reported that the Texas boats were tied up, owing to the

A Budget of News from the Town on the Trent

The Roman Catholic congregation have just completed a fine set of shells as are to be found in the whole diocese. They will be presented to the altar.

Mr. Fred. Boudry is planning a gallery of iron roof on the grain mill.
It adds not only to its appearance, but immensely to its durability.
Experts say that Mr. Gordon's St.
Bernard, "Buffalo Bill" would have taken second prize in Toronto, and that the exhibitor getting first only got because she was a constant exhibitor.
Both Gordon's and another dog were said to have better points than Bills.

A traveler who has just made a tour of the Midland District, says that the three nearest, prettiest and best arranged shores he saw on his travels were Madill Bros., Lakefield; E. P. Coff, Norwood; and J. J. English, Hastings.
He might have added that while Mr.
English's store is as neatly arranged as either of the other two mentioned it is as big as both combined.

Mr. Gordon has just completed the work on the dam. It only took him five weeks, and about twenty-five men were employed. The dam has been very much improved and the work reflects great credit on Mr. Gordon and his men.

The Times wishes to correct a couple of errors which crept into the writing. Mr. Huxley learned his trade at Hastings, not Toronto; and the Clarendon
Hotel is larger than the Cloughlin House.

The Times is still adding to its circulation in Hastings. It is the result of the old time of Hastings, and especially of its local political battles. If Mr. P. Brennan, who for years ran a hotel in the first building erected in the village, where the Clarendon now stands, what a story he could tell. Mr. Brennan, by the way, is an old Peterborough boy, having landed there from the "old sod" at the age of sixteen. At twenty-six he came to Hastings, where he has remained for the past thirty-four years. He could probably tell his time for he now owns the Royal Hotel, the Parmenter and a new residence.

The fishing season in Hastings has been a prosperous one. Two factors contributed to this—the Clarendon Hotel and Con. Service. Fishing around Hastings without Con is like "Homer" without the Prince of Denmark. Nine years ago he started in as a guide.
This year he has already taken out fifty-five parties. He knows the waters from Rice Lake to Healey's Falls like a back. In fact when the Government wanted the channel from the lake to Hastings bargued, Con had to do the work. To his other qualifications he adds that of cook and epicure from all parts of the continent pronounce his fish dinner the best they have ever tasted.

WEST VICTORIA PROTEST

The Examination of Mr. Fox Will Take Place

It will be remembered that on Friday last an appointment was made to examine Mr. Samuel J. Fox by the honourable Judge Dean at Lindsay, and that Mr. Fox attended, but refused to be examined while Mr. Vance, one of the petitioner's counsel was present.
Whether this arose from Mr. Fox's feeling that the discovery he had to make might shock the delicate sen-sibilities of Mr. Vance, who is of tender age, and was officiating as junior counsel, it is impossible to say, but being in the confidence of Mr. Fox or his relatives.

We understand that Mr. Fox repudiates the idea that he does not desire to be examined, and that his disappointment at not being examined on Friday has been so great that he has frequently been surprised in tears of frustration as a result.
A motion was made in the Court of Appeal on Monday to commit Mr. Fox to this refusal to obey the order of the court, with a result that an order has been made directing him to attend for examination at his own expense, and to pay the costs of the absolute examination and of the motion in any event.

It is whiggish that Mr. Fox's counsel—Messrs. Hopkins and Francis Drake Moore—have unconsciously placed the heads of the of the of the side by declining without proper excuse to have their client examined, as the petitioner's lawyers have been fighting for further time that Mr.
Vance was present at the examination only to provoke the contempt of the court. Messrs. Moore and Hopkins took and that they swallowed this bait without winking.—Lindsay Post.

STREET AND BRIDGE COMMITTEE

The South Side of Charlotte Street to be Paved—Other Repairs

A meeting of the Street and Bridge Committee was held in the Clerk's office last night, those present being Mayor Davis Langford, Best, McWilliams, W. H. White.

The matter of the paving the south side of Charlotte street was the first thing that came up for discussion and no one present appeared to know who had authorized the contractors to proceed with the work.

Moved by Councillor Langford that the petition being sufficiently signed the sidewalk be built from George st.
to Aylmer st. eight feet wide this year, and then Morris, Nolan and Sheeley be instructed to construct that portion on the same terms as the present contract, provided they will drop the Water and street section if the town decide to both at the same time.

Moved by McWilliams that the town furnish crushed granite for the government constructions for the repairs of the side walk at the post office.
The Street Inspector was instructed to the sidewalk on Aylmer street from Aylmer street to Aylmer street.
Moved by W. H. White that Messrs.
Best, McWilliams and the Mayor be a sub-committee to report in regard to the bridges to be built on Sherbrook and Dalhousie streets.—Carried.

It was decided that street inspector and the engineer make an estimate of the cost of constructing concrete abutments for the bridge over the railway in London street at present width of roadway, 20 feet wide.
The committee adjourned.

THE FINAL SHOT

A Great Temperance Meeting Held at George
St. Church Last Night

The final shot in the phibisette campaign was fired in the George street Methodist church last night, when Mr.
Joseph Gibson, Postmaster of Lindsay delivered a powerful argument in favor of prohibition.

Among those who occupied seats on the platform were Rev. Mr. Shorey, Rev. Mr. Moore and Dr. Fife.

Mr. James Keady occupied the chair and expressed the great pleasure it gave him to be present, and do what he could in the cause of temperance.
Mr. G. W. Mulligan then favored the audience with a solo, which was well received.

Rev. Mr. Shorey here announced that if there were anyone who wished to speak against prohibition they would be granted a half hour to do so. There was no person there on a bluff of the "anti" and the speaker of the evening,
Mr. Gibson, proceeded with his address.

The speaker took up Principal Grant's argument against prohibition, and explained them to the thorough satisfaction of the audience. The revenue question was fully discussed and put in a clear, sensible manner. He was frequently applauded during the delivery of his speech, which was, indeed, a treat to hear.

After Mr. Gibson had concluded his speech the Rev. Mr. Shorey moved a vote of thanks to the speaker, which was seconded by Dr. Fife, and carried.
The meeting closed by singing "God Save the Queen."

Handsome, Beautiful and Becoming are the styles of hair goods as produced by Prof. Dorenwend this season. The fashions of Bangs, Wigs, Switches, etc., are marvels of beauty and every lady should see them. In a few minutes the Prof. can demonstrate what constitutes the essential point in a handsome woman. As he has increased territory to cover he cannot visit here so often as heretofore, so call on him now at the Oriental Hotel on Tuesday, October 4.

Dead in the Hospital
The death of Richard Hales, of Burlington, occurred at the Nicholls hospital yesterday afternoon after a brief illness. Mr. Hales, who was the son of Mr. Wm. Hales, a well-known resident of Burlington, left a short time ago for a trip to the North-west to see the country. On the trip he was taken ill at Winnipeg, and at one home, reaching here on Saturday.
When he arrived here he was taken to the Nicholls hospital, it being thought he was suffering from appendicitis, although it was known that his case was almost past hope. However, an operation was then undertaken, revealed the trouble to be an abscess on the bowels, and death resulted on Tuesday afternoon.

His deceased was a comparatively young man, industrious and respected.
He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his demise. The remains were taken to Burlington for interment.

A Paragon Bobbed
On Saturday or Sunday night last the Methodist paragon at Port Hope was entered by burglars, the family being away. Entrance was made by prying open with a crowbar one of the windows. It appears there was more than one person in the affair, for there seem to have been a regular jollification with what martins and other fruit readily opened and every drawer and closet in the house was ransacked and emptied on the floor. A large quantity of valuable silverware and cutlery was in the house, but none has been missing. Two suits of Mr. Young's clothing was taken, a few of underclothing, a number of sheets and pillow cases, and twelve or fifteen pairs of candied fruit. No money except the contents of the boy's missionary box, was lost. It looks as though the parties must have been drunk or very reckless such a state was the house left in. No arrests have yet been made.

A Park Street Wedding
A pretty wedding in which one of our most popular and highly esteemed young ladies was concerned, took place yesterday, at 12 o'clock the solemn ceremony which united for life John Colin Grant, son of Rev. W. Grant, and Elizabeth, Lizzie Hawthorne Hughes, second daughter of Mr. J. L. Hughes, ex-councillor. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. E. McLeod, pastor of the Gilmore Memorial Baptist Church, Smith, as the family residence, Park lady, in the presence of the immediate relatives and intimate friends of the contracting parties.

The bride was attired in a costume de voyage of marine blue poplin, with garment of velvet of harmonizing hue, and carried a bouquet of bride roses.
Her attire was completed by a smart toque of velvet and mink. She was assisted in the capacity of bridesmaid by Miss Kate Henderson, who was tastefully gowned in blue silk taffeta, wore a large picture hat and carried a bouquet of roses. Mr. McDermid of London, was groomsmen.

After the ceremony the guests enjoyed an elegant wedding dinner, and the handsome presents sent in were duly admitted and the hearty congregations of the assembled guests.
A large number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Grant assembled at the C. P. R. station to see them off on the 2:45 express which they took en route for Ottawa, Montreal and Boston, their bridal tour concluding at New York where they will take residence corner of Sixth avenue and 43rd street, where their numerous friends wish they may enjoy great happiness and prosperity.

CALDER AGAIN NOMINATED

SOUTH ONTARIO TORIES WILL FIGHT JOHN DRYDEN

In Mass Meeting at Whitby It was Decided to Keep the Minister of Agriculture Out of the Seat

Whitby, Ont., Sept. 28.—Charles Calder's nomination by the Executive Committee of the South Ontario Conservative Association the other day was confirmed by a mass meeting of Conservatives held in the Music Hall here yesterday afternoon. J. L. Smith, President of the association was chairman.

Robert Miller, Jr., who has himself been a candidate in opposition to Mr. Dryden twice, was the mover of Mr. Calder's nomination. J. H. Long seconded it.

In accepting Mr. Calder spoke briefly, and expressed the hope that his friends, while doing everything they could to elect him, would do nothing to forfeit the seat should he win it again. The Minister of Agriculture would not step down and out of his position when the people of South Ontario had asked him to do so again, when he will go out.

Mr. Joseph, M.L.A. for Lincoln, spoke briefly, saying he could not resist the temptation to come here and help Mr. Calder to defeat whoever the Government would bring out.

MR. CARSCALLEN'S SPEECH

H. Carscadden, Q.C., M.L.A., Hamilton, referred feelingly to the death of Lieutenant-Governor M. C. Cameron, and he spoke in sympathy for the Conservative party came near overturning the Ontario Government. If they had been as confident then as they are now, Mr. Whitney would be Premier today.

In the middle of his speech Mr. Carscadden presented Mr. Calder with a bouquet of flowers, a pleasing incident that aroused a round of applause.

The Government's policy in the conduct of its department was condemned, as also the centralization of power in the hands of the Liberal Government in this province as evidenced in the control of liquor licensing through commissioners. Concluding, he urged the duty of electing Mr. Calder in this pivotal contest.

MR. FOY'S SPEECH

J. J. Foy, Q.C., M.L.A., for South Toronto, said he was glad to see so many ladies present, not because Mr. Calder was a bachelor, but because they thus showed they had an interest in the election of Mr. Calder. After the coming elections he would be reunited to his bride. The Hardy Government was a dying one. Its majority of six was made up of one Independent Conservative, another was elected by the vote of the remaining officer in West Huron, and under circumstances that would be attacked in the courts, and a third in South Perth would make the Government's majority vanish.

Hamilton and South Ontario had honored themselves in defeating ministers and sending Conservatives to Parliament. Sympathy for Mr. Dryden, should he be defeated in his contest and lose the lucrative position of Minister of Agriculture, would be worked in this election. You are entering this contest with greater confidence than when you elected Mr. Calder before. The whole province is looking to you in this. It was Dryden and defeat; Calder and victory. A resolution of confidence in Whitney as leader of the Conservative party and appreciation of what he has already accomplished was moved by Mr. Johnson, seconded by Walter Coulthard. The motion passed with applause.

MR. WHITNEY'S REMARKS

J. P. Whitney, M.L.A., who was in fine form, spoke for nearly an hour. He complimented the two ridings of Ontario County upon the calibre of the men they elected to support him last March. Referring to the last session of the Legislature, he said, "God forbid I should say anything against Mr. Dryden, but the Minister of Agriculture never did, never can, and never will make such a speech as Calder did this." Regarding the recent election petition trial, naming Mr. Calder, it was a colossal cheek for the Government organs to speak of it as unblushing bribery, when only sixty or seventy dollars were proven to have been spent corruptly, and that was the result of a Grit conspiracy by men steeped in tips in corruption. More money was spent by these men in one election than the Conservatives had spent in half a dozen. Mr. Dryden will have to face the truth about that election yet. The attitude of the Conservative party on the election law was not one of which to be ashamed. He then discussed the constable vote question. No one could, he claimed, put a finger on a Conservative speech in which objection had been taken to constables voting. The question could have been settled quite as quickly by appealing to the Court of Appeal for a decision of the judges in the trial of election petitions as has been done in holding the extra session, costing twenty-five to forty-five thousand dollars. The Conservatives now had seventy-five per cent. of the debating ability in the Legislature. Nothing was more certain than that the days of the Government are numbered. "I am intensely gratified at what I have seen here today, but I have been listening outside and I have heard nothing but that chance of Mr. Calder's election are better than they were in March. When you have elected Calder you will have administered the last mortal blow to the Ontario Government. Then the Government will never meet the Legislature again. When the Conservatives get into power they will not have to go by South Ontario to get a man more capable to fill the office of Minister of Agriculture than Mr. Dryden. Go out with your sleeves rolled up and elect Calder."

The meeting closed with cheers for the Queen, Mr. Whitney, Mr. Calder and South Ontario.

A WHOLE TRIBE WIPED OUT

Up to ten years ago there existed in the Mountains of Northwestern Chihuahua, Mexico, a small remnant of what had been a large and brave tribe of Indians known as the Timoches. They were formerly allies of the Yaquis but confined their fighting to encounters with the various predatory bands of Apaches which roamed through the western portion of the Sierra Madre, devastating and destroying the homes, property and lives of Mexicans and Indians alike. In the many incursions of the Apaches the Timoches had lost a majority of their fighting men, and when by the effort of the Mexican and American forces the Apaches were finally subdued and Geronimo and other savages who for years had been leading them were properly imprisoned, the Timoches settled down in their mountain homes to resume the so-called tribal relations.

Their habitations were mostly to the north of the town of Cuernavaca, Guerrero, and not far from the line of the Chihuahua and Pacific railroad, now building.

Timoches was a little town, which was looked upon as a sort of centre of their stamping ground, and here they had built a church, which was served by a priest from the cathedral at Chihuahua.

The Timoches were different from any other Indians of Western Mexico, generally larger and finely formed; their complexions were light and hair fine and different in color and texture from that of the ordinary Indian. The women, too, were of good figure and face, and in intelligence in advance of the Mexicans. They were most faithful in their religious observances, and were marked for their steady conduct and good citizenship. During the year 1894 the Timoches were visited by a fanatical woman pretender, who, styling herself Santa Teresa, announced herself as having a mission from heaven and that the mission looked to the regeneration of Mexico through her agency. And the Mexican Government sent an officer and a detachment of soldiers to arrest or summarily quell Santa Teresa. The Timoches, acting under her orders, killed the soldiers, and the officer hurried back to Chihuahua to carry the news. Then a large force was sent under the command of a colonel, and he was killed, as well as the greater part of his command.

Then it was found that an agent of the Timoches had arrived in Chihuahua and informed the leaders of the Church party of the success of the revolt, and, thinking this an opportune time to overthrow the liberal party and the reform laws of Juarez, the Church steadily aided and encouraged the Timoches, until the elements of discord became so evident that martial law was declared in that city, and a heavy force of regular troops was despatched to dispose of the recalcitrant Indians.

Meantime Teresa was urging the Timoches to defy the Government, claiming that God was directing her, and that by His help she would cause them to conquer.

The infatuation of the poor creatures, together with the information that the Church party in the city of Chihuahua was about to revolt against the Government, was such that they determined to fight to the end, and threw up entrenchments around their town and provisioned in great quantities the church which stood in the centre of the town.

This was also fortified with great walls of stone, at each entrance port holes were cut, to command the road upon which the soldiers were to come, the women and children of the tribe were brought hither, and upon the attack being made in overwhelming force, a most deadly battle was fought. Having fallen back upon the church, where they had stored extra arms and ammunition, the women were used in loading the guns, and for three days a most gallant defence was made, and hundreds of Mexican soldiers were killed. Finally artillery arrived and a bombardment of the church began. The soldiers were stationed on every side of the church, and the destruction of life after each cannon fire was followed by the yells of dying women and children, but the Indians fought to the last, and one old woman, it is related, stood close to one of the port holes and said words of cheer to her aged husband, and in turn to her five stalwart sons, and when they all fell, she called her two grandsons, boys of twelve and fourteen years of age, to aim the Winchester at the foe, telling them that God had honored their fathers with a glorious end.

The Mexican soldiers embittered by the loss of their comrades, showed no quarter, nor did the brave Timoches ask it. Of the tribes of 72 Timoches but one man exists to-day. Two hundred and sixteen Mexicans were killed and 310 wounded, among whom were several officers. Santa Teresa escaped during the engagement. Several weeks elapsed before quiet was finally restored in Chihuahua, but to this day there are sullen looks and defiant words seen and heard when the "uprising of the Timoches" is spoken of. The church has been rebuilt, and is at present well attended by the newcomers to the section.

AN INDIAN CRADLE SONG.

Bring thee low in thy cradle soft,
Sleep in the dusky wood;
Bring thee low and swing aloft—
Sleep on a poplar bough;
For when in thy little cradle nest
Quiet will come and peace and rest,
If the little poplar is good.

The coyote howls on the prairie cold,
And the owls hoot in the tree,
And the big moon shines on the little nest
As it sways gently.

So swing thee high in thy little nest
And swing thee low and take the rest
That the night wind brings to thee!

Further lies on the fragrant ground,
Dreaming of hunt and fight,
And the pine leaves rustle with mournful cry.

All through the solemn night:
But the little poplar in his birchen nest
Is swinging low as he takes his rest.
Till the sun brings the morning light.

—Southern Workman.

THE DERELICT.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS.

I was second mate of the American brig Ruby, bound from Java to New York, and all had gone well with us for a fortnight, when accident brought about a curious adventure. Just as night was closing down, with the brig sailing along on an even keel and the breeze steady, I swung myself upon the rail to get a look at what seemed to be a raft floating past us. I may have been overcareless or a rope may have given way, but of a sudden I found myself in the water. The man at the wheel witnessed my mishap and gave the alarm and threw me the life preserver always ready for such an emergency, and I had no doubt of being picked up within ten minutes. I had seized the float, when down thundered a black squall from out of the west, and next moment it was as dark as midnight and the sea all in a chop. I felt that it was all over with me then. The men would be lucky to bring the brig through the fierce squall without thinking of me. Indeed, if she had had 100 men on board instead of 12, they would not have dared to lower a boat. I got just one glimpse of the craft as she shot away into the darkness and then began to work to get the life preserver under my arm. I was buffeted and knocked about in the most confusing manner, and had the squall lasted five minutes longer I should have been drowned on the surface. It passed away as suddenly as it came, and ten minutes later the sea had calmed down, and I was floating with my head well out of the water.

I had gone overboard at about 7 o'clock in the evening. For the first three hours my hopes and fears made me alert, but by and by I felt a dull languor and was only half conscious of what was going on. An hour after midnight I was suddenly aroused from what seemed to be a troubled dream. I was bawling against something hard, and my first idea was that I had been cast ashore. It took me several minutes to shake myself together and make out that I was alongside the hull of a vessel. I was hard to credit the fact, but fact it was, and when I realized it I had scarcely more to do than lift up my hands and raise the low rail and draw myself aboard. I had found a derelict brig. Both masts were gone close to the deck, much of her bulwarks swept away, and I knew by the feel of her that she was waterlogged. I took one glance over her and no more, but dumped myself down on the deck and was asleep in five seconds. When I opened my eyes, the sun was an hour high, and a big albatross was poised directly above me and not 50 feet high. It did not take me long to master the details of the wreck. In the first place, she was loaded with Australian redwood and could not sink beyond a certain point; next, she had been floating about for months and months. There was some wreckage on her deck, but masts and yards and boats and binnies had gone clear off her all her copper bolts were only a few inches above water, but owing to the buoyant cargo she could not sink deeper.

As a sailor I made her out to be a French craft, and later on I discovered that she was the Marie of Breton. She was a small craft, carrying a crew of eight or nine men, and was a forecastle ship instead of having a deckhouse for the men. The cabin or cook's galley had gone overboard with the rest, but the doors of the cabin and the scuttle to the forecastle were tightly closed. The brig had been wrecked aloft in squall or gale and had at the same time sprung a leak. Whether her crew had been washed overboard or taken to the boats there was no means of telling until I had made an investigation below.

The first thing was to get something to eat and drink. After a few minutes' work I broke open the cabin doors and got into the pantry. There was wine in plenty, as might have been expected, and I soon came across some meat and biscuits in tins. I wanted water, but there was none to be had, and so, taking what I could lay hands on, I went on deck and made a fair meal. When this had been concluded, I returned to the cabin for an overhaul. All the charts and nautical instruments were there, nor had any of the spare clothing of captain or mates been taken away. I found the logbook, and though I could not read French I made out the latitude and longitude last recorded. As near as I could figure it out the brig was then midway between Australia and the Cape, and the date was nearly seven months old. She had drifted to every point of the compass, but must have drifted nearly 2,000 miles to the north to reach the spot where I found her. It was soon after I began an examination of the pantry to see how I should keep my provisions. I found four, which, when I began to open them, I found to be of excellent quality. There were biscuits, tins of condensed milk, and other articles in the pantry—enough to last me for some time. I found that the cabin I was in was the cabin of the captain, and in which I found a small box of tools and a few barrels of cannon flour, dried fish, beans, coffee, tea and other articles of food for the men. Forward of this were the water casks, a dozen or more, and all full. When I came to examine the forecastle, I found boots, clothing, canteens, to prove that they had not gone away in the boat. Indeed I was sure before I had half concluded my investigation that every man had perished when the brig was wrecked. It was night before I had finished, and I tumbled into the captain's berth and never slept more soundly. You may think it queer that during the day I had scarcely glanced around the horizon and given no thought to rescue, and that I went to bed with a contented mind, but sailors are prone to take luck as it comes, good or bad. I had made a miraculous escape and was fairly safe on the wreck, and there was nothing to worry over if not taken off for weeks. Interested as I was in overhauling the stranger, I would not have tossed up a penny to be taken off by a passing vessel.

When morning came again I made a more thorough investigation of the cabin. In rear of the captain's stateroom I chanced upon a closet which had escaped me the day before, and here I made a great find. There was about $1,000 in French gold and notes, $1,200 in English goldpieces and about $7,000 in goldpieces just struck off at the Australian mints. The money was in two tin boxes, but whether it belonged to the ship, her captain or to other people I could not determine. It was a big fortune to a poor sailor, and I remember that I acted very foolishly over the find. I counted it over and over again, and when I at last realized that I was rich I rushed on deck, with a wild hope of seeing a sail close at hand. But for the money I believe that the long days and nights which followed would have been rather contentful for me, isolated as the situation was. I had plenty to eat and drink, there was nothing to break my sleep, the wreck might drive where she would, but there was no danger of her going down. The discovery of the money was followed by a hope of rescue, and this again by worry and anxiety. I wanted to go ashore to enjoy my wealth. I feared that when rescue did come I should be robbed. I conjured up a thousand senseless fears, and the upshot was anything but beneficial. I have spoken of the general situation in a careless way. As a matter of fact, being a navigator, I took observations regularly when the weather permitted and picked off the drift of the wreck on the chart. On the average the weather was fine, but there were days and nights when gale and sea tumbled the waterlogged craft about until only a sail or could have lived through it. Instead of lifting her the waves ran over her, and at such times the decks were two feet under water and the cabin was flooded. The cargo was afloat with the water in the hold, and as the wreck rolled and pitched the timbers rubbed together and produced noises which would have frightened landmen into fits.

I kept an accurate reckoning, and I had been on the wreck just 48 days when I caught sight of my first sail. No doubt ships had passed and repassed me by day and night, but I could get no signal by day and from the first I slept all through the night. This sail was discovered early one morning, coming up from the south, and her course was such that she must see me. I had put the money into bags and the bags into bundles of clothing in view of a rescue, and therefore had nothing to do but wait. The stranger, which proved to be an English merchantman bound for India, but considerably off her course, was within four miles of me and had at a signal to gladden my heart when a big whale suddenly broke water close to the wreck. He was followed half a minute later by a second, which attacked him with great fury. The monster put up a terrific battle, leaping and biting each other and kicking up a sea like a gale of wind. They at first drew away from me, but after a few minutes made a stroke which brought them back. What I had feared from the first came to pass after a quarter of an hour. Half blinded by pain and fury, or feeling half overmatched and desirous of getting away, one of the whales suddenly whirled about and came for the wreck head on. He was fully 50 feet long, and he came like a moving mountain. I made sure of my hold as I saw him coming, but he struck the wreck on her port side with such force that I was thrown across the deck and into the sea beyond. I heard the crash of planks and timbers, was tossed about by the waves, rubbed against the whale as he sounded and reached the surface to find the wreck a hull no longer. It was simply a heap of floating debris. The strange ship drew nearer, lowered a boat, and I was picked up as I clung to a plank. The money was gone, all else but the timbers which composed the cargo had disappeared, and my adventure, surprising as it had begun, had ended in a manner strange enough to satisfy even the most imaginative novelist. I was carried to India by the rescuing ship, and I know that the French consul at Calcutta set inquiries on foot regarding the fate of the crew of the Marie. What they amounted to I never learned, but have always felt satisfied that all perished when their craft was dismasted. But for the fight between the whales I believe the brig could have been pumped out and sailed into port, but fortune is a jade who robs Jack far faster often than she smiles upon him.

A Friendly Fable.

Jinks—What! You don't mean to say you are engaged to the beautiful Miss de Pink?

Blanks—Yes I do. Got engaged to her last night. This afternoon I am to bring her into town. She wants to go to an optician's, I believe. Few pair of glasses or something. She is magnificent, you know.

Jinks—I say, old fellow, just stop round to that optician's and take him out to give the lady better glasses than she has.—London Tit-Bits.

LEARY'S LIVERY,

The Dipper or the Dropper?

There are cough medicines that are taken as freely as a drink of water from a dipper. They are cheap medicines. Quantity does not make up for quality. It's the quality that cures. There's one medicine that's dropped, not dipped—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There's more power in drops of this remedy than in dipperful of cheap cough syrups and elixirs. It cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Colds, Coughs, and affections of the Throat and Lungs.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

A Snap
We have just secured a very large number of stereoscopic views, which we will sell at five cents each. Our collection is the best shown anywhere. We invite intending purchasers to come early and make a selection while they can be had at such a low price. Times Bookstore, Peterborough.

Handsome, Beautiful and Becoming are the styles of hair goods as produced by Prof. Dorenwend this season. The hair styles of Bangs, Wigs, Switches, etc., are marvels of beauty and every lady should see them. In a few minutes the Prof. can demonstrate what a good hairdresser he is. As he has increased territory to cover he cannot visit here so often as heretofore, so call on him now at the Oriental Hotel on Tuesday, October 4.

A Talented Company
Only a fair audience greeted the eminent actor, Paul Casanova, and his talented company last night, when they performed at the Oriental Hotel. The company, consisting of "The Casanova Troupe," one of the best dramatic troupes in the world, was presented for the second time this week. Paul Casanova is supported by a strong cast, whose clever handling of high-class drama and comedies is deserving of the most liberal patronage, and it is to be hoped that the crowded houses will give this strong galaxy of historic talent for the remainder of the week.

Dr. Murray's Experience
One day during the week as Mr. R. Londerville was paddling Mr. Duncan Johnson, of Hiawatha, and Dr. Murray, of Baltimore, from Hiawatha, to Idyl Wyld, Dr. Murray's hat blew off and as he reached for it suddenly the canoe was almost overturned, half filling with water.
As the water came in one side Mr. Londerville leaped out the other and hastily swimming to the stern of the canoe, seized it and preserved the balance. Remaining in this position he swam towards land, pushing the canoe ahead of him.
When it is stated that Dr. Murray is unable to swim a stroke the manner in which the situation affected him can be more easily imagined than described. After progressing for some time in this manner a boat put out from land and took in both passengers. Mr. Londerville, when returning to Hiawatha secured a fresh supply of provisions, those which he was taking to Idyl Wyld in the first place being wet through.
Mr. Londerville's presence of mind and brave action no doubt saved the lives of his passengers and the matter should be brought to the notice of the Royal Humane Association.

The best medicine you can take is that which builds a solid foundation for health in pure, rich blood—Hood's Sarsaparilla.

IT WAS OPENING DAY

The Peterborough Central Exhibition From 10c to 50c a Big Success

Beautiful weather favored the Central Exhibition on its opening day and if the next two days continue to be as fine the exhibition of 1898 will likely go on record as the most successful in years.

Yesterday was of course chiefly confined to the placing of exhibits, etc., and arranging all other minor details necessary in such cases.

From early morning the farmers from the surrounding townships could be seen coming in with their numerous exhibits and the road to the exhibition grounds presented a rather unusually busy appearance.

On the grounds everything is in a state of preparation for the grand opening today. The various enterprising exhibitors and manufacturers have been engaged in getting things into shape in a manner to be most attractive. The early man and the fair each have their space picked out and waiting impatiently for the visitors they will victimize today.

Secretary Green is a busy man and is greatly pleased with the prospect for the number of entries is any criterion as to the general extent of the exhibition it will certainly be a record breaker, for there are over 2500 entries already in, a much larger number than ever before.

The grounds are in good order and the work in excellent condition for the opening in the ring, and some warm events are anticipated.

The exhibits of horses, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry are very heavy while the market garden stuff and other fancy work are reported to have surpassed anything in the history of the Society as to quantity and quality.

A notable feature inside the building is the home-made bread. The number of exhibitors in this line being surprising.

The school children will have possession of the grounds today, they having been granted an all holiday for the occasion.

At one o'clock the exhibition will be formally opened by the Hon. J. I. Tarte, and the ceremony will be of the most elaborate style.

Today's programme will be as follows—

FRIDAY, SEPT. 30.
9.00 a.m.—Grounds and main building open to the public.
10.00 a.m.—Judging of live stock commences.
1.00 p.m.—The exhibition will be formally opened by Hon. J. I. Tarte, Minister of Public Works.
2.00 p.m.—Speeding in the ring. Events: Half-Mile purse, $100; 2.40 trot, purse, $125.
2.00 p.m.—The Anglo-American troupe commence their performance in front of the grand stand.

SATURDAY, OCT. 1.
8.00 a.m.—Grounds and main building open to the public.
9.00 a.m.—Judging continues.
1.30 p.m.—Performance by the Anglo-American troupe commences.
2.00 p.m.—Speeding in the ring. Events: Mile run purse, $100; free-for-all, purse, $175.

A SMALL VOTE POLLED
Peterborough Gives 687 for, and 499 Against Prohibition

The voting on the plebiscite yesterday was very quiet and the vote polled was so small that it showed conclusively that the great majority of the electors took little or no interest in the question. Out of a total of 3,000 votes by Peterboro only 1,156 votes were polled, being less than 50 per cent.

The returns from the neighboring municipalities are given as minutes after the polls closed last night, and the returns for the Dominion will not be completed for a day or so at least.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL
Messrs. George Fowler, and R. Rudy, barrister, of Millbrook, were in town yesterday.

Mrs. Barnett of Renfrew is visiting her daughter, Mrs. C. B. McAllister of "The Pine."

Miss Maggie Flaherty, Water street, left Wednesday for Rochester, where she will reside in future.

Mr. Perry Owens and Miss McCollum were in Millbrook yesterday taking part in an entertainment under the auspices of St. Thomas' church.

Mr. and Mrs. George Leach and child of Millbrook are in town for a few days the guest of the latter's father Mr. R. Mills, Charlotte st.

Mr. Wm. Bennett, is in town with his trotting horse "Looking Glass" and will make a prominent part in the races at the exhibition.

Mrs. Ames and Miss Stevens, who have been visiting friends in Montreal for the last week or so, returned to town Wednesday evening. Mrs. Ames is going through to Toronto.

Miss Lucy McAllister leaves tomorrow for New York, where she will resume her duties in connection with hospital nursing. Miss McAllister has been recuperating after an attack of illness.

Mr. Wm. Parquet, of Denver, Col., spent a few days with his sister-in-law Mrs. Heuback, Bethune street. He has been visiting many parts of Canada including Ottawa, Quebec and Montreal and is now on his way to Chicago, where he will meet Mr. and Mrs. Heuback, who left yesterday to visit their daughter, Mrs. J. H. Pearce.

FOR GOOD BUTTER

A Movement to Establish a Factory at Westwood

For some time the feeling against the quality of butter made by the old-fashioned style has been becoming quite apparent and the people of this district are at last awakening to the fact that the most modern means of manufacturing this ever needful article must be adopted.

On Wednesday night a large and representative audience of the dairying class, assembled in the town hall, at Westwood to discuss the advisability of starting a creamery for that section of the county. Messrs. Ryan and Thompson, proprietors of the Westwood and Shearer cheese factories are the promoters of the scheme and they have every reason to be satisfied with the support they received at the meeting Wednesday night.

The chair was occupied by Mr. Harrison and with him on the platform were Mr. Thomas Blezzard, M. P. P., John Lang, M. P., James Whitten of Belleville, Mr. James McAdams, representing R. A. Lester & Co., Limited, Montreal, and J. W. Moore of town.

The chairman in his opening remarks briefly laid before those present the object of the meeting and hoped that before long Westwood would possess an up-to-date creamery.

Mr. Thomas Blezzard, M. P. P., gave a good half hour address in which he stated that Westwood cheese foundry was one of the best to be found and had averaged the highest price last season of any factory in the province. He thought that the butter industry could be made as just as big a success and felt confident it would, if this new industry were established, as creamery butter had come to stay.

Mr. James Whitten, of Belleville, the speaker of the evening was then introduced. He is the pioneer cheese and butter maker of Ontario. He fully outlined the reasons by which practical dairying is carried on in the Dominion and dwelt very strongly on the necessity of taking better care of the dairy cow. He touched on every point pertaining to the welfare of dairying in this country and offered an excellent address with an appeal to the farmers of that vicinity to make a move in the matter immediately.

Mr. Joseph McAdams, representing the R. A. Lester & Co. of Montreal, manufacturers of the celebrated Alexander Cream Separator, and other dairy supplies, fully endorsed what Mr. Whitten had said and explained the matter in his own words. He spoke strongly on the care of the dairy cow, the manner in which she should be housed and fed so as to make dairying a source of revenue to the country.

J. W. Moore, supply dealer of Peterboro also spoke on the matter and urged upon those present the necessity of such an industry being established there.

Mr. Harrison moved a vote of thanks to the speakers for their very instructive addresses. Mr. Blezzard seconded the motion which was carried amid great applause.

A vote was then taken on the advisability of putting in a butter plant and the support it received was indeed encouraging. A factory with modern machinery will undoubtedly be established at Westwood in the near future.

A number of other places throughout this district are taking the matter in hand and meetings will be held in the Lang factory, Ottonagare, on Friday night, and Smith Monday and Carletonville on Tuesday.

Strickland-Peck Nuptials
Lafayette society were out in force yesterday attending the very pretty wedding in the home of St. John the Baptist of Miss Alice Maud Strickland, eldest daughter of Mr. J. P. Strickland, and Mr. John Henry Peck, of Vancouver, B. C.

The church was very prettily decorated with flowers, vines and autumn leaves. As the bridal party entered the church the organist, Miss Atwood played the wedding march and as they approached the altar Rev. Geo. Warren, the incumbent, was in readiness to receive them in the holy bonds of matrimony.

The bride was neatly attired in a national blue broadcloth travelling suit, with white chiffon pleating on the front of the bodice, and wore a black velvet picture hat, trimmed with velvet and plumes, and carried a handsome bouquet of cream roses.

The bridesmaids were her sisters Misses Josephine and Katy Strickland, who were very prettily attired, wearing black velvet picture hats, and carrying small bouquets of pink roses. A little niece of Miss Strickland from Montreal was the maid of honor.

The groom was supported by Mr. Stewart and Mr. E. R. Tate. To the strains of the wedding march the wedding party left the church and repaired to the residence of the bride's father, where an elegant wedding breakfast was served.

After receiving hearty congratulations from their numerous friends, the happy pair left for their future home in Vancouver, B. C.

The bride is a general favorite and will be greatly missed from society circles. Among the guests at distance at the wedding were Mr. R. A. Strickland, West Drayton, England; Mrs. Walter D. E. Strickland, Toronto; Mrs. D. E. Strickland, Strickland, Montreal; Mr. Edward A. Peck, Ashburnham; the Misses Collins, Peterboro; Mr. H. T. Strickland, Mrs. Beatty, Mrs. Eden and Mr. Frank Eden, Ashburnham.

SPORTING NOTES
What is Going on Local and Outside Sporting Circles

The Peterboro and Orillia series of games during the past season has resulted in perplexing even the oldest followers of Canadian Lacrosse Association lacrosse. A good many people want to know just how the great rivals stand. In the first place the teams entered the intermediate series and the senior series. In the intermediate division the clubs were scheduled in the Northeastern district along with Beauport and Midland, Orillia and Peterboro tied for the district championship and the former club won the play-off at the Island on this day, last night. Since then Orillia has gone on in the semi-finals of the intermediate series, playing as champions of the Northeastern district against Markham, the Midland district champions. Orillia with the championship of both the Northeastern and Midland districts by securing the most games in home and home matches with Markham, and are now in the final round with Fenwick. Northwestern district champions, Home and home games will settle the championship, the team winning the greatest number of goals in the two contests to be declared intermediate champions. It is understood Shelburne will drop out of the running. Shelburne with the Grey district championship. In the senior championship series Orillia and Peterboro were to play home and home games after the completion of the intermediate series schedule, the club securing the greatest number of points to oppose Seaforth, the winners of the Western division. The first game was played in Orillia, the home team gaining a margin of 3 goals. The second game was played at Peterboro, ending in a disgraceful fight. The C.L.A. Council at its last meeting considered a protest against this match, with the result that the game was ordered to be played over again at Seaforth yesterday, but as Peterboro declined the issue, Orillia has won the game by default and will now meet Seaforth in the final game for the championship of the senior series. Orillia is an odds on favorite in the intermediate division, and many think Seaforth will lose the championship to the fast Northerners.—Toronto News.

RUGBY.
The local rugby boys are getting into shape and are indulging in some good hard practice. The Argonauts have sent word that they cannot be here on Saturday as was arranged a few days ago, but a big effort is being made to secure another team for the date. On a week from Saturday the town club goes down to Port Hope to try conclusions with the senior Trinity College school team. The boys will hold a practice on the Nicholls park at five o'clock this afternoon, and a full attendance is requested.

SINCE THE TROLLEY'S COME TO TOWN.

Ring out the loud homages and do the job up brown. For as late we have a trolley a-running through the town. The farmers stop their haying and wonder at the sight. For the way the cars go shooting is a revelation quite. Their clanging and their bustling all other noises drown. For they make an awful racket a-running through the town.

The old town doesn't seem the same. It's mighty bright and gay. And every one can celebrate its resurrection day. 'Twas buried many years ago, and buried good and deep. But now it's awakened from its Rip Van Winkle sleep. And every hour of the day the cars run up and down. And every one is tickled now the trolley's come to town.

There's two new heroes a-going up, excited and a-mild. And a mild form of parents seems to permeate the air. The benefits to be derived here surely mean. While real estate has risen to fifteen cents a foot. And all the wimmin folks have bought a brand new main gown. For they're bound to cut a figure now the trolley's come to town.

AN EERIE EPISODE.

It was at a masquerade at Galinber's studio in one of the old Roman palaces. There were music, the tripping sound of dancing feet, laughter and the unintelligible hum of conversation mingled in a gay medley.

Carson, an American, a new arrival in the city and a stranger to that colony of sculptors and painters, had been accidentally separated from the friend who brought him in the crowd shortly after his entrance to the ballroom.

He was wandering listlessly among the merry maskers, quite regardless of their gibes and laughter at his expense. Tired at length of his aimless peregrinations, he turned aside from the glaring lights and beat to the shade and coolness of the balcony.

The wide casements at the end of the room were open and gave an unobstructed view of the kaleidoscopic scene within. A divan near the balustrade offered a place for repose, but it was not until he was seated that he was aware of the presence of a lady. She occupied the farther end of the divan and was partially concealed by the drooping tresses and palms with which the balcony was decorated. She moved slightly in her nest of tricolored cushions, and her fan fell with a slight clatter upon the stone floor.

Carson picked it up and gave it to her with a courteous bow. She thanked him, speaking in English, with just the slightest Italian accent.

"I fear that I am intruding, signora," he said.

"Not so. The balcony is free to all who come. There can be no intrusion."

She reached up her hand as she spoke and pushed aside the feathery branches that swayed between them. Then he saw that she was young and very fair to look upon.

Her face was decidedly English. She wore an indescribable swathing garment of soft texture that was gathered up closely about her neck and fell to her feet in long, clinging folds—strongly suggestive of a Bernhardt costume.

Two beautifully shaped arms were bare to the shoulder, and the small hands that lay in her lap looked as though they had been molded in wax.

She leaned back, resting her head upon the stuccoed pillar, her fan waving languidly to and fro.

"Permit me," said the American, taking the dainty lace and ivory trifle from her hand and fanning her gently.

She smiled a gracious assent, and then began talking.

It was so warm in the ballroom and one grew so tired dancing, she said. Did the gentleman dance? Perhaps he was not acquainted with many ladies—a stranger in Rome? Was he an artist or a sculptor?

"Neither, signora. I am an attaché."

"From what country—England?"

"No—America."

"America! Ah, that marvelous land!" She chatted on in an open, friendly manner until a bevy of tired dancers invaded their retreat. Among them was his friend Tarro.

"Great heavens, Carson! Where have you been? I have looked everywhere for you. Everybody is unmasking, and it is time for supper. No doubt you are starving. Come, I have secured a table, and you are to meet some charming women. What have you been doing here all alone? It was exceedingly stupid in us to get separated."

"I have not been alone," replied Mr. Carson. He glanced around, but the lady was gone.

"Not alone? Why, who was with you?"

"The lady. Did you not see her when you came?"

"A scorpion, my dear boy. I saw no lady. No, you sat there mooning, staring in a most sentimental manner at that Moorish lantern hanging over there. Come along. They are waiting for us."

They lingered long over their supper. There were merry, high pitched talking and much laughter, but Carson was not in a state of hilarity. His restless, bored glance wandered over the assembly, and once he started and turned sharply in his chair at the low voice of a woman who, with her escort, passed close beside him.

Tarro tried to rally him on his abstraction, but his brow contracted fretfully, and he nervously fingered a spray of flowers that lay by his plate. He was not sorry when the ball was over and he found himself on the pavement outside of the palace.

A cab was waiting, but without knowing why he declined to accompany his friend, saying he preferred to walk to his hotel. He wandered along slowly, with bowed head, absently staring at the dim shadows cast by the waning moon. As he was passing across the Piazza de Farnese he heard a low voice speaking:

"So we meet again!"

He halted. She, his new acquaintance, was beside him.

"Signora! You here at this hour and alone? Where are your friends?"

She smiled. "You will walk with me to the street below, will you not?"

"Certainly. But your friends—their carelessness is criminal."

They walked through the square and down several streets almost in silence. Presently she stopped before the entrance of a house.

"Here, signora!" she said.

Almost simultaneously she swayed forward and caught his arm, at the same time uttering a smothered cry.

"You are hurt!" he exclaimed anxiously. "You have twisted your ankle on those wretched stones."

"I fear so." She pressed her hand upon her bosom and looked into his eyes with mute appeal.

He stooped and gathered her up into his arms. "I will carry you. Which door?"

"The fourth," she replied, her face flushing at the light of the early day fall upon it.

A drowsy janitor answered his ring. He ascended the first flight of stairs without pausing, carrying her as a sure night a child, happy at the delicious touch of her bare arms against his neck as she clasped him.

On the second flight ascent was not easy. Her weight grew heavier, and the head that had now fallen on his shoulder pressed like a ball of iron, her arms were relaxing their clasp and lay against his neck with startling coldness. She seemed to be letting herself go, and at each step grew heavier in proportion.

He was no longer carrying a limousine maiden, but something burdensome and horrible—something that was bearing him down and suffocating him with a sensation as though his chest was bursting.

On the third landing he felt her slipping.

"Signora," he faltered.

He sought to renew his hold, but the burden, now a dead weight, slid from his arms, and she fell with a heavy thud to the floor.

"What noise is this?" called a masculine voice in Italian.

Carson began a hasty explanation to the man, whose head protruded from a partially open door.

The man came forward and bent over her.

"She does not belong here," he said. "She is a stranger. She is pale as death. Unfasten her clothing. She must have fainted. Where is the janitor? The fool! He never is here when he is needed. Call him, signor, and send for a physician."

His hasty hand broke the knot of ribbon that confined her bodice. With a wild exclamation he instantly loosened his hold on her dress and started backward. The full throat and white bust were exposed. There were deep bluish purple bands around the throat and a gaping dagger wound, dark with coagulated blood, on the snowy bosom.

Their cries aroused the janitor, who hastened to call the police. Presently he returned, penning up the stairs, accompanied by an officer. Carson drew aside the curtain, and the bright light of day fell upon the body.

"Holy Virgin!" cried the policeman as he saw the dead woman.

"Can you identify her?" asked Carson.

"Yes," returned the man. "She is the woman who was found murdered on the Corso night before last. How came she here?"—M. M. Halm in Argos.

His Wife Won.

A Georgia man, who was newspaper in his community, insured his life for $3,000. He took the policy home to his wife and said:

"Maria, here's a life insurance document for $3,000."

"Thank you, dear," said his wife. "How are you feeling today?"

"Not well," he replied, "and I don't think I am long for this world, and I want to say to you that when I die it is my wish that you devote $1,000 of the money to defraying my funeral expenses."

"Mercy on me," exclaimed the wife, "why do you want such an expensive funeral?"

"I'll explain. I'm perfectly satisfied that nobody will attend my funeral, and I want to hire people to go as much as a head. I'm going out today and see what arrangements I can make for attendants on that forthcoming melancholy occasion. If just hired 'em an give me an order on you for the money."

He went forth and at nightfall returned with a dejected look.

"Maria," he said, "it's no use. You can have the whole $3,000. Just go to my funeral yourself."—Atlanta Const.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

THOS. F. BAYARD DEAD

ONE OF THE ABLEST OF UNCLE SAM'S STATESMEN GONE

Death Took Place at the Home of His Daughter, Mrs. S. D. Warren, Dedham, Mass.

Dedham, Mass., Sept. 28.—After an illness of over six weeks, Hon. Thos. F. Bayard, the first ambassador from this country to Great Britain, died at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon at Karlstein, the summer residence of his daughter, Mrs. Samuel D. Warren. His death was without pain and the distinguished citizen merely passed to a state of unconsciousness and then into the great unknown. His wife, his two daughters, Mrs. Warren and Miss Florence Bayard, his son, Thomas F. Bayard, Jr., saw him draw his last breath, while his third daughter, the Countess Lauenburg, was on her way to Dedham.

The remains were taken back to his native state, Delaware, and the funeral services will be held Saturday in the old Swedish Church at Wilmington.

AN ILLUSTRIOUS ANCESTRY.

Thomas Francis Bayard was a distinguished member of an eminent family. Since long before the revolutionary war times the Bayards have been prominent in the country's history as patriots and statesmen, and have acquired national fame as jurists. Nicholas, the first ancestor to come to America, a son of an Amsterdam merchant, though of French Huguenot extraction, and a nephew of Governor Stuyvesant, was secretary of the Province of New York in 1672.

Four members of the Bayard family have had Senatorial honors bestowed upon them by the little State of Delaware. Thomas Francis Bayard, his father, James Ashton Bayard, his grandfather of the same name, the uncle, Richard Henry Bayard. His grandfather's father, Governor Bassett of Delaware, was also the recipient of Senatorial honors.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

Thomas Francis Bayard was born in Wilmington, Del., Oct. 29, 1826, and was admitted to the bar in 1851. When the war of the rebellion began, Mr. Bayard was pursuing his profession. With the first intimation of war, the people of Wilmington set about establishing means of self-protection. A militia company was organized, and Thomas F. Bayard was elected its captain. In June 1861, the famous peace meeting of the citizens was held in Dover, and Lieut. Bayard was one of the principal speakers. He denounced the war, and his remarks on that occasion have been quoted in late years as an argument against his availability as a Presidential candidate.

Meanwhile, Mr. Bayard's popularity in his native state kept growing rapidly, and in 1868 he was elected to succeed his father in the United States Senate, and subsequently twice re-elected. In the Democratic convention of 1884, in which Mr. Cleveland was nominated for President, Mr. Bayard received the largest vote next to the successful candidate on two ballots with the result that he was elected. In the national election of 1894 was positively known. Mr. Bayard was the first Democratic Statesman invited to consult with President-elect Cleveland, and it was generally understood that he was the first offered a place in the new Cabinet. He finally accepted the State portfolio.

At the close of Mr. Cleveland's administration, Mr. Bayard returned to private life and to his legal profession. In March 1893, Mr. Bayard was appointed Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and served during Mr. Cleveland's second term.

THE BONES OF COLUMBUS' TAMPONERED WITH

Havana, Sept. 28.—Mystery and secrecy surround all the official acts of the Spanish Government. Especially was this the case in exhuming the remains of Columbus, and this fact has caused much unfavorable comment, and given rise to grave rumors, which, though unconfirmed, appear to have some foundation, as there has been no attempt at denial from any source. The removal of the remains, which should certainly have been a public ceremony, was veiled in the deepest mystery, and was effected behind the closed doors of the cathedral, which was guarded by an armed force. Few of the authorities were present, the names of those who were to attend being handed to the chief of police the night before in sealed envelopes, and the chief of police suggested that communications would be made by the press upon the secrecy of the proceedings, and asked whether it would be advisable to all representatives of the papers to be present. This General Blanco emphatically refused to accede, telling the chief of police to limit himself exclusively to the list of guests that had been handed to him.

No official account of the ceremony or statements regarding the condition of the remains has been published, but it has leaked out from an almost authoritative source that they are not in exactly the same condition as they were placed in the niche. When the remains were placed in the museum a small casket was enclosed, containing coins, gold and silver medals, precious stones, and rolls of parchment, as was then the custom upon the occasion of a burial. It appears that this casket has been tampered with, and rifled of its contents, and further, that the only portions of the remains are left. Gossip, scandal and speculation are rife, the exact truth of which the authorities made no effort to affirm or contradict.

Further explanation, however, is to the effect that secrecy was given to the ceremony because a cable dispatch received here reported that General Toral had been murdered in Madrid the day before, and fears were entertained that disorders might occur if the public and military came together in great numbers. Some of the more rabid Spaniards go to the length of saying that the whole ceremony was a farce.

THE DROUGHT IN ENGLAND.

London, Sept. 29.—Owing to the extraordinary drought traffic on the Grand Junction canal between London and Birmingham is seriously impeded. The supply of water is so low that only half loads can pass along in boats, and traffic on the Aylesbury and Wendover branches of the canal is entirely stopped. Such shortness of water has not been known for half a century. On the London and Northwestern Railway at Bletchley the supply of water is exhausted and engines are being taken six miles to Leighton Buzzard for water.

HE FEARED DISTURBANCES.

Constantinople, Sept. 29.—Fearing that disturbances would take place between Greeks and Bulgarians if there were a large assembly of the latter at Constantinople, the Porte refused to allow the proposed visit of a great number of people from Bulgaria to Constantinople to attend the consecration of the new Bulgarian church. The Bulgarian agent protested, with the result that some 30 priests and nobles were allowed to take part in the ceremony.

REGRETS FOR HIS DEATH.

London, Sept. 29.—The morning papers publish obituary notices, memorial articles, and editorial eulogistic of former American Ambassador Bayard's career, especially of his work in promoting an Anglo-American entente and recording the profound regret felt at the news of his death.

The Times laments the gradual disappearance of the old generation of statesmen like the Bayards and Adams, "leaving the field more open to professional politicians or Tammany bosses."

CASIMIR-PERRIER HAS RESIGNED.

London, Sept. 29.—The Daily News this morning adheres to the truth of its published story regarding the resignation of M. Casimir-Perrier, of the Presidency of France, and cites as evidence a similar statement made by M. Henri Rochort in his paper, the Intransigent, on December 13th, 1897, in which, however, M. Casimir-Perrier's name was suppressed, and that of M. Dupuy substituted.

STUDENT'S SUICIDE CLUB

Residents at Madison Alarmed Over Its Existence

Madison, Wis., Sept. 29.—The possibility of the existence of a suicide club among the students of the University of Wisconsin, here is worrying the citizens of Madison and other cities and throwing many a household containing a promising son into a state of uneasiness and apprehension. Rumors of the existence of such a club began after the suicide of William E. Allen, son of Professor William F. Allen, of the university, who drowned himself in Lake Monona, near Minneapolis four weeks ago. These rumors were revived when the body of Henry B. Freeman, dead by his own hand, was discovered yesterday in his bedroom at the home of his father, Professor John C. Freeman, of the university. In both cases no reason whatever can be assigned for the deed.

Residents of the city now recall that a comparatively large number of young men have recently met death in Madison from causes other than illness. In the last three or four years deaths by drowning in the surrounding lakes have considerably increased among university students and young men of the city.

Heretofore these have been considered purely accidental, but a little reflection now brings to mind that some of the drowned young men were excellent swimmers and were at home in the water. The sudden deaths of a few young men at their homes caused much surprise, but no one suspected until now that they were due to suicide.

NINETY-SIX YEARS OLD.

Springfield, Ohio, Sept. 30.—A fine specimen of manhood is Aden Haines, a harness maker, who runs a shop on South Yellow Springs Street, this city. At the age of 17 years he was bound as an apprentice in Cincinnati, to learn harness making and the saddle trade and to-day the same man at the age of 96 years, pursues his trade here.

The father of seven children living, twenty-one grand-children, twenty-nine great grand-children and one great great grandchild, he can be found daily at his post of duty, working faithfully at his trade. This aged craftsman is remarkably hale and hearty, with faculties but slightly impaired. Eyeglasses are not necessary to him except when he works or reads. His step is still firm, and his movements make him appear much younger than he is. He was born in 1802, near Mt. Holly, N. J., and came to Waynesville, Ohio, in 1815, with his father. At the age of 17 he went to Cincinnati to learn the saddle trade. While working there he made a saddle for General William Henry Harrison, who was then law student in Cincinnati, and had to make a journey south. Mr. Harrison told him it was one of the best saddles he had ever ridden upon. Since settling in Ohio he has walked to the place of his birth and back again on two different occasions. He walked from Philadelphia to Waynesville, O., a distance of 600 miles, in 15 days, averaging 40 miles a day. He has been a great pedestrian, and will take a constitutional every day. He affirms that he can walk 20 miles now if it should be necessary and he offers to ride a bicycle if anyone will present one to him. He positively refuses to ride on street cars and walks wherever business or duty calls him.

"Three from two you can't," says the schoolboy. Right! Three from two you can't, either in dollars or dividends or sarsaparilla. It takes the best sarsaparilla to make the best sarsaparilla extract. The best sarsaparilla comes from Honduras, C. A., and the Dr. Ayer Co. practically controls the entire product. Yet others claim to be making "best" sarsaparilla. They must be making it out of the remainder left after subtracting three from two. But, "three from two you can't." You can't make the best sarsaparilla without best root. You only get the best when you

FORMALLY OPENED

HON. J. I. TARTE PERFORMS THE CEREMONY

The Central Exhibition is now in full swing—A Good Attendance Yesterday—Reaching Events

The Central Exhibition was formally opened by J. Israel Tarte at 1.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the attendance was quite up to the expectations of the directors of the society.

Promptly on time the Minister appeared, in company with Messrs. Jas. Kennedy, M.P.; Mayor Davis, Councilors Best, Hamilton, W. H. White, J. B. McWilliams, J. H. Oxb, Adam Dawson, W. H. Meldrum, Thomas Blears, M.P.P.; John Lang, M.P.; J. R. R. Stratton, M.P.P.; J. B. Pearce, Dr. Dr. Willoughby and several others.

The band played the "Mistle Leaf Forever" as the gentlemen took possession of the platform, after which Mr. G. W. Fitzgerald, the President of the Society, took the chair, and called upon Mayor Davis to read an address of welcome from the Corporation, which read as follows:

By the Honorable J. Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works of the Dominion of Canada:

Sir:—We desire on behalf of the people of Peterborough, to give you a welcome to this town. One of the pleasant features of these annual exhibitions, for which we have to thank the directors, is the presence of prominent public men of Canada, which is an honor that we appreciate. Such visits are of mutual advantage, for by meeting the people and becoming acquainted with them, as well as by viewing the products of the soil and of the manufacture that are on exhibition, you as a Minister of the Crown will better understand the feeling of the people and the requirements of the country. It is an advantage for us to meet and to know those who are the people of our country, have called to positions of trust, honor and responsibility. That special position that you occupy in the Government of Canada, in the Department of Public Works, is one that we regard as of great importance, for upon the development of the country you as the Minister of the Department can exercise great influence. We have recognized and appreciated the energy you have shown in the administration of that department, for as citizens of the first town in Canada, one largely interested in the success of the agricultural and manufacturing industries, we wish with interest the efforts made by the Federal Government to foster these industries and provide facilities for the extending commerce of the country, efforts which have been so crowned with success that Canada has steadily advanced in population and in wealth.

While we welcome you as a prominent Canadian, and a Minister of the Crown, our welcome is warmed because in you we receive a fellow countryman of a different national origin, one of our brother Canadians of the Province of Quebec, who speak another language but are one with us in love for Canada, and in loyalty to the great British Empire and the beloved Queen who presides over its destinies and the hearts of the people.

We hope that you will be pleased with your visit to Peterborough and that you will thoroughly enjoy the time that you will be able to spend with us.

A. L. DAVIS, Mayor.

Peterborough Sept. 29th, 1898.

The President of the Central Exhibition Association, Mr. G. W. Fitzgerald, then presented the Hon. gentleman with an address from the Society which was as follows:

Honorable J. Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works—

Dear Sir:—The Directors of the Peterborough Central Exhibition, on behalf of the Society, which represents the town and county, beg to most cordially welcome you to Peterborough and to thank you for your courtesy in coming so far to do us the honor and favor of formally opening our annual exhibition.

We welcome you personally as a prominent Canadian sprung up from that gallant and chivalrous race, which laid the first foundations of our beautiful Canada, and furnished many distinguished statesmen, whose names have honorable places on the pages of our history.

We welcome you in your official capacity as a member of a Government which has given practical evidence, in its predecessor, of a deep interest in the prosperity of the agricultural elements of natural industry, which, without wishing to disparage any other, we consider as paramount to all. We are sure, Sir, that you will find in the exhibition upon the beautiful harvest of the past summer, made more bountiful by wise government aid, and made more valuable by practical facilities afforded us for conveying it in the best condition to the best market. We also congratulate yourself and ourselves upon the great commercial prosperity that Canada has enjoyed and is still enjoying, and upon the prominent position our country is assuming among the nations of the world, and upon the closer relations of civil and commercial harmony between ourselves and the Mother land.

We would conclude Sir, by begging to one more extend to you most cordial welcome, with the wish that your stay amongst us, though brief, maybe a happy one, and that you will carry back to your high duties pleasant recollections of the hospitality of the town and county of Peterborough.

We have the honor to extend to you the most assurance of our respectful consideration.

On behalf of the directors,

W. J. GREEN, G. W. FITZGERALD, Secretaries.

Mr. Tarte first thanked the society and corporation for the kind address presented to him. The society had conferred a great compliment on him, and his province in inviting him to perform the opening ceremony at the Peterborough Central Exhibition. It was a pleasure to attend exhibition through the Dominion but he considered it especially so in the province of Ontario. He did not now speak to them on behalf of the government of which he was a member, but as a citizen of this Dominion.

The speaker then gave a brief account of the resources of the different provinces, and stated that we did not have appreciate the richness of our natural wealth. He had just returned from a visit to the provinces to the last and until then he had not been of the extent of the wealth of our country.

The speaker then turned his attention to something nearer home—the Trent Valley Canal. He had been told from people who were not in favor of this scheme that this was nothing but a ditch, but a visit over the route showed him different. If it could be shown conclusively that the Trent Valley Canal would divert trade from American ports into the St. Lawrence he was in favor of it.

Referring to the vast tracts of land still lying idle he dwelt on the necessity of a vigorous immigration policy. Mr. Tarte then spoke on the harmony that was existing at the present time between the two races and two great religious bodies in our country and amid great applause declared himself as loyal a subject to Her Majesty, the Queen as anyone present.

Messrs. J. R. Stratton, M.P.P., James Kennedy, M.P., and Dr. Willoughby also spoke after which Mr. Fitzgerald declared the exhibition opened.

At 3.30 o'clock the following races were run off:

STANDARD RACE 1-2 MILE OPEN.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Happenings in the Town and District During the Past Twenty-Four Hours

—A couple of drunk and disorderly "guys" put in the night at the police station.

—The girl who expressed much sympathy for the poor farmer because of his old job in harvesting his winter wheat is equal in agricultural knowledge to the one who expressed a desire to see a field of tobacco when it is just plugging out. But the damsel who asked which cow gave the butter-milk is entitled to the whole bakery. And a girl on her return from a visit to the country was asked if she ever saw any milk a cow and replied "Oh, yes, indeed I have. It tickles me to death to see uncle jerk two of the cows' faucets at the same time."

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Mr. P. Howard, of Hastings, took in the fair.

Miss Mabel Southern, of Lindsay, was in town yesterday.

Miss C. Courtemanche, of Midland, is the guest of Mrs. Hopkins, Park street.

Miss Laura Morris, of Lindsay, is in town, the guest of Miss Gertrude Lawrence.

Mrs. O'Brien, and Misses Verta and May O'Brien, of Millbrook, were in town yesterday.

The following Millbrookites were in town yesterday: W. S. Given, Henry Mulligan, William Hunter, W. Ekins, W. D. Nugent, and Wesley Walsh.

Mr. Edward Fry, of St. Paris, Ohio, brother of Messrs. George and John Fry of this town, is spending a few days in Peterborough, the home of her childhood.

Mr. Fry is a successful carriage manufacturer, and is greatly pleased with the town. He left town in 1868, during the American civil war and went to Springfield, Ohio, where he remained for some time. He is kept busy shaking hands with his old friends and viewing the city which has risen on the site of his old town.

CENTRAL FAIR ATTRACTION

The best attraction on the Peterborough Fair Grounds this week will be Turnieres' Cinematographs with new wonderful living and moving pictures. It will be in a dark tent and is the same as was at the Toronto Fair. No one who goes to the Fair should miss seeing it.

THE TARTE BANQUET

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS WELCOMED

A Brilliant Evening at the Oriental Last Night—The Minister's Views on the Trent Valley Canal

The banquet that was tendered to Hon. J. Israel Tarte, last night was one of the most brilliant affairs of the kind that has taken place in Peterborough for some time. The large dining room of the Oriental, in which the banquet took place, was filled with representatives of every class of profession and every branch of trade and commerce.

The committee who had charge of the affair have every reason to be satisfied with the successful manner in which they carried out their undertaking.

The hall was beautifully decorated with flags and bunting, while conspicuously on the walls were displayed the mottoes, "God Save the Queen," "A United Dominion," "God Bless Canada," "We Welcome Our Guest," etc.

The 57th Best band, which was stationed in the main entrance of the hotel, rendered excellent music throughout. Among those present were: Messrs. Robert Jaffery, Toronto, Mayor Morrison of Trenton, Jas. Kennedy, M.P., J. R. Stratton, M.P.P., Thos. Blears, M.P.P., James Stevenson, ex-M.P., Jas. Carnegie, Father Casey, J. K. McWilliams, W. H. White and many others.

After full justice had been done to the inner man, Mayor Davis, who occupied the chair, before proceeding with the toast list, read telegrams of congratulatory from Hon. Senator Cox and Mr. Ellis, of Toronto Board of Trade.

The chairman then proposed the toast of "The Queen," which was duly responded to.

The Governor-General, and Lieutenant-Governor, were honored by the entire audience rising and singing "They are jolly good fellows."

Mr. Walker Macleod here treated the gathering to that ever-popular selection, "Rule Britannia."

Mr. H. Nelson sang "The Soldiers of the Queen."

The chairman, in a few well-chosen remarks, then proposed the toast of "Our Guest."

Mr. Tarte, on rising, was greeted with great demonstrations of enthusiasm, and in singing of "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Mr. Tarte began by alluding to the pleasure it gave him to speak at a gathering of this kind. It was a non-political gathering. He stood before them as the Minister of Public Works for the time being, and as a Canadian made from them. He was satisfied that he did not know everything, so he had to travel as much as possible to gain such knowledge. Some of his travels had got him into trouble, however. Referring to the promises he had made concerning the Trent Valley Canal, he thought he might get into a hole, but he had been in worse holes. (Laughter.)

He had unbounded confidence in the Canadian people. Anything that was connected with the transportation question, and when he was convinced of the practicability of the T.V.C. scheme he was prepared to stand by it.

The speaker referred to a conversation he had with Mr. Rogers, Superintendent of the Trent Valley Canal, and that gentleman had told him that he thought it possible for boats of 7-12 feet draught to be brought from Midland to Montreal with grain.

They had run both of this draught on the Erie Canal, and why could it not be done on the Trent Valley Canal? Between 40 and 50 million tons of trade had to be brought down from the great west annually, and if the Trent Valley were completed the cost of transportation would be greatly lessened.

The speaker turned his attention to the St. Lawrence canal, and referred to the great necessity of deepening these waterways. If the canal were deepened to 14 feet a revolution would take place in the volume of trade done. Although the Trent Valley Canal will not be 14 feet it would be 8 feet, and sufficiently large to be kept busy during navigation.

Of course it required money to do this. If the States had good canals it was because they had spent millions on them. If our canals were made deeper they would admit of larger boats, and the larger the boats the cheaper the rates. Last year the amount of trade that passed down the St. Lawrence was twenty million tons, while the year before it had increased to forty millions, owing to the fact that our waterways had been made to admit of larger boats. He considered that the best way to invest our money was to invest it in public works, and we were doing that by investing it in such things as deepening our canals, etc.

He urged upon them the necessity of establishing winter ports and therefore keep our trade at home. Canada for the Canadians, was his motto. The best way to be friendly with the people to the south was to be independent of them. The speaker here demonstrated the advantage of extending our Government railway to the coast.

We are going to be a nation after while. When he looked back to the time that he came into public life, and compared the state of the country then to what it is now, its development had been wonderful. We had worked like true beavers. The National Conference proved that we are a nation to a great extent, as the Imperial Government had only one representative at the Conference. Our Canadian commissioners were representing the nation, and he felt sure that a great deal of good would come from the Conference. He was glad to know that disputes could be settled in such a friendly way.

There was a feeling of national unity throughout the country which amounted to a great extent for the progress we had made during the past year. His eye fell upon the motto "Etenim" and he rejoiced to see such a compliment paid to him and the province he came from.

The hon. gentleman created much laughter when he said that his province had just given sixty thousand majority against prohibition. It was not because he was a friend of Mr. McLean, but said that it would interfere with their faith, nor because they drank more in his province than we do here.

Well Made and Makes Well

Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared by experienced pharmacists of today, who have brought to the production of this great medicine the best results of medical research. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a modern medicine, containing just those vegetable ingredients which were seemingly intended by Nature herself for the alleviation of human ills. It purifies and enriches the blood, tones the stomach and digestive organs and creates an appetite; it absolutely cures all scrofula eruptions, boils, pimples, sores, salt rheum, and every form of skin disease; cures liver complaint, kidney troubles, strengthens and builds up the nervous system. It entirely overcomes that tired feeling, giving strength and energy in place of weakness and languor. It wards off malaria, typhoid fever, and by purifying the blood it keeps the whole system healthy.

but because they did not think it a good way to promote temperance. We are a free people and appreciate the freedom which we Canadians enjoy. He fully recognized the fact that the temperance people were sincere in their views, but he did not want them to force the Province of Quebec.

He had also tried to do right during the time he had held office and had never tried to please everybody but as many as possible. When he came to Ontario first the people expected to see him come with horns on his head, he had been put down as such a dreadful man, but he was pleased to know they had found him not so bad. The more we visited each other the more we loved each other, and he congratulated his French friends on the high standing they held in the affairs of the community.

In conclusion, the speaker urged upon them the good results that would follow harmony among the different races of Canada and took his seat, amid the wildest enthusiasm.

The House of Commons and Legislative Assembly was responded to by Jas. Kennedy, M.P., Mayor Morrison of Trenton, Thos. Blears, M.P.P., and J. R. Stratton, M.P.P.

"Trade and Commerce" brought to their feet Messrs. Robert Jaffery, of Toronto, and James Carnegie.

The gathering was brought to a successful close with cheers for the Queen, Mr. Tarte and the Chairman.

A Work of Art

The Times was yesterday shown a photograph of a Newcombe piano, which is a veritable work of art. The beautiful instrument shows on paper true to nature, every part standing out with special distinctness. The piano made by this firm do credit to Canada.

Handsome, beautiful and becoming are the styles of best goods as produced by Prof. Dorenwend this season. REBELLION IS SPREADING

Philippine Insurgents Massacre Many Families

AMERICANS ARE TO BLAME

At Least That is the Opinion Expressed by a Madrid Journal

The sick at Porto Rico to be sent North as soon as they are able to travel with safety

Madrid, Sept. 30.—A telegram received here from General Rodo, Spanish Governor of the Visayas Islands, who is reported to have recently proclaimed himself Governor-General of the Spanish dominions in the Philippines, reports that the insurgent expeditions have arrived at the Visayas. The rebellion, it is reported, is spreading, and several provinces in the Island of Luzon have been invaded and some officers of the gendarmes and their families massacred. The Governor and officials at Iloilo, Island of Panay, have fled to Manila.

La Correspondencia blames the Americans for tolerating the new rising of the insurgents, and urges the Government to present a protest to the Paris Commission.

COMMISSIONERS DENY REPORTS.

Paris, Sept. 30.—The United States Peace Commission has taken possession of its working quarters, a suite of rooms on the ground floor of the Hotel Continental, formerly used by the ex-Empress Eugenie. Later they were occupied by the League of Nations Commission and by United States Commissioner Peck, who has just moved into his office on the Exposition grounds. American flags draped the entrance of the Peace Commission apartments. The clerical force of the commission has been systematized and is now working busily. The spirit of the Paris press is daily rendering in English for the information of the commissioners, and the same thing is done with the newspapers of Madrid. Many boxes of records, data and authorities affecting the case of the United States were unpacked today and carefully arranged.

PREPARING PLANS.

The American commission held its usual session this morning. It is believed the commissioners are crystallizing their plans and arranging all the details of the work which will be begun when the commissioners begin their joint sessions. The Spanish commissioners formally deny the various interviews and paragraphs purporting to give the substance of their instructions which have appeared in the newspapers. The secretary of the Spanish commission said to the representative of the Associated Press with the American commission: "No member of our commission has given any interview, and all which have appeared in print as to our instructions are lies. We are here to defend ourselves, and naturally we are not willing to give any of our weaknesses to our opponents."

SICK TO COME NORTH.

Washington, Sept. 30.—The War Department has issued the following: "The President has given instructions that all sick at Porto Rico be sent North as soon as they are able to travel with safety, his purpose being to relieve General Brooke of the further care of the sick and at the same time enable the men to receive treatment available in the better equipped hospitals. These men will be furnished with food and clothing, and will be taken from San Juan. About seven hundred will leave in a day on the Relief and Medical."

MOURAVIEFF, DIPLOMAT

The brilliant, glittering and somewhat superficial successor to Lobanoff, Count Mouravieff, bears upon his shoulders a heavier burden than his predecessor. He has embarked upon a policy that may at any time involve his country in war, with the knowledge that Russia is not only not ready for war, but that peace is indispensable to the maintenance of her vast conquests in Asia and peoples known as the Russian empire.

Russia has long aspired to be a great naval power, for she knows that her land forces are incapable of securing for her that mastery in Asia which is the object of her dearest ambition. In the last resort, Count Mouravieff's schemes depending upon Russian sea powers, which is limited by conditions incident to every country destitute of a seafaring population of her own race. Naval recruits for the Russian navy are almost entirely obtained from the coast of the Baltic provinces. They are not Slav, but Teutonic in race, not Orthodox, but Lutheran in religion; not educated and temperate; like the English man-of-warman, but ignorant and drunken in habits. No one has ever seen blue-jackets from the Osborne or Victoria and Albert lying drunk in the streets of Copenhagen or Copenhagen. Representatives of the crews of the Russian imperial yachts Polar Star and Standard seldom deny themselves the privilege of getting drunk and sleeping off their delirium in the public streets. I have seen sailors from the Polar Star day after day drunk and incapable in the streets of Copenhagen.

During half the year the Russian navy is practically laid up. The majority of the men are never practised in fire drill at sea. Hardy and tough as the Finns and the German sailors undoubtedly are, they have no more love for their imperial masters than their fellow subjects, the Poles, who are in a state of seething rebellion. Count Mouravieff knows that, build ships as he may, the process of converting landmen into man-of-warman is not so easy an accomplishment as some English writers on the Russian navy are in the habit of assuming. Upon the smartness and capacity of Russian seamen will depend the solidarity of the Russian empire, and although discipline may do much with obedient and even servile human material, the personnel of the Russian navy is by no means satisfactory. As a weapon in the hands of the responsible leaders of a great world power, the Russian navy, however well-built the ships, is blunted by the defects of the seamen. Even Persia contributed in the last century to the long series of Russian defeats by land and sea recorded by the cold, impartial hand of history.

Count Mouravieff's task has been facilitated by the extraordinary blunders perpetrated by our foreign office. Many of these blunders are known to prominent among the inexplicable actions of the foreign office was the appointment of Sir Nicholas O'Connor to the embassy at St. Petersburg. Sir Nicholas O'Connor was minister on China at the time of the celebrated Cassini convention, although his Excellency obtained an inkling of what was going on, he was unable to prevent the signature of that document, which contained the super-session of British influence by that of Russia. One result of these negotiations was to occasion a bitter personal quarrel between Count Cassini, the Russian minister, and Sir Nicholas O'Connor.

The appointment of the latter, therefore, to the court of the Czar was unwise, for two reasons. Firstly, he took up his duties on the Nava under the shadow of a diplomatic defeat, and secondly, his quarrel with Count Cassini, which he had before him, the certainty of many secret and powerful enemies in the Russian capital. The recent Blue Book shows how impossible was the task committed to Sir Nicholas O'Connor, who, like the English gentleman he is, is a man of high intelligence and high character, but who has made one recent occupant of the Red House on the Nava swear like a trooper. Count Mouravieff's task is aided by the ineptitude and fatuity of the British foreign office, has been hampered by the policy of domestic opposition to his policy. Between him and M. Polidore, the celebrated procurator of the Holy See, there is no love lost. Mr. Polidore is a precise, religious and above all things anxious for the health of the souls of his countrymen. He has planted his foot in Russia and has come to stay. If the peasant joins the artisan in this new movement, as seems likely, the outlook for the Czar is gloomy.

Count Mouravieff, like most Russians of position, is a born gambler, and he has been playing for political stakes so high that he has had to give undertakings which may require redemption in an inconvenient form. The French navy, for example, is necessary to Russia, if she comes into conflict with Great Britain. But it is by no means certain, especially in the present condition of the fleet, that France would consent to fight England for the sake of Russian interests in Manchuria. Already the first ardor of the international honeymoon has abated, and the intelligent Frenchmen are asking themselves what they have got out of Russian alliance. As this feeling of discontent is growing, the hills which Russia has drawn on French vanity may not be met at maturity.

Furthermore, Count Mouravieff's smartness in Manchuria has virtually welded together the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon race in an understanding based upon the most durable of all grounds for an alliance—enlightened self-interest. Count Mouravieff, in order to snatch diplomatic victory, has supplied Englishmen with ample grounds for rooted antipathy toward Russia. The foreign office, it is true, is still negotiating copiously with a power which has lied to them again and again; the records thereof are not written in the chronicles of the last English Blue Book. This dislike of Russia by England is a thing to be reckoned with by Count Mouravieff.

If all goes well, by the end of October the Nile will be English from the Mediterranean to Khartoum. It has probably occurred to Count Mouravieff that among other consequences of Kitchener's victory will be an alternative route between Great Britain and her Eastern empire. With the Suez Canal open, our road to India lies naturally through it. In the event of war that canal will be blocked, and while the Russian reinforcements to the garrison of Amour and Primorsky provinces must either march 1,050 miles over the most difficult land in Asia or proceed via the Cape of Good Hope, England has obtained a second string to her bow. The Nile railway and the fall of Berber have made it possible that our road to India in the future as in the present must be via the Red Sea in certain eventualities, while Russia is excluded. Count Mouravieff's task is to take cognizance of these things.

It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that the entire coast line of Asia from the Suez Canal to the Malay Peninsula is in British hands. If Russian influence in China rests upon her ability to threaten her at any point along 4,000 miles of land line, the same is true of England's ability to strike at Russia if Count Mouravieff should succeed in extending his master's territories in Asia Minor or in Persia. The overwhelming strength of Britain in Western Asia is scarcely realized in this country. In Russia it is not suspected, and while the Russophiles and Russophobes alike discuss Russian plans for the invasion of miles of coast line rests with England.

THE PLEASURES OF LONDON

If the visitor in London wants to spend an enjoyable day let him go to the Crystal Palace. A public holiday is the best time, for then an idea can be got of the immense throngs that often leave the metropolis for a day's outing says a London letter.

Fifty thousand people is a good sized city, yet this number is often found at the palace on holidays. For the 44 years of its existence the palace has entertained over one hundred million, and it is still in the business. The original idea, "to elevate and instruct, as well as to delight and amuse all classes," is maintained, but the programmes vary as the times demand. Of late years more and more attention has been given to variety shows, operatic feasts, fireworks, athletic sports, concerts etc. than was at first dreamed of. In fact the exhibition features have nearly disappeared, and the palace is now a place to be safely classed as an amusement show.

Indubitably the institution has had a great influence for good as it has been liberally patronized. But this patronage is falling off somewhat and is not surprising when one considers the several similar institutions that have sprung up, copying the methods of the parent concern. The last half year's report shows a decrease in attendance of about 50,000—nothing alarming, yet sufficient to urge the management to look about for the best intent the world can supply.

A feeling of disappointment takes possession of the visitor as he steps into the great hall and sees a lady in tamer holding forth. There is an air of the city stores, too, about the numerous stalls that sell all sorts of trifles. Then the furniture needs to be seen, and a new floor would do no harm. The ferns and palms look dusty, and the band reminds one of the numerous country fairs in this country, yet when one gets a good view of the interior and contemplates the Art objects of the fitness of things vanishes, and the patron determines to enjoy himself.

To have pleasure at the palace it is not necessary to spend money, though expense is to be expected. The cosmopolitan character of the entertainment, too, requires some judgment, and if one shows no taste in the matter, the most tedious can be avoided. If music sounds time, go outside, and listen to the other four bands, for the music stands are so distributed that though all bands play from one place, the music is heard in all parts of the way the palace and its 200 acres are laid out. There are no signs to "keep off the grass," but one can lie down anywhere and sleep if he wishes to rest at will. No wretched fence-top gently and a flower, though numerous appeals are posted about asking visitors to be sparing of the products of nature. The palace proper covers 13 acres. It is of glass and iron, and the light almost as if it were air, and when lit up by gas the scene is a grand one. Glass was used in the construction of 500 tons of glass, 9,642 tons of iron, 15 tons of bolts and 103 tons of nails for workwork. The central nave is 1,382 feet long, or a quarter of a mile, and the transept is 200 feet high. In all this great building there are numerous seats for the weary and numerous restaurants with prices slightly higher than in the city.

One spends but little time in the building, it is commonplace and tiresome, except when concerts or shows are on. It is more pleasant outside (the weather permitting), watching the throngs of English taking their pleasure. Here is a select party that has taken possession of a crowded terrace. With only a conversation or much talk, and then the thousands and sing and dance until worn out. As they tire they depart in couples and seek some shady nook. There, with their lunch and quart of ale or beer, they settle down until up at night, when the signal is given to clear the grounds. Summerfests are the first works have given fond lovers a rude awakening, and so persistent are some of the couples that the management has emphatically stated that it will not be responsible for accidents that occur in the music conservatory. The dark retreats are pressed with shouts of laughter as they come rushing out from among the showers of sparks, while many a holiday dress goes home after a day at the palace with a hole burned in it, so reckless are the pleasure seekers.

Those who want genuine prominence can have them free of cost. The splendid lakes—there are three or four large ones—afford boating. The great bicycle track has its admirers, and it is estimated that on last bank holiday over 25,000 enthusiastic witnesses thronged the grounds. Cricketers, too, have great grounds, while neither is bowling, rink skating and other attractions. A single bear, and monkeys and brilliant birds serve as a Zoological Garden. An open air theatre delights its thousands. Panormia, a big theater, a big concert hall, a fete garden, brilliantly illuminated at night, a daily balloon ascension, novelties in the way of merry-go-rounds, two great towers from which one can look down upon London 700 feet below on one side, while on the opposite side can be seen eight of England's richest and most densely populated counties.

Aside from amusements one can see a fine gallery of pictures, out and water colors, by the best living artists. There is also a small machinery hall, a room full of babies in incubators, together with the latest in all the art. No visitor to London ever misses the Crystal Palace, and when he gets through he almost forgets what seems a legend, that the palace is the remains of the great World's Fair of 1851 that was held in Hyde Park. The World's Fair feature is almost eliminated. The Crystal Palace is a gigantic, magnificent, and a genuine pleasure resort. It contains something for all nations, and is probably the most patronized amusement resort in the world.

This dislike of Russia by England is a thing to be reckoned with by Count Mouravieff.

If all goes well, by the end of October the Nile will be English from the Mediterranean to Khartoum. It has probably occurred to Count Mouravieff that among other consequences of Kitchener's victory will be an alternative route between Great Britain and her Eastern empire. With the Suez Canal open, our road to India lies naturally through it. In the event of war that canal will be blocked, and while the Russian reinforcements to the prison of Amour and Primorsky provinces must either march 1,500 miles over the most difficult land in Asia or proceed via the Cape of Good Hope, England has obtained a second string to her bow. The Nile railway and the fall of Berlin have made it possible that our road to India in the future as in the present must be via the Red Sea in certain contingencies, while Russia is excluded. Count Mouravieff's task is to take cognizance of these things.

It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that the entire coast line of Asia from the Suez Canal to the Malay Peninsula is in British hands. If our overwhelming force in China rests upon her ability to threaten her at any point along 4,000 miles of land line, the same is true of England's ability to strike at Russia if Count Mouravieff should succeed in extending his master's territories in Asia Minor or in Persia. The overwhelming strength of Britain in Western Asia is scarcely realized in this country. In Russia it is not suspected, and while the Russian plans for the invasion of miles of coast line rests with England.

MONUMENT ERECTED

C. H. Van Ness of Orange County, New York, lost his wife about a year ago. She was Emma Louisa Burr, a direct descendant of Aaron Burr, and she and her husband lived happily for thirty-two years in the Van Ness house, at Cortlandt-on-the-Hudson. After his wife's death, says the New York World, Mr. Van Ness was troubled by the thought that it would be impossible to erect a memorial to her in the place of her burial—the Burr lot in Greenwood Cemetery, where stands a great monument erected by him to Aaron Burr. Some months ago while she lay in state above Cornwall, he learned that he saw his wife in the form of an angel, his own to him with a spray of palm. Mr. Van Ness wrote out a description of his vision and sent it to his wife's old home, where the figure he had seen in the southern globe of his lamented wife's early dwelling. The statue is now in place, and the effect is heightened by cloud scene skilfully painted in the background.

PHILIP PILES: Itching Piles. Symptoms—Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worms by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia. Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Positively refuse all substitutes.

FUGLIT IN A STRAIGHTJACKET. Chicago, Sept. 25.—Albert Griffiths, better known as Young Griffith, the pugilist, is strapped in a straightjacket at the Army police station and will be the subject of an inquiry by a commission in lunacy to-day. Last night he ran nude along State street for a quarter of a mile. Three policemen who tried to arrest him were sent sprawling by well-directed blows, and he left a trail of sore heads and bruised faces behind him. Reinforcements were called and he was finally empowered.

Young Griffith is a skillful prize fighter. He has fought many notable battles against leading pugilists in his class, and except in a few instances where he had neglected to train, he never worried his opponent or got off with a draw.

WANTED A WIFE

Several months ago Filippo Amadio went to Louis Aruensis, a good-looking Italian laborer, and said to him:

"Louis, why don't you get married?"

"I would like to," Louis replied, "but I have not yet found a woman that I like."

"I know you are on the subject at this time. Both Italians live in a tenement at No. 25 Commercial street, Buffalo. Amadio was a happy man with a wife and four children. Aruensis was a lonely, unattached workman whose ambition was to get back to Italy. Perhaps a week after the two men had spoken of marriage Amadio went again to his young friend and said:

"Louis, I have found a girl who will make you a fine wife."

"Was it a Sicilian?"

"No, it was a French girl."

"Where can I see her?"

"She is in Italy, but she will come over here if you will marry her. I will show you a picture of her."

Amadio produced a photograph of a handsome Italian girl and Aruensis, who had been captivated by it, took the picture to his room. One day he sought Amadio and said to him:

"I will marry your daughter if you will send for her."

"But it will cost $25 from Italy to Buffalo and I haven't the money," replied Amadio.

Aruensis thought the matter over. He had $16 saved and that he gave to Amadio with the understanding that the balance would be supplied by the father. A month later the father said he had been unable to get the money, so $10 and he asked Aruensis to let the latter borrow the sum, gave it to Amadio and began to count the days before the girl, with whose photograph he had fallen in love, would arrive in Buffalo.

Days and weeks went by. Aruensis became very impatient and he often asked Amadio when his daughter would arrive. "Oh, she'll be here pretty soon," the father usually replied. About a week ago Amadio told the impatient lover that the young woman would arrive at once to Amadio's lodgings.

The latter took his savings and last Saturday started for New York to meet his wife. He had been told just when the vessel bearing her would reach her pier in New York and he was extremely happy.

Yesterday he returned from New York, disappointed, discouraged, angry and poor. No such boat as Amadio had described arrived in New York. On no incoming vessel was there a girl named Amadio nor one answering that girl's description, he said. Aruensis went at once to Amadio's lodgings when he reached Buffalo. There he learned that Amadio had gone away. Then he went to Police Court and swore out a warrant charging Amadio with grand larceny. Harry Evans, court interpreter, went with Aruensis to find Amadio, but the latter, it was learned, had left the city.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Cures Coughs

"My wife was suffering from a dreadful cough. We did not expect that she would long survive, but Mr. E. V. Royal, deputy surveyor, happened to be stopping with us over night, and having a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with him, induced my wife to try this remedy. The result was so beneficial that she kept on taking it till she was cured."

H. S. HUMPHRIES, Sausage, Ga.

"My little daughter was taken with a distressing cough, which for three years defied all the remedies I tried. At length, on the urgent recommendation of a friend, I began to give her Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After using one bottle I found to my great surprise that she was improving. Change of Time on G. & N.
Commencing this morning the following changes occur in the departure of trains at the G. & N. station here. The morning train for Lakeside leaves at 8:15 instead of 8:25 as heretofore, and at 1:30 in the afternoon instead of 12:05. The train going to Belleville leaves in the afternoon at 12:05 instead of 12:15. The train for Port Hope leaves at 11:50 instead of 11:45 a. m., and at 9:05 p. m. instead of 8:55 p. m. The evening train for Lindsay leaves at 8:30 instead of 8:35 p. m., and night train at 9:15 instead of 9:10.

Be Not Deceived.
At the Court of Sessions at Belleville on Friday, Mr. G. McNeil, who travels for a Montreal wholesale house, brought action against a Madam merchant, one Milne for slander. In taking an order from Milne, a mistake was made, and the latter wrote a note to the plaintiff's employers saying that "McNeil was a 'sneaky double'."

Plaintiff contended that such words would convey the impression that he was intoxicated. Defendant contended that he simply intended to say that McNeil had made a mistake. Verdict for plaintiff $150.

Stouffville Disappointed.
Lovers of our national game were much disappointed when it was announced that the Peterborough team refused to obey President Lennon's order to play Orillia on the Stouffville grounds yesterday. We consider that the President was fully justified in naming another ground for deciding this match. In view of the brutal and disgraceful attacks made on the Orillia team at Peterborough, we cannot conceive why the Peterborough team refused to play here unless it be that they fully anticipated defeat. However, it is very unparliamentary to say the least of it.—Stouffville Tribune.

A Foreword of His Poetry.
The Toronto Star says—Hon. J. Israel Tarte at the Peterborough Fair has said some pretty things about the wealth of Canada, and with these he expressed what looks like a forecast of his policy. He desires to make the St. Lawrence the great national highway of trade, and hopes in the near future to see the current of the western trade running over it. If it can be proven that the Trent Valley canal will divert trade from the United States ports to the St. Lawrence, he is with the promoters of it. And he has seen figures and heard arguments that went far to prove as much. The province of Quebec, he said, shared all the aspirations and ambitions of her sister, Ontario, and the people of Quebec were firm Canadians and loyal subjects of the Queen.

BUCKERS WILL BITE

The Story of a Fakir at the Peterborough Fair Grounds.

To the Editor of The Times.
First—The old story that "all fools are not dead yet" was plainly demonstrated at the local fair on Saturday afternoon, and the facts of the case are given by a spectator are as follows:—During the progress of the races at the Driving Park track in the afternoon a strange man came in a black and white striped suit, and a black and white striped turban, and he drew their attention to the right by showing a black and white striped object being to show the distance to each religious sect from Heaven to Hades. Needless to say, his conversation was very interesting and he soon had the confidence of his hearers. After explaining his business which was to advertise certain medicines he handed out through the listeners a number of boxes of corn cure. He could not begin to supply the people who had begun to take him seriously, and he had to begin taking again and when interrupted by some "smart wacker" he gave them a fall down which they will remember for the rest of their days. After a short time he found that he had a few boxes of corn cure left, and he asked who wanted them. A hundred hands went up all at once. It was utterly impossible for him to give them all, so he asked them to give him five cents each, and he gave them a fall down which they will remember for the rest of their days. He then went to the right and after getting rid of all he handed the buyers back their money.

Mr. Fakir then went on to point out the merits of a family medicine which he had and after finishing that he handed a bottle out to a man in the crowd to examine. The bottle marked on the bottle was 32. When the audience had been made acquainted with this fact, the medicine man asked who wanted to try it. Never was such an array of hands ever seen at a fair ground before. It would have taken an express train to supply them. The fakir then went on to say that he could not supply them but would charge $1 for each bottle and everyone would get a one dollar present. Every bottle was sold and after a little while the man drove off.

A number of the suckers who had been cheated over getting done felt sore, and as a result one of them called for a warrant on the fellow with stealing his dollar and the warrant was executed by P. C. Stewart on Saturday night. The man gave his name as Dr. Kelly of New York. He will come before the Police Magistrate this morning.

Dr. Kelly is known all over Canada wherever fairs are held and his presence always attracts large crowds around him as he is very humorous and is a good entertainer. When seen at the Police station he felt very bad over being arrested claiming to have done nothing wrong and to have carried out his promises.

The chances are the people have not connected his remarks about the medicine and expected to get their money back but the present which he made them was the difference between the price of the bottle and what they paid him. This is what a number of his hearers say while those who were foolish enough to pay their dollar say that he promised to give them $2 back. This of course appears absurd on the face of it as it is not likely any man is going to pay for giving away dollars on a fair ground. It is an old story and the public will never be so educated to leave the fakirs alone.

Judge Robertson seems inclined to dismiss the application to change the venue on the Ponton trial. He has reserved judgment on the question, but his remarks during the argument of counsel seemed to imply that only for the most extraordinary reasons could such a request be granted, where inherent right to be tried in his own neighborhood.

—Mr. Arthur Hill, of Saginaw, Mich., is a fair-minded man. He states that it was a very unwise move of the United States to discriminate against Canadian lumber and then endeavor to force Ontario to hand over her logs. The white pine of Northern Ontario he considers an invaluable asset. Mr. Hill, it may be explained, has lumber interests in the Midland district. He is credibly informed that Sir Wilfrid will let the Ontario timber regulations stand as they are. Any remedy must come from Washington, not from Ottawa.

—The election protest against Hon. A. M. Hart, is being tried at Kingston by Chancellor Boyd and Judge Ferguson. The chief evidence on Saturday was given in reference to charges that in it is alleged that Horace Harpell, a young voter, had been given money by one Robinson for his vote. Robinson asked Harpell about his vote—so Harpell's story goes—and Harpell intimated that he was waiting for the "long green." Then Robinson offered him $3 if he would take a marked ballot and return with the new one he received. Harpell refused the offer, and the bargain ended. Subsequently Harpell renewed the conversation, received the $3, and voted, but did not take the marked ballot. He contradicts his own story in little points.

THE SHOW IS OVER

It Was a Great Success From Every Point of View.

The Peterborough Central Exhibition was brought to a close Saturday afternoon and it was one of the most successful that has been held in years. There was a great crowd on the grounds Saturday, who were kept busy watching the various amusements, looking at the many fine exhibits, and enjoying a drive around the grounds. The special attractions which took place in front of the grand stand proved to be a big draw, and the visitors well deserved the applause given to them. The band and the 25th district band, stationed just across the track from the judges' stand and dismounted equestrian music at intervals throughout the day, and during the performance of the dancing acts performed by the various acrobats.

The fakir, the fortune teller, the band men and the various other money seekers vied with each other as to noise and flattering inducements as the crowd wandered its way up and down the ground. The attendance was good, the exhibits good, and the races were watched by an enthusiastic crowd. Last night the afternoon the exhibitors began to remove their goods. At dusk the ground presented a desolate appearance, and the exhibition of 29 was a thing of the past.

The races proved to be interesting and there were some fine finishes. They were as follows:
FREE FOR ALL.
Little Horse, W. Sherrin, 1-1-1
Fred Harding, D. B. Brown, 2-2-2
Sunk, G. Powell, 3-3-3

Robinson's Cheese Factory.
Robinson is the spot. There is not another such place in the whole universe. That is a self evident fact for the man who has been to Chicago considers it a thing of the past, but it is the ornamental green stepper for the hub, and shockingly filthy it gets around the edges. Robinson's reputation is the envy of the whole world. Robinson is the synonym of perfection, it is the pure cheese and Franklin, Penn. is one of the places that gracefully acknowledges Robinson's cheese perfection. Yes, sir. Last year Mr. H. Lamberton, of Franklin, obtained a cheese from the Robinson factory, and the name of Lamberton became famous throughout the state. Strangers would send in their cards, even after midnight, begging the privilege of a taste of the Robinson cheese. The most distinguished ladies of the surrounding States, worked all manner of schemes to obtain invitations to Mr. Lamberton's five o'clock cheese parties. Generals, Senators, and politicians insisted upon calling Mr. Lamberton, Harry, old man, and dear boy, and almost insisted upon his running for Governor, but fortunately for Mr. Lamberton he had broken a leg and was not in extra twist for running. Again this week, Mr. J. C. Anderson, the skilled muddler of milk at the factory, has shipped another cheese to Mr. Lamberton, and this time next week Robinson will be on the lips of thousands of the most intelligent men, and the most beautiful women of Pennsylvania.

Weak and Run Down, With Heart and Kidneys in Bad Condition—Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I was very much run down, having been sick for several months. I had been trying different remedies which did me no good. I could not sleep, and I was coughing that would leave me prostrate. I was told that my lungs were affected, and my heart and kidneys were in a bad condition. In fact, it seemed as though every organ was out of order. I felt that something must be done and my brother advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I procured a bottle and began taking it. Before it was half gone I felt that it was helping me. I continued its use and it has made me a new woman. I cannot praise it too highly." MRS. SUMMERVILLE, 217 Ossington Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

CANADA'S BIG DISPLAY

Resources of the Dominion Extensively Shown at Omaha.
In the International Hall at the Great-Mississippi Exposition the greatest exhibit is that of Dominion of Canada. It occupies 5000 feet of floor space, and 6000 feet of wall space, covered with the best of the country's produce. It is an agricultural, mineral, forestry and dairy exhibit combined.

The location is first class, taking in the main entrance to the building. C. H. Myers, commissioner for the Dominion of Canada, is in charge, assisted by W. V. Bennett, the resident Canadian agent, and his daughter, Miss June Bennett. The exhibit is viewed by ninety percent of the exposition visitors, a vast portion of whom are astonished by the great showing of the country's resources here made. Wheat that grades "No. 1 hard northern" and is produced to the amount of thirty-eight to forty-five bushels per acre all through the Dominion, is the principal agricultural product shown. Commissioner Myers says the Dominion can supply the breadstuffs for all of the nations of the earth. Not only wheat, but oats, barley, rye, corn, and all of the cereals known to the United States grow and flourish in every locality, yielding abundantly. The corn is as large as that grown further south; the small grain has a lighter color, the barley being more plump and larger.

The dairy business of Canada has grown with great rapidity during the past few years. Last year's shipment of butter to Great Britain aggregated 12,000,000 pounds, valued at $2,900,000. Along with the butter goes the cheese, which last year amounted to 165,000,000 pounds, valued at $15,000,000. Honey and maple sugar are two other staple products of Canada shown in the exhibit.

The lumber industry of the Dominion has assumed great proportions since the destruction of the forests of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, and much of the material used in the United States is from the country to the north. The lumber exhibit is interesting as well as instructive, both on account of the numerous samples and the character of the exhibits. There are some oak, pine, poplar, birch, hickory, walnut, maple, cedar and a score of other varieties of the woods of the forest. One of the most interesting is a slab cut from a log of hard pine, 12 feet long, 6 feet wide, and 1 foot thick, which this plank came measured 150 feet to the first limb, in addition to this he declares that there are millions of acres of pine forests in the north of the Dominion that have never been visited by the chopper.

MRS. DRIFTER'S SAY.

Mrs. Drifter grew confidential the other evening. One of Drifter's friends had called, and the subject of his adventures in the South came up.
"Of course, it is all right," said Mrs. Drifter. "For Drifter to tell about the trials he endured when he was the editor of a paper in Texas. I never put in such a time in my life. I expected that Drifter would come home to me shot down at his old place, reading the proofs of that cunning little paper he got out of it. I used to make my blood run cold to hear those men talk about gun plays so and so had made up in somebody's saloon."
"Drifter reassured me by telling me that the crack of a pistol did not always mean that somebody had been hit. But you know what a brave man Drifter is. No, you don't, either. You say you don't know anything about the time he saved our lives down in Texas? I don't think I ever realized before. Just how courageous Drifter is. You know I had not seen a ranch nor a herd of cattle since I arrived in Texas, and I begged Drifter to take me where the real Panhandle cattle could be seen, so he took me out to the stockyards beyond Fort Worth."

"Times were very, very hard down there, and the packing house was closed, and there were no signs of life at the stockyards. We walked around and around the huge inclosure, and I tried to imagine what it must be like when the herds of Texas steers came in from the Panhandle. We walked a little distance from the high board fence, and were admiring the scenery, when some cows came strolling along. We stood watching and admiring them until about 40 or 50 of them came all at once there loomed up before us an immense Texas bull. His manner was dignified and masterful. He looked at us, elevated his head, sniffed, and may have given a jump."

"That was when Drifter and his in-born bravery came to the front. It is needless to say that I was frightened. I thought my last moment had come. The fence of the stockyards must have been 50 feet high; at least it looked so to me. Drifter afterward said that it was not more than 15, but I know that the fence around it was not so high as the fence. He grasped me by the hand and said:

"Little girl, run for the fence. I will stay here and protect you." I was brought up in the country, and I know it is the right of foolishness to run from a wild animal, so I flatly refused. "If we are going to die, we will die together," Drifter said, "but the best thing to do is to back slowly away from that awful beast. We will go toward the fence, and the bull paced toward us, never taking his eyes off us. I know I could hear Drifter's heart beat, but it must have been anxiety for me, for he is not afraid of anything."

"Get behind that tree," he said, "and his voice sounded as if it was away off somewhere, and I felt as if we were to be separated forever. Reassuringly he said: "I will see that he does not touch you." With that he took out his little pocket knife, opened the blade, which was not over three inches long, and said: "There!" with as much defiance in his tone as if he had been behind a stone barricade and armed with a Martini rifle. Somehow or other we got to that fence at last. It was evident that Drifter would not let me take any chances alone, for he got there as soon as I did, and if you ever saw two people climb a high fence in the quickest possible space of time, it was Mr. and Mrs. Drifter.

"We sat there on the top of the fence until dark, and Drifter never let go of the knife. I really believe that if the bull had attacked me Drifter would have stabbed him with that penknife. In the evening, after I had mastered my fears, we were close by the fence, until we reached a little hotel connected with the stockyards. Drifter never said a word about the adventure, and you would not have thought he had done anything remarkable, but I know that he saved my life from the wild Texas bull."

It took Mrs. Drifter's friends some time to rise to a proper appreciation of the courage displayed by her husband in that time of danger, and after she had fanned herself vigorously, she continued: "You ought to get Drifter to tell you about the time he went out to the lake near Fort Worth. I was just dying for a sight of a body of water. It did seem to me as if I could dry up there in Texas unless I could get back to the ocean or the great sea. Drifter did the best he could. He took me out to a pleasure resort about five miles from the city, at a place called Arlington. The trolley cars ran there, and the company made a great fuss over the Arlington lake. I told Drifter I would be satisfied if I could spend a few hours in a sailboat out there. At any rate, I heard a body of water once again in my life."

"Well, we had our dinner at the hotel, and I said: 'Now, Drifter, let us get right out on that lake as quick as we can.' The trolley in the hotel told us in what direction to walk to the lake, and we walked. We kept on walking, and not a sign of a lake was to be seen. At last we found our way back to the trolley line, and asked one of the railroad men where the Arlington lake was. 'Oh,' he said, 'I guess they have not turned the water on yet. There isn't much of a crowd, but Sunday there was a big excursion, then you could have seen the lake full of water.'"

"Turn the water on!" I exclaimed. "I thought they advertised sailboats all pond like and all that sort of thing." "So they do, ma'am," said the trolley man, "but you know it's pretty dry country down here, and they can't afford to waste water on that lake unless there was a big excursion, then you could have seen the lake full of water."

"Turn the water on!" I exclaimed. "I thought they advertised sailboats all pond like and all that sort of thing." "So they do, ma'am," said the trolley man, "but you know it's pretty dry country down here, and they can't afford to waste water on that lake unless there was a big excursion, then you could have seen the lake full of water."

"For the next week or two Trinity River was running thoroughly agitated in the Texas papers. As near as I could make out, the principal difficulty seemed to be that they were clearing the river of snags. As near as I could make out, the principal difficulty seemed to be that they were clearing the river of snags. A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

An Accident in Brazil During the Revolution of 1844.
The Count de Hubner tells in his "Memoirs" a thrilling story of an adventure in the Italian city of Brescia during the days of the revolution of 1844. When the trouble began in the streets, he contrived to get into a house, taking with him two or three other persons, including the wife of a minor official who had trusted the lady for a while to the count's care, but who was to have certain news of her as soon as possible.

The firing grew heavier, and the rebels soon had possession of almost every house in the street.
On the 19th of March, Count de Hubner decided that he must do something toward bettering his position in case of an assault, and he forced his only remaining servant to make a dash across the street to the palace where the Austrian general, Roth, was quartered, two blocks away and on the other side. The man was slowly to let the general know that De Hubner himself was coming, and to ask that the gates be held ready for him.

"Myself, prudence and my horse had a long and heated argument," says Count de Hubner. "Finally I pulled myself together. I had to let Prince Metternich know about myself, to make a last report and to keep my word about poor Mrs. M. I undid the door, drew a long breath, and plunged down the street."

"The bullets flew all around me, splashing leaden showers from the stone pavement. As I arrived at the gates of the palace, they swung open, and in a second I was inside, a bed. But only had my journey was done; I had still to go back again."

"A letter—my last report—was sent completed for Metternich and my message to the husband of Mrs. M. was given. I had to return."

"Again the gates were opened and I bounded forth. A veritable fusillade followed. From every window and balcony came the reports of white smoke, and I tried to dodge 40 bullets at once. In a minute I had reached my own door, and as I did so I turned to look back."

"Another man left the palace gates at full speed, but before he had half crossed the street a puff of smoke shot out of a window, and he fell flat and was instantaneously killed by a log across the gutter. The fire stopped at once—what use would even an Italian man in shooting a dead man?"

"But on the second that all became quiet to my great astonishment I saw this 'dead man' rise to his legs like a cat and dash across the street into the half open door waiting for him. The sharpshooters were taken by surprise and he escaped."

The Good Old Times.

"An increase of salary?" exclaimed the pompous manager of a small cannibal company to a clerk who had just made that request. "I am afraid, sir, that you are too extravagant."

He looked at his heavy watch chain and looked severely at the young man, who returned his stare boldly. It was the not phrase on such occasions, and the applicant had heard it all before. He meant to have that rise—no more elsewhere else.

"Excuse me, sir," he replied respectfully, "I haven't any chance to be extravagant on what I earn."

"Young man," continued the pompous gentleman, "I have risen from the monkey board. How? By being careful. When I was young, I made money by saving his shirt."

"Ah, that was in the old days," said the young man, with a lowering wink. "But with the ball pen and the greatest system of inspection you would find you couldn't save a shirt without being calumniated, however careful you were."

The manager nearly fainted, and the young man had to seek other employment.—Penny's Weekly.

DAY OF THE CLIPPER PAST.

In the Strand Has Disappeared For Good From Most American Ships.
"Stunails out of fashion!" said the shipper as he puffed vigorously at his old clay pipe, which has been around the Horn as many times as its owner. "Well, they may be, but it is because financiers' economy has abolished them on American ships. However, an old shipmate of mine, who is a bit of a crank, and left this port the other day, still carries a topmast stunner. It may be for sentimental reasons, just as a Confederate veteran might display the flag under which he went to battle, but stunnails are just as practical today as ever."

"Studding sail," you say? Oh, yes, studding sail may be literally correct, but Jack says 'stunails.' He objects to studding particulates and words with long and legs. He waxes briefly all the time—in everything perhaps except rum. The corruption of language by sailors is proverbial. Stunails may be a corruption of studding sail. But studding sail itself is a corruption of studding sail or steering sail, which in my opinion was the original term. The stunner, although used in moderate weather, was a driving sail. Our yachts carry stunnails today in the form of the immense side sail that is called the spinnaker."

"It costs to fit a ship with a suit of stunnails. Their use means extra labor for the crew, or a larger crew, and their storage takes valuable cargo room. The main expense for the ship, which her earnings in these days of railroads and ocean tramps do not warrant. The cargoes that sailing vessels carry today do not demand quick transportation, with its high freight rates. The modern sailing ship is little better than a floating warehouse. It is not driven. Spars and canvas are not precious as they were before the advent of the steamship. Sailing a ship to make a short passage is one of the lost arts. There is no demand for auxiliary canvas such as stunnails. The Yankee clipper is out of it—defunct."

"Way back in the middle of the century the stern and stripes decorated over ships that were really clipper boats and aloft in competition with one another and with foreign craft our clippers carried valuable cargoes—tea from China, coffee from Rio and fancy merchandise to San Francisco. The steamships do the tea and coffee carrying now. It was not in those days a good job for pleasure run. The clippers were under orders to get there to catch the ship of a market. Hours saved on their voyage, long though they were, meant many dollars for all concerned. Ships were driven then with canvas that fairly smothered them in fair weather and foul, and Yankee seamanship, with its characteristic judgment and nerve, was recognized and rewarded."

"But all this is merely a memory now. I can fancy the clipper of the fifties coming head on, rising against the clear sky of the lower latitudes, her sails mounting above the blue horizon, tier upon tier—sky-scrapers, moonrakers, cloud cleaners—a snow white pyramid, an angel's footstool, as Jack says. Did they carry stunnails? Ay, up to the royal yards."

THE PLEASURES OF LONDON

If the visitor in London wants to spend an enjoyable day let him go to the Crystal Palace. A public holiday is the best time, for then an idea can be got of the immense throngs that often leave the metropolis for a day's outing says a London letter.

Fifty thousand people is a good sized city, yet this number is often found at the palace on holidays. For the 44 years of its existence the palace has entertained over one hundred millions, and it is still in the business. The original idea, "to elevate and instruct, as well as to delight and amuse all classes," is maintained, but the programmes vary as the times demand. Of late years more and more attention has been given to variety shows, open-air fairs, fireworks, athletic sports, concerts, etc. than was at first dreamed of. In fact the exhibition features have nearly disappeared, and at present the palace can be safely classed as an immense variety show. Undoubtedly the institution has had a great influence for good as it has been liberally patronized. That this pleasure or falling of somewhat is not surprising when one considers the several similar institutions that have sprung up, copying the methods of the parent concern. The last half year's report shows a decrease in attendance of about 50,000—nothing alarming, yet sufficient to urge the management to look about for the best talent the world can supply.

A feeling of disappointment takes possession of the visitor as he steps into the great hall and sees a lady lion tamer holding forth. There is an air of the city stores, too, about the numerous stalls that sell all sorts of trinkets. Then the furniture needs varying, and a new floor would do no harm. The ferns and palms look dusty, and the band reminds one of the numerous country fairs in this country, yet when one gets a good view of the interior and contemplates the All double the fitness of things vanish, and the patron determines to enjoy himself.

To have pleasure at the palace it is not necessary to spend money, though sipping or so extra. The cosmopolitan character of the entertainment, too, requires more judgment, and it is only a not pleasing another can be found that is pleasing. The most fastidious can be satisfied. If indoor music sounds tame, go outside, and listen to the other four bands, for the music stands more distant, and it is though all hands play simultaneously, at no stand can music from another be heard. This gives an idea of the way the palace and its 200 acres are laid out. There are no signs to keep off the grass, but one can lie down anywhere and sleep if he wishes to or rest at will. No watchful police tip gently and no one frowns if you pluck a leaf or a flower, though numerous appeals are posted about asking visitors to be sparing of the products of nature. The palace proper covers 13 acres. It is of glass and iron, or steel, light almost as if open air, and when lit up by gas the scene is a grand one. There were used in the construction 500 tons of glass, 9612 tons of iron, 175 tons of bolts and 103 tons of nails for woodwork. The central nave is 1,392 feet long, or a quarter of a mile. The center transept is 298 feet high. In all this great building there are numerous seats for the weary and numerous restaurants, with prices slightly higher than in the city.

One spends but little time in the building; it is commonplace and tiresome, except when concerts or shows are on. It is more pleasant outside (the weather permitting), watching the throngs of English taking their pleasure. Here is a select party that has taken possession of a crowded thoroughfare. With only a concertina or mouth harp, that defy the thousands and sing and dance until worn out. As they tire they depart in couples and seek some shady nook. There, with their lunch and quart of ale or beer, they settle down until, at night, when the signal is given to clear the grounds, hundreds of times the fireworks have given food lovers a rude awakening, and so persistent are some of the couples that the management has emphatically stated that it will not be responsible for accidents that occur in the mass. Couples driven from dark retreats are greeted with shouts of laughter as they come rushing out from among the showers of sparks, while many a holiday dress goes home after a day at the palace with a hole burned in it, so reckless are the pleasure seekers.

Those who want open-air promenade can have them free of cost. The splendid lakes—there are three or four large ones—afford boating. The great bicycle track has its admirers, and it is estimated that on last bank holiday over 25,000 enthusiasts witnessed the races. Cricketers, too, have great grounds, while neither is bowling, rink skating and other attractive sports. The great monkeys and brilliant birds serve as a Zoological Garden. An open air theater delights its thousands. Panoramas, a big theater, a big concert hall, a face garden, brilliantly illuminated at night, a daily balloon ascension, novelties in the way of merry-go-rounds, two great towers from which one can look down upon London 700 feet below on one side, while on the opposite side can be seen eight of England's richest and most densely populated countries.

Aside from amusements one can see a fine gallery of pictures, oil and water colors, by the best living artists. There is also a small machinery hall, a room full of babies in incubators, together with the latest in all the arts. No visitor to London ever misses the Crystal Palace, and when he gets through he almost forgets what seems a legend, that the palace is the remains of the great World's Fair of 1851 that was held in Hyde Park. The World's Fair feature is almost eliminated. The Crystal Palace is a gigantic eight-million dollar variety pleasure resort. It contains something for all nations, and is probably the most patronized amusement resort in the world.

FASHION NOTES

In the new styles now being disclosed there is a well defined tendency toward the picturesque. This is usually the case at times when new fashions are developing, but the present tendency is more marked than usual, and much of its expression is of such nature that its picturesqueness does not promise to wear off soon. Among the picture schemes military finish and accessories are naturally abundant. Economical women won't go into this in any but the least expensive ways, even though admirers of it, for the fancy will pass quickly. Military trimming, however, is remarkably susceptible to change, and it won't be long before this grade of workmanship will monopolize it. Braiding in military fashion seems in no danger of being overdone, simply because few women will endorse it. In headgear a lady that holds for young women who very carefully try to hit off informality is the campaign hat. This is all right if you like it, but it should be trimmed lowly with a scarf, and it is better not to wear a hat of this kind that does not come from a first class place. Even then you should have the help of a salesman you can trust, for also the shops cater to the family who do not know, these days. Of course it will not do to make the mistake of buying something intended for these folk and of thinking it was alright just because it was offered gravely by a clerk who thought you knew better.

A wiser search for the picturesque in models that will outlast a passing fancy.

Paine's Celery Compound Saves a life after failures with other medicines

Mr. McMullin says: "Paine's Celery Compound Worked Miracles for Me."

THE ONLY SAFE MEDICINE FOR SICK AND DISEASED PEOPLE

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO.
Gentlemen—For over four years I have been in poor health, and received treatment from two doctors besides using seven kinds of patent medicines. I also sent to New York and got a month's treatment of a special medicine but no good results came from it. I was run down, suffered terribly, could not rest at night, and every morning had a severe pain in my back, dizziness in my head, and vomited green matter, and had no appetite. I heard of Paine's Celery Compound and decided to give it a trial, and am happy to report that it worked wonders. The pains are all gone, I rest well at night, my appetite is good, and my health is now splendid. Paine's Celery Compound has worked miracles for me. I recommend it to all sick people as the best medicine.

CLOVER AND TIMOTHY.

The Comparative Value of These Grasses on the Farm.

Clover and timothy are two of the most important food crops grown on the farm, especially in this country. They form the bulk of the food fed to our animals for the production of either milk, beef or pork. It is therefore important to determine which of the two is most valuable for the object in view, considering at the same time which is the cheapest to produce and how each affects the fertility of the soil; for it is a high time that the farmer is looking into the problem of how best to keep up the fertility of his farm without having to resort to the use of commercial fertilizers.

Of all the food elements necessary for the growth of crops and that we are called upon to supply, nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash are most important; these are therefore, the one mainly to be considered in keeping up the soil's fertility. Some plants require a more liberal supply of these elements than do others; also, some plants have better facilities than others for gathering from remote sources a their necessary amount of food. The latter ability depends upon the amount and nature of their root growth. Plants, such as clover, whose roots penetrate deeply into the soil, have an evident advantage, being able to draw food from a considerable depth; while shallow-rooted plants, such as timothy, must be satisfied with what is available near the surface.

Now, whether you are feeding plants or animals, nitrogen is the most costly food element. About four-fifths of the bulk of the atmosphere is nitrogen in the free state; but as useless as a food for either plants or animals. Clover belongs to a family of plants (leguminous), other examples of which are the pea, bean and vetch, that have grown on their roots small white bodies, which, by virtue of micro-organisms contained in them, have the power to appropriate the free nitrogen of the air and convert it into such a form that these plants can utilize it as food for themselves. Timothy has not this power of utilizing the free nitrogen of the atmosphere, but must obtain its supply wholly from the available nitrogen compounds already in the soil.

If a crop of timothy be grown and fed on the farm, and the manure carefully saved and applied, the soil will be enriched, but a crop of clover grown and likewise fed on the farm, and the manure carefully saved and applied, not only the nitrogen drawn from the soil will be returned, but a large quantity which the clover drew from the air will be left to the soil in a form available for plant food. Thus, in the case of clover, the soil will have gained enough nitrogen to enable it to produce a good crop of corn, potatoes, wheat or other grain.

Clover is a deep feeder; its roots penetrate deeply into the sub-soil and draw a large amount of phosphoric acid and potash from a depth that the roots of ordinary plants never reach. Timothy, being a shallow feeder, draws all of its phosphoric acid and potash from the surface soil. In this we can see, that if fed on the farm and the manure returned to the land, clover enriches the surface soil by the amount of phosphoric acid and potash drawn from the sub-soil, while timothy has not this advantage.

If utilized on the farm, clover is unexcelled in keeping up the fertility of the land. Owing to its large development of roots, clover brings a great deal of organic matter (humus) to the soil (almost half the amount of its total growth is left in the soil as roots and stubble) and thus it has the effect of improving the tilth of soils naturally deficient in organic matter; making stiff clays more porous and sandy more retentive. Plots of clover also remove many draw that clover is especially valuable as a green manure, because of its extensive feeding habits and the large amount of organic matter it brings to the soil.

When compared on an even footing as foods, clover is more valuable pound for pound than timothy, especially when fed to cattle or sheep. It contains three substances which make beans what they are generally considered to be—a strong food for a working man. By the chemical tests these substances are called "albuminoids," or "proteins." They contain practically all of the nitrogen in the plant, and are the chief materials in lean meat and eggs. It is for this reason that clover is so valuable as a food for the animal body. But, as all plants contain an abundance of these non-albuminoids they need not be considered as a source of value. A food is considered rich in proportion to the amount of digestible albuminoids that it contains. In other words, the substances are called "digestible albuminoids" to digestible non-albuminoids the more valuable will be the food. Clover hay, fed alone, is a well-balanced ration, and is called 1 to 6. Timothy hay is not so rich, having a nutritive ratio of only about 1 to 9. According to these figures two pounds of clover hay is a worth three pounds of timothy hay. The manure resulting from the two foldings, if made under the same conditions, will show a similar comparative value, two tons of that from the clover hay being worth three tons of that from timothy hay.

It is a lamentable fact that so many farmers have not yet learned how to make good clover hay and until they do they will not be able to appreciate, by experience, its real value over timothy. A. T. Winchell, at the East Simcoe Farmers' Institute.

Feed on Charcoal.

Four turkeys were confined in a pen and fed on meat, food potatoes and oats. Four others of the same breed were at the same time confined in another pen and fed daily on the same article, with the addition of very finely pulverized charcoal in and with their feed—mixed meal and boiled potatoes. They had also a plentiful supply of broken charcoal in their pen. The eight were killed the next day and there was a difference of one and a half pounds each, in favor of the fowls which had been supplied with charcoal, they being much the heavier, and the meat of superior in point of tenderness and flavor.—Poultry Coven.

WANTED A WIFE

Several months ago Filippo Amando went to Louis Aruenisio, a good-looking Italian laborer, and said to him:

"Louis, why don't you get married?"
"I would like to," Louis replied, "but I have not yet found a woman that suits me."

No more was said on the subject at that time. Both Italians live in a tenement at No. 29 Commercial street, Buffalo. Amando was a happy man with a wife and four children; Aruenisio was a melancholy, unsatisfied workman who ambition was to get back to Italy. Perhaps a week after the two men had spoken of marriage Amando went again to his young friend and said:

"Louis, I have found a girl who will make you a fine wife."
"Who is she?"
"My daughter Loretta."

"Where can I see her?"
"She is in Italy, but she will come over here if you will marry her. I will show you a picture of her."

Amando produced a photograph of a handsome Italian girl and Aruenisio was immediately captivated by it. He took the picture to his room. One day he sought Amando and said to him: "I will marry your daughter if you will send for her."

"But it will cost $25 from Italy to Buffalo and I haven't the money," replied Amando.
Aruenisio thought the matter over. He had $10 saved and that he gave to Amando with the understanding that the balance would be supplied by the father. A month later the father said he had been unable to get the remaining $10 and he asked Aruenisio for it. The latter broke the sum, gave it to Amando and began to count the days before the girl, with whose photograph he had fallen in love, would arrive in Buffalo.

Days and weeks went by. Aruenisio became very impatient and he often asked Amando when the daughter would arrive. "Oh, she'll be here pretty soon," the father usually replied. About a week ago Amando told the impatient lover that the young woman would arrive in New York on Sunday and that she expected Aruenisio to meet her. The latter took his savings and last Saturday started for New York to meet Loretta. He had been told just when the vessel bearing her would reach her pier in New York and he was extremely happy.

Yesterday he returned from New York, disappointed, discouraged, angry and poor. No such boat as Amando had described arrived in New York. On no incoming vessel was there a girl named Amando nor one answering that girl's description, he said. Aruenisio went at once to Amando's lodgings when he reached Buffalo. There he learned that Amando had gone away. Then he went to Police Court and swore out a warrant charging Amando with grand larceny. Harry Evans, court interpreter, went with Aruenisio to find Amando, but the latter, it was learned, had left the city.

A MIDNIGHT SESSION

Act. We examined the petition and found it sufficiently signed. We recommend that the side walk be built from George to Astor streets, ten feet wide, this year and that John & Sheen be instructed to construct that portion of the same terms as their present contract, provided they will drop the Water street section of the contract if the Town so desire, and that the balance asked for in this petition from Astor to Bethune streets, be constructed next year.

2. We recommend that the Town furnish the crushed granite for the Government contractors for the repairs of the sidewalk at the post office.

3. That the Street Inspector be instructed to repair the sidewalk on Astor street from the railway to Antrim street.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. DAWSON, Chairman.

FIRE, WATER AND LIGHT.

The report of the Fire, Water and Light Committee was presented as follows:

To the Mayor and Council of the town of Peterboro.

Gentlemen—Your Fire, Water and Light Committee beg leave to report and recommend as follows:

1. That tenders be asked for sleighs for the Hook and Ladder Truck.

2. That the drivers and the engineer of the fire engine be provided with winter suits, and that the Committee be authorized to ask for tenders for them and purchase them.

3. That the spare hose be put in the old hose wagon and that a tarpaulin be purchased to cover them.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. M. WHITE, Chairman.

SEWER INSPECTOR.

The report of the Sewerage Committee, which was as follows, was presented by Chairman Best:

To the Mayor and Council of the town of Peterboro.

Gentlemen—Your Sewerage Committee beg leave to report that they have engaged Mr. Loman as inspector of the sewer work at $3 a day, and recommend that he be paid on the certificate of the Town Engineer.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

H. BEST, Chairman.

HUNTER STREET BRIDGE.

The Joint Committee presented the following report:

To the Mayor and Council of the town of Peterboro.

Gentlemen—Your Joint Committee beg leave to report as follows:

Your Committee met with a Committee of the Council of the County of Peterboro on August 25th last to consider the rebuilding of the Hunter street bridge. Tenders for the planing were received and the tender of M. M. Boyd & Co. of Belknap, at $11 per M. f. o. b. Peterboro was accepted.

The work was placed in the hands of the County Engineer for completion and has been carried out. The flooring of the bridge, recommended by the County Engineer, was also ordered to be done.

All of which was respectfully submitted.

LANGFORD, Chairman.

MUD LAKE AND PIGEON CREEK BRIDGES.

Councillor Langford submitted the following report in reference to the bridges:

To the Mayor and Council of the town of Peterboro.

Gentlemen—I beg to report that as instructed by the Council I visited the Mud Lake and the Pigeon Creek bridges with representatives of the County, and at the Pigeon Creek bridge also met the warden of the County of Victoria.

The Mud Lake bridge escaped serious damage from the going out of the ice this spring, the thaw not being accompanied by the customary high winds. The apron approaches, some of the rail guards and the anchorage only required to be repaired and readjusted. The flooring, however, was badly worn and found unsafe for travel and the buoyancy of the bridge in question was insufficient. It was decided, however, to make the repairs required to make it safe for public travel for this year, and it was estimated that this would not cost more than $275. Instructions were given to Mr. Kelly and he has maintained the bridge in safety for travel.

The Pigeon Creek Bridge in like manner suffered little from the going out of the ice in the spring and for the same reason. It was decided that a pier as suggested by the County Engineer be constructed during the winter in the required position and for which tenders should be invited, also that repairs should be executed to the flooring of the entire bridge with 2 inch plank, such as may be necessary for the immediate requirements of safety, it being considered that these repairs would answer until the entire bridge should be refloored and that 8 inch plank would wear out the present old 5 inch plank with which the bridge is floored. It was also decided as an experiment to lay 100 feet in length of the bridge with 8 inch plank laid longitudinally and for eight feet in width to test its wearing resistance as well as its bonding capabilities, and to add some floats where the bridge is at present weak in buoyancy. It was further resolved, that as the bridge had been in such a worn and dilapidated condition requiring extra care and attention from the caretaker, Mr. Flood, his salary for this year should be increased by $12.

Both these bridges are in a condition that will require next year large expenditures to keep them in a safe condition for traffic.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. LANGFORD.

PROPERTY COMMITTEE.

The report of the Property Committee was presented as follows:

To the Mayor and Council of the town of Peterboro.

Gentlemen—Your Property Committee asked for tenders for forty tons of coal for the Town Buildings and received the following tenders:

The Stevens Coal Company, 95.00 ton
R. J. Wollenholme, 5.25 ton
The Rathbun Coal Company, 4.35 ton
The People's Coal Company, 4.75 ton
T. Fitzgerald, 5.35 ton

2. We recommend that the contract be given to the People's Coal Company at $4.75 per ton, the coal to be of first-class quality, according to sample, to be weighed on the Market scales, and to be delivered in the Town Buildings.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. H. WHITE, Chairman.

THE POLICE COURT.

Thomas Kelly, the Corn Cure Man, Appears in Court.

Police Magistrate Dumble took his seat promptly at ten o'clock yesterday morning and was confronted by a full house. They were all anxious to hear the proceedings of the charge against the fakir who is having the equality of his profession tested here.

The first case taken up was that of Mrs. Pilling's who was charged with having her horse run in the street. Pilling appeared in her own behalf and endeavored to convince the magistrate that she was not guilty and that the man Lane who laid the information was too drunk on her. The magistrate thought differently, however, and she was fined $2.

A young man was charged with being drunk and disorderly in a public house on Sunday. He pleaded guilty and got $2 and costs.

Thomas Kelly, a fakir, was then charged with having stolen from one Smith the sum of $1. Through his solicitor, Daniel O'Connor, he pleaded to be tried summarily, but Mr. Wood for the Crown stated he was not prepared to go on with the case until Wednesday, not having time to get the necessary witnesses. After considerable discussion it was arranged for the case to come up on Monday night. Two hundred dollars bail was asked for and when the prisoner's pal walked up to the magistrate and composedly took the necessary amount from a wad he had on him, it was sufficient to prove anyone that there is money in selling corn medicine.

AN INDIAN CRADLE SONG.

Bring thee low in thy cradle soft,
Deep in the dusky wood!
Swing thee low and swing thee soft—Sleep as a popoosie should.
For safe in your little birchen nest
Quiet will come and peace and rest,
If the little popoosie is good.

The coyote howls on the prairie cold,
And the owl hoots in the tree,
And the big moon shines on the little child
As it slumbers peacefully.
So swing thee high in thy little nest
And swing thee low and take the rest
That the night wind brings to thee!

Father lies on the fragrant ground,
Dreaming of lust and light,
And the pine leaves rustle with mournful sound.

All through the solemn night,
But the little popoosie in his birchen nest
Is swinging low as he takes his rest,
Till the sun brings the morning light.

THE DERELICT.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS

I was second mate of the American brig Ruby, bound from Java to New York, and all had gone well with us for a fortnight, when accident brought about a curious adventure. Just as night was closing down, with the brig sailing along on an even keel and the breeze steady, I swung myself upon the rail to get a look at what seemed to be a raft floating past us. I may have been overcautious or a rope may have given way, but of a sudden I found myself in the water. The men at the wheel witnessed my mishap and gave the alarm and threw me the life preserver always ready for such an emergency, and I had no doubt of being picked up within ten minutes. I had seized the float, when down thundered a black squall from out of the west, and next moment it was as dark as midnight and the sea all in a chop. I felt that it was all over with me then. The men would be lucky to bring the brig through the fierce squall without thinking of me. Indeed, if she had had 100 men on board instead of 12, they would not have dared to lower a boat. I got just one glimpse of the craft as she shot away into the darkness, and then began to work to get the life preserver under my arms. I was buffeted and knocked about in the most confusing manner, and had the squall lasted five minutes longer I should have been drowned on the surface. It passed away as suddenly as it came, and ten minutes later the sea had calmed down, and I was floating with my head well out of the water.

I had gone overboard at about 7 o'clock in the evening. For the first three hours my hopes and fears made me alert, but by and by I felt a dull languor and was only half conscious of what was going on. An hour after midnight I was suddenly aroused from what seemed to be a troubled dream. I was bumping against something hard, and my first idea was that I had been cast ashore. It took me several minutes to shake myself together and make out that I was alongside the hull of a vessel. It was hard to credit the fact, but fact it was, and when I realized it I had scarcely more to do than lift up my hands and seize the low rail and draw myself inboard. I had found a derelict brig. Both masts were gone close to the deck, much of her bulwarks swept away, and I knew by the feel of her that she was waterlogged. I took one glance over her and no more, but dumped myself down on the deck and was asleep in five seconds. When I opened my eyes, the sun was an hour high, and a big albatross was perched directly above me and not 50 feet high. It did not take me long to master the details of the wreck. In the first place, she was loaded with Australian redwood and could not sink beyond a certain point; next she had been floating about for months and months. There was some wreckage on her decks, but masts and yards and boats and booms had gone clear off her as they fell. She had settled down until her scupper holes were only a few inches above water, but owing to the buoyant cargo she could not sink deeper. As a sailor I made her out to be a French craft, and later on I discovered that she was the Marie of Brest. She was a small craft, carrying a crew of eight or nine men, and was a forecabin ship instead of having a deckhouse for the men. The forecabin or cook's galley had gone overboard with the rest, but the doors of the cabin and the scuttle to the forecabin were tightly closed. The brig had been wrecked aloft in equal as she had at the same time sprung a leak. Whether her crew had been washed overboard or taken to the boats there was no means of telling until I had made an investigation below.

The first thing was to get something to eat and drink. After a few minutes' work I broke open the cabin doors and got into the pantry. There was wine in plenty, as might have been expected, and I soon came across some meat and biscuits in tins. I washed water, but there was none to be had, and so, taking what I could lay hands on, I went on deck and made a fair meal. When this had been concluded, I returned to the cabin for an overhaul. All the charts and nautical instruments were there, nor had any of the spare clothing of captain or mates been taken away. I found the logbook, and though I could not read French I made out the latitude and longitude last recorded. As near as I could figure it out the brig was then midway between Australia and the Cape, and the date was nearly seven months old. She had drifted to every point of the compass, but must have drifted nearly 2,000 miles to the north to reach the spot where I found her. It was soon before I began an examination of the last entry to me how I should fare for provisions. I found flour, wine, table water, preserves, boxes of biscuits, shoon bacon, codfish and other articles in liberal quantity—enough to last me for months. Forward of the cabin I found a storeroom, in which were several barrels of beef and pork, with four barrels of coarse flour, dried fish, beans, coffee, tea and other articles of food for the men. Forward of this were the water casks, a dozen or more, and all full. When I came to examine the forecabin, I found boots, oilskins, sea-wearers and other belongings of the crew, to prove that they had not gone away in the boats. Indeed I was sure before I had half concluded my investigation that every man had perished when the brig was wrecked. It was night before I had finished, and I tumbled into the captain's berth and never slept more soundly. You may think it queer that during the day I had scarcely glanced around the horizon and given no thought to rescue, and that I went to bed with a contented mind, but sailors are prone to take luck as it comes, good or bad. I had made a miraculous escape and was fairly safe on the wreck, and there was nothing to worry over if not taken off for weeks. Interested as I was in overhauling the stranger, I would not have tossed up a penny to be taken off by a passing vessel.

When morning came again I made a more thorough investigation of the cabin. In rear of the captain's stateroom I chanced upon a closet which had escaped me the day before, and here I made a great find. There was about $1,000 in French gold and notes, $1,200 in English goldpieces and exactly $7,000 in goldpieces just struck off at the Australian mints. The money was in two tin boxes, but whether it belonged to the ship, her captain or to other people I could not determine. It was a big fortune to a poor sailor, and I remember that I acted very foolishly over the find. I counted it over and over again, and when I at last realized that I was rich I rushed on deck, with a wild hope of seeing a mail close at hand. But for the money I believe that the long days and nights which followed would have been rather contentful for me. Isolated as the situation was, I had plenty to eat and drink, there was nothing to break my sleep, the wreck might drift where the world, but there was no danger of her going down. The discovery of the money was followed by a hope of rescue, and this again by worry and anxiety. I wanted to go ashore to enjoy my wealth. I feared that when rescue did come I should be robbed. I conjured up a thousand senseless fears, and the upshot was anything but beneficial. I have spoken of the general situation in a careless way. As a matter of fact, being a navigator, I took observations regularly when the weather permitted and picked off the drift of the wreck on the chart. On the average the weather was fine, but there were days and nights when gale and sea tumbled the waterlogged craft about until only a sailor could have lived through it. Instead of lifting her the waves ran over her, and at such times the decks were two feet under water and the cabin was flooded. The cargo was adrift with the water in the hold, and as the wreck rolled and pitched the timbers rubbed together and produced noises which would have frightened landmen into fits.

I kept an accurate reckoning, and I had been on the wreck just 49 days when I caught sight of my first sail. No doubt ships had passed and repassed by day and night, but I could set no signal by day and from the first I slept all through the night. This sail was discovered early one morning, coming up from the south, and her course was such that she must see me. I had put the money into bags and the bags into bundles of clothing in view of a rescue, and therefore had nothing to do but wait. The stranger, which proved to be an English merchantman bound for India, but considerably off her course, was within four miles of me and had not a signal to gladden my heart when a big whale suddenly broke water close to the wreck. He was followed half a minute later by a second, which attacked him with great fury. The monsters put up a terrific battle, lashing and biting each other and kicking up a sea like a gale of wind. They at first drew away from me, but after a few minutes made a circle which brought them back. What I had feared from the first came to pass after a quarter of an hour. Half blinded by pain and fury, or feeling himself overwhelmed and desirous of getting away, one of the whales suddenly whirled about and came for the wreck head on. He was fully 60 feet long, and he came like a moving mountain. I made sure of my hold as I saw him coming, but he struck the wreck on her port side with such force that I was thrown across the deck and into the sea beyond. I heard the crash of planks and timbers, was tossed about by the waves, rubbed against the whale as he scoured and reached the surface to find the wreck a hull no longer. It was simply a heap of floating debris. The strange ship drew nearer, lowered a boat, and I was picked up as I clung to a plank. The money was gone, all else but the timbers which composed the cargo had disappeared, and my adventure, surprising as it had begun, had ended in a manner strange enough to satisfy even the most imaginative novelist. I was carried to India by the rescuing ship, and I know that the French consul at Calcutta set inquiries on foot regarding the fate of the crew of the Marie. What they amounted to I never learned, but have always felt satisfied that all perished when their craft was dismasted. But for the fight between the whales I believe the brig could have been pumped out and sailed into port, but fortune is a jade who robs Jack Tar far oftener than she smiles upon him.

Jinks—I say, old fellow, just slip round to that optician's and bribe him not to give her any better glasses than she has.—London Tit-Bits.

PETERBOROUGH, ON. OFFICE 1898

THE LOAN BY-LAW

The Times does not anticipate very much opposition to the proposal to aid the Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Company in the erection of new buildings and the extension of their works. It will cost the ratepayers practically nothing, and will ensure the employment of a largely increased number of men, not only while the buildings are under construction, but afterwards. The company's business has been growing and extending until it has assumed proportions that demand increased facilities. As already pointed out in these columns, the aid which is proposed to grant is not in the shape of a loan, but a loan, that will be repaid with interest to the town. The security offered is ample, and effectively protects the town from possible loss.

The Times is in favor of the by-law simply because it believes that the enlargement of the works will be of great benefit to the town without costing the ratepayers a dollar.

THE ROAD ROLLER QUESTION

The Council is having a hot time over the purchase of a road roller, and considerable juggling has been going on between the representatives of the two roller machines and certain members of the Council. That there should be any room for a difference of opinion as regards the superiority of the Pitts machine over the Russell, is a puzzle to us. It is an open secret that a dead end was made in favor of the Russell, notwithstanding its inferiority, but this was balked by the action of the mayor who held the resolution was out of order.

Certain members of the Council will doubtless experience some difficulty in explaining their position in the matter to the electors next January should they seek another term at the Council board.

PROHIBITION FIGURES

Comparisons between the plebiscite of this year and that of 1894 cannot fail to be interesting, and will afford much food for reflection. In the Province of Ontario, in 1894, there was 180,067 male votes polled for prohibition, and 108,494 polled against it. Of female votes, 12,402 were polled for prohibition, and 2,226 against it. The total majority for prohibition was 81,700. The majority for prohibition this year is only 14,000. It cannot be said that the loss of the female vote fully accounts for the difference in the majority, as, if the 19,176 female majority in 1894 were added to the present majority, it would only come to 64,000.

In Ontario in 1894 the following cities gave majorities for prohibition—Belleville, Brantford, Chatham, Guelph, Hamilton, Kingston, London, Ottawa, Stratford, St. Thomas, St. Catharines, and Toronto—every city in the Province except Windsor. In 1898 the following cities return majorities against prohibition—Belleville, Guelph, Hamilton, Kingston, London, Ottawa, Stratford, St. Thomas, St. Catharines, Toronto and Windsor. The only cities favoring prohibition are Brantford and Chatham. All the cities of Ontario taken together returned in 1894 a majority for prohibition of 8,240. This year they return a majority against it of 8,343.

The total registered vote under the Dominion franchise in 1896 was 1,368,736 votes, of which in the Dominion Parliamentary election of that year 849,780 were polled, and 518,956 unpolled. It is as yet impossible to say what was the total vote cast in the plebiscite of this year. It will be interesting to know whether or not it was above 50 per cent. of the possible vote. It is evident, however, that the majority for prohibition of 17,929 is exceedingly small in proportion to the possible vote of 1,368,736, or even a probable vote of half that figure.

Many explanations will doubtless be given of the remarkable apathy of the country in the present plebiscite, and of the retrogression of the prohibition vote since 1894. Our own view of the matter is that the temperance people themselves do not believe that it is possible to enforce prohibitory laws in the country. The plebiscite anyway is a French institution that cannot be engrafted upon the British system of government.

In the plebiscite Winnipeg declared for keeping to cold water. English bondholders also have decided that Winnipeg may keep its water works. They refuse to buy them for $40,000.

Out of every 1,000 of population France can put 370 in the field in case of war. The other 630 out of every 1,000 can be depended upon to start a revolution at home in case the armies are defeated at the front.

Chinese doctors from all the provinces have been summoned to the bedside of the ailing Emperor. When they get through with him only one man in all China will be needed to put the finishing touch on the job. That man will be the undertaker extraordinary to the Imperial household.

It would not be a bad suggestion for the Bell Telephone Company to lay their wires under the sidewalks "instead of in the streets, on those thoroughfares which are likely to be covered in asphalt in the near future," says the Quebec Telegraph. It is a suggestion that suits all other cities as well, but it is one which seems never acted upon.

Judge Robertson seems inclined to dismiss the application to change the venue of the Ponson trial. He has reserved judgment on the question, but his remarks during the argument of counsel seemed to imply that only for the most extraordinary reasons could an accused person be deprived of his inherent right to be tried in his own neighborhood.

Mr. Arthur Hill, of Saginaw, Mich., is a fair minded man. He states that it was a very unwise move of the United States to discriminate against Canadian lumber and then endeavor to force Ontario to hand over her logs. The white pine of Northern Ontario he considers an invaluable asset. Mr. Hill, it may be explained, has lumber interests in the Midland district. He is credibly informed that Sir Wilfrid will let the Ontario timber regulations stand as they are. Any remedy must come from Washington not from Ottawa.

Mr. Louis G. Harris is the patentee of a method of making gas from garbage. Mr. James A. Simmons and the International Sanitary Gas Company, of West Virginia, are making litigation out of it also. They claim that he was to sell his patents to them for $500,000. As security for the payment all the capital stock of the company, when formed, was to be turned over to him. They claim that he has received $100,000, and has not given over the patent, claiming that the contract was void. The company has, therefore, instituted a suit in the United States Court to compel him to conform to the alleged agreement.

BY-LAW No.

A By-law to Aid the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company Limited

Passed the... day of... 1898.

WHEREAS The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, purpose and intend to enlarge their manufacturing establishment in the Town of Peterborough and for that purpose to erect a solid brick building as hereinafter mentioned in connection with their present manufacturing establishment and fit up and equip the same with fixed machinery at a total cost of not less than forty thousand dollars;

AND WHEREAS for the purpose of aiding the said company in the erection and equipment of such building and in the extension of their manufacturing establishment the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough have agreed, subject to this By-law receiving the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, to advance and loan to the said company the sum of thirty thousand dollars, upon the terms and subject to the conditions hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS it will be necessary to borrow the said sum and for that purpose to issue debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars payable as hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS there will require to be raised annually by special rate for paying the said debt and interest the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred and Ten Dollars and Eighty-four cents; AND WHEREAS the amount of the said rateable property of the Municipality according to the last revised Assessment Roll, is the sum of Four Million Three Hundred and Three Thousand Three Hundred Dollars;

AND WHEREAS the amount of the existing Debenture Debt of the Municipality is the sum of Two Hundred and Sixty Thousand Dollars and Ninety-six cents; and there is no part of the principal or interest thereof in arrears;

THE CORPORATION OF THE TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH

By the Council thereof therefore enacts as follows:

1. This By-law shall be inoperative and of no effect unless and until the same shall have received the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.

2. Subject to the provisions of the foregoing section this By-law shall take effect on the thirty-first day of December, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Ninety-eight.

3. It shall and may be lawful for the Mayor and Treasurer to borrow the sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and to issue Debentures of the said Corporation and to raise the said sum under the Corporate Seal and signed by the Mayor and Treasurer of the said Town and countersigned by the Secretary of the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust, such Debentures to be payable in Twenty years from the date of the issue of the said Debentures and to bear interest at the rate of Three and a Half per centum per annum, payable in even portions, half-yearly on the Thirtieth day of June and the Thirtieth day of December in each year and to have coupons annexed for the payment of such interest at the office and interest to be payable at the office of the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust in the Town of Peterborough.

4. The said Debentures shall be issued within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.

5. The said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, realized from the sale of said Debentures shall be paid to the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, upon and only upon the terms and conditions hereinafter contained.

6. The said Company shall, before becoming entitled to the said money for any part thereof, erect, fit up and equip with fixed machinery in connection with their present manufacturing establishment in the Town of Peterborough a solid brick building not less than five hundred feet by three hundred feet or a superficial area of not less than thirty thousand square feet at a cost of not less than Forty Thousand Dollars, and have the same in running order in connection with their present manufacturing establishment within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature, evidence of the facts aforesaid to be furnished by Statutory declaration, and shall make, execute and register a firm approved by the Council a first Mortgage to the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust upon the said building and land occupied by the same and fixed machinery therein for securing payment of the said Debentures, as Trustees for and on behalf of the said Corporation, of the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and interest thereon at three and a half per centum per annum payable half-yearly on the Thirtieth day of June and the Thirtieth day of December in each year, the said principal to be payable as follows:—In twenty equal annual instalments of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-Four Cents each payable on the First day of April in each year, such annual sum being equivalent to the sinking fund of said Debentures and being the sum at three and a half per cent interest required to produce the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, the first of such instalments of principal to be payable on the Thirtieth day of April, one thousand and six hundred and eighty-four and nine-tenths dollars, and the subsequent instalments of interest computed on the date on which such money shall be paid to the Company, to be payable on the First interest day following such payment.

7. The said Company shall, before becoming entitled to the said money for any part thereof, execute and register a firm approved by the Council a first Mortgage to the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust upon the said building and land occupied by the same and fixed machinery therein for securing payment of the said Debentures, as Trustees for and on behalf of the said Corporation, of the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and interest thereon at three and a half per cent per annum payable half-yearly on the Thirtieth day of June and the Thirtieth day of December in each year, the said principal to be payable as follows:—In twenty equal annual instalments of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-Four Cents each payable on the First day of April in each year, such annual sum being equivalent to the sinking fund of said Debentures and being the sum at three and a half per cent interest required to produce the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, the first of such instalments of principal to be payable on the Thirtieth day of April, one thousand and six hundred and eighty-four and nine-tenths dollars, and the subsequent instalments of interest computed on the date on which such money shall be paid to the Company, to be payable on the First interest day following such payment.

8. The said Company shall, before becoming entitled to the said money for any part thereof, execute and register a firm approved by the Council a first Mortgage to the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust upon the said building and land occupied by the same and fixed machinery therein for securing payment of the said Debentures, as Trustees for and on behalf of the said Corporation, of the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and interest thereon at three and a half per cent per annum payable half-yearly on the Thirtieth day of June and the Thirtieth day of December in each year, the said principal to be payable as follows:—In twenty equal annual instalments of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-Four Cents each payable on the First day of April in each year, such annual sum being equivalent to the sinking fund of said Debentures and being the sum at three and a half per cent interest required to produce the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, the first of such instalments of principal to be payable on the Thirtieth day of April, one thousand and six hundred and eighty-four and nine-tenths dollars, and the subsequent instalments of interest computed on the date on which such money shall be paid to the Company, to be payable on the First interest day following such payment.

of the balance unpaid on such mortgage. The amount of insurance money to be paid to the Commissioners less the amount properly due on the mortgage to be repaid by the Commissioners to the said Company upon the said Company re-building and re-establishing their said manufacturing as hereinafter provided and to remain upon the security of said mortgage as if such insurance money had not been paid to the Commissioners.

In case the said Company shall make default in payment of any instalment of principal or interest or shall cease to operate their manufacturing establishment for six months in any year (except in case of strikes of workmen or destruction of their premises by fire, flood or tempest, in which case a reasonable extension of such period of six months shall be allowed in accordance with the circumstances) or in case they shall remove their manufacturing establishment from the Town of Peterborough, or in case any proceedings be taken to wind up the company then the whole of the remaining sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars over and above the instalments of principal already paid allowing interest thereon at the rate of three and a half per cent, from the date of the respective instalment unpaid shall yearly shall at once become due and payable.

The Company also to give to the said Commissioners the Covenant or Bond of the Company for the payment of the said principal money and interest of the said Debentures in the manner aforesaid. And providing that the Company or successors or assigns shall not remove the whole or the substantial part of the machinery used for manufacturing from the building until the whole of the money payable by the Company shall have been fully paid and satisfied. And providing always that the Company may at any time remove or alter their machinery used for manufacturing or substitute new machines for those in use so long as the machinery is substantially sufficient for the said manufacturing as contemplated.

The words "fixed machinery" herein and in the mortgage aforesaid shall be deemed to include a travelling crane and shafting, pulleys and belting but shall not be deemed to include machines used in manufacturing which may be altered or removed from time to time as the exigencies of the Company's business may require, as above provided.

7. There shall be raised annually for the payment of interest during the currency of the Debentures the sum of One Thousand and Fifty Dollars and the sum of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-Four Cents, and paying the debt hereby created by special rate upon all the rateable property in the Town of Peterborough liable therefore, and such annual rate shall be levied from the date of the issue of such Debentures. Provided always that the payment by the said Company of the said interest and principal in each year shall be taken in lieu of the levy of the rate and it shall not be necessary to levy upon the rateable property any instalment paid by the Company.

8. The votes of the electors shall be taken on this By-law on the 18th day of October,

one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, commencing at the hour of nine o'clock in the forenoon and closing at the hour of five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day at the following places, in each ward and before the following returning officers:—

Methall, Aylmer street, John Irwin to be Deputy-Returning Officer; Ward Number Four at the shop of Wm. Lee, Smith street, George W. Powell to be Deputy-Returning Officer.

9. The Nineteenth day of October at the hour of twelve o'clock noon and the office of the Town Clerk are fixed as the time when and the place where the Clerk of the Council will sum up the number of votes given for and against the By-law. And the Seventeenth day of October one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight at the hour of twelve o'clock noon and the office of the Town Clerk are hereby fixed as the time and place for the payment of persons to attend at the various polling places and at the time summing up of the votes by the Clerk respectively on behalf of the persons interested in and promoting or opposing the passing of the By-law respectively.

NOTICE

The foregoing is a true copy of a proposed By-law which has been taken into consideration and which was finally passed by the Council (in event of the assent of the Electors being obtained thereto) after one month from the first publication in the Morning Times newspaper, the date of which first publication is the twenty-first day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight and at the hour, day and places therein fixed for taking the votes the polls will be held.

SINCE THE TROLLEY'S COME TO TOWN.

Ring out the loud buzzings and do the job up brown. For at last we have a trolley a-running through the town. The farmers stop their haying and wonder at the sight. For the way the cars go scooting is a revelation quite. Their clanging and their buzzing all other noises drown. For they make an awful racket a-running through the town.

The old town doesn't seem the same its mighty bright and gay, And every one can celebrate its resurrection day.

'Twas buried many years ago, and buried good and deep, But now it has awakened from its Rip Van Winkle sleep, And every hour of the day the cars run up and down. And every one is tickled now the trolley's come to town.

There's two new barns a-going up, excitement everywhere, And a mild form of paroxysm seems to permeate the air. The benefits to be derived have surely passed report. While real estate has risen to fifteen cents a foot, And all the wimmin folks have bought a brand new muslin gown, For they're bound to cut a figure now the trolley's come to town.

—Hartford Times.

AN EERIE EPISODE.

It was at a masquerade at Galinbar's studio in one of the old Roman palaces. There were music, the tripping sound of dancing feet, laughter and the unintelligible hum of conversation mingled in a gay medley.

Carson, an American, a new arrival in the city and a stranger to that colony of sculptors and painters, had been accidentally separated from the friend who brought him in the crowd shortly after his entrance to the ballroom.

He was wandering listlessly among the merry maskers, quite regardless of their gibes and laughter at his expense. Tired at length of his aimless peregrinations, he turned aside from the glaring lights and beat to the shade and coolness of the balcony.

The wide casements at the end of the room were open and gave an unobstructed view of the kaleidoscopic scene within. A divan near the balcony offered a place for repose, but it was not until he was seated that he was aware of the presence of a lady who occupied the farther end of the divan and was partially concealed by the drooping tree ferns and palms with which the balcony was decorated. She moved slightly in her nest of tricolored cushions, and her face fell with a slight clatter upon the stone floor.

Carson picked it up and gave it to her with a courteous bow. She thanked him, speaking in English, with just the slightest Italian accent. "I fear that I am intruding, signora," he said.

"Not so. The balcony is free to all who come. There can be no intrusion."

She reached up her hand as she spoke and pushed aside the feathery branches that swayed between them. Then he saw that she was young and very fair to look upon.

Her face was decidedly English. She wore an indescribable swathing garment of soft texture that was gathered up closely about her neck and fell, so her feet in long, clinging folds—strongly suggestive of a Bernhardt costume. Two beautifully shaped arms were bare to the shoulder, and the small hands that lay in her lap looked as though they had been modeled in wax.

She leaned back, resting her head upon the stucco pillar, her fan waving languidly to and fro.

"Permit me," said the American, taking the dainty lace and ivory tulle from her hand and fanning her gently. She smiled a gracious assent, and then began talking.

It was so warm in the ballroom and one grew so tired dancing, she said. Did the gentleman dance? Perhaps he was not acquainted with many ladies—a stranger in Rome? Was he an artist or a sculptor?

"Neither, signora. I am an attaché."

"From what country—England?"

"No—America."

"America! Ah, that marvelous land!"

She chatted on in an open, friendly manner until a bevy of tured dancers invaded their retreat. Among them was his friend Tarro.

"Great heavens, Carson! Where have you been? I have looked everywhere for you. Everybody is unmasking, and it is time for supper. No doubt you are starving. Come, I have secured a table, and you are to meet some charming women."

"What have you been doing here all alone? It was exceedingly stupid in me to get separated."

"I have not been alone," replied Mr. Carson. He glanced around, but the lady was gone.

"Not alone? Why, who was with you?"

"The lady. Did you not see her when you came?"

"A caprice, my dear boy. I saw no lady. No, you sat there moaning, staring in a most sentimental manner at that Moorish lantern hanging over there. Come along. They are waiting for us."

They lingered long over their supper. There were merry, high pitched talking and much laughter, but Carson was not in a state of hilarity. His restless, bored glance wandered over the assembly, and once he started and turned sharply in his chair at the low voice of a woman who, with her escort, passed close beside him.

Tarro tried to rally him on his abstraction, but his brow contracted fretfully, and he nervously fingered a spray of flowers that lay by his plate. He was not sorry when the ball was over and he found himself on the pavement outside of the palace.

A cab was waiting, but without knowing why he declined to accompany his friend, saying he preferred to walk to his hotel. He wandered along slowly, with bowed head, absently staring at the dim shadows cast by the waning moon. As he was passing across the Piazza de Farnese he heard a low voice speaking:

"So we meet again!"

He halted. She, his new acquaintance, was beside him.

"Signora! You here at this hour and alone? Where are your friends?"

She smiled. "You will walk with me to the street below, will you not?"

"Certainly. But your friends—their carriages are in the square."

"They walked through the square and down several streets almost in silence. Presently she stopped before the entrance of a house."

"Here, signor!" she said.

Almost simultaneously she swayed forward and caught his arm, at the same time uttering a smothered cry.

"You are hurt!" he exclaimed anxiously. "You have twisted your ankle on those wretched stones."

"I fear so." She pressed her hand upon her bosom and looked into his eyes with mute appeal.

"You cannot walk." He stooped and gathered her up into his arms. "I will carry you. Which floor?"

"The fourth," she replied, her face flushing as the light of the early day fell upon it.

A drowsy janitor answered his ring. He ascended the first flight of stairs without pausing, carrying her as a nurse might a child, happy at the delicious touch of her bare arms against his neck as she clasped him.

On the second flight ascent was not so easy. Her weight grew heavier, and the head that had now fallen on his shoulder pressed like a ball of iron, her arms were relaxing their clasp and lay against his neck with startling coldness. She seemed to be letting herself go, and at each step grew heavier in proportion.

He was no longer carrying a lifeless maiden, but something burdensome and horrible—something that was bearing him down and suffocating him with a sensation as though his chest was bursting.

On the third landing he felt her slipping.

"Signora," he faltered.

He sought to renew his hold, but the burden, now a dead weight, slid from his arms, and she fell with a heavy thud to the floor.

"What noise is this?" called a masculine voice in Italian.

Carson began a hasty explanation to the man, whose head protruded from a partially open door.

The man came forward and bent over her.

"She does not belong here," he said.

"She is a stranger. She is pale as death. Unfasten her clothing. She must have fainted. Where is the janitor? The fool! He never is here when he is needed. Call him, signor, and send for a physician."

His hasty hand broke the knot of ribbon that confined her bodice. With a wild exclamation he instantly loosened his hold on her dress and started backward. The full throat and white bust were exposed. There were deep bluish purple bands around the throat and a gaping dagger wound, dark with coagulated blood, on the snowy bosom.

Their cries aroused the janitor, who hastened to call the police. Presently he returned, pausing on the stairs, accompanied by an officer. Carson drew aside the curtain, and the bright light of day fell upon the body.

"Holy Virgin!" cried the policeman as he saw the dead woman.

"Can you identify her?" asked Carson.

"Yes," returned the man. "She is the woman who was found murdered on the Corso night before last. How came she here?"—M. M. Hahn in Argos.

His Wife Won.

A Georgia man, who was unpopular in his community, insured his life for $2,000. He took the policy home to his wife and said:

"Maria, here's a life insurance document for $2,000."

"Thank you, dear," said his wife. "How are you feeling today?"

"Not well," he replied, "and I don't think I am long for this world, and I want to say to you that when I die it is my wish that you devote $1,000 of the money to defraying my funeral expenses."

"Mercy on me," exclaimed the wife, "why do you want such an expensive funeral?"

"I'll explain. I'm perfectly satisfied that nobody will attend my funeral, and I want to hire people to go at so much a head. I'm going out today and see what arrangements I can make for attendants on that forthcoming melancholy occasion. If they won't come gratis, why—I'll just hire 'em as give 'em an order on you for the money."

He went forth and at nightfall returned with a dejected look.

"Maria," he said, "it's no use. You can have the whole $2,000. Just go to my funeral yourself."—Atlanta Constitution.

De Lesseps Statue.

M. Fremiet has finished the head of the enormous statue of the late Comte Ferdinand de Lesseps which is to be placed at the entry of the Suez canal. The canal projector is to be represented standing, covered with an Arab burnoose, and pointing toward the new waterway opened up to navigation. On one of the sides of the pedestal—which is to have a granite foundation—will be a medallion containing the portraits of the Khedives who patronized the canal.

Next to the power of standing outside oneself and looking at me as other folks see me the most remarkable is this (by the insight of genius and imagination) becoming you. The first makes one sometimes only too reasonable, too humble; the second warms the heart and enriches the soul, for it gives the charm of selfhood to beings not ourselves.—John Ingelow.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES. IT PAYS YOU

A SEASON OF FOLIAGE

All seasons in which nature makes her effort to reproduce, differ very materially from each other in their characteristics. Sometimes her object seems to be the development and increase of seeds, at other times, all her efforts seem to be directed to the production of foliage. The latter does not necessarily occur in what we call a wet season. In fact it often occurs in a comparatively dry one. Of this character have been the predominant features of the present season—a fact which the most careless observer can not fail to notice. This is of undoubted advantage to tobacco growers, but it is doubtful if any other class of agriculturists is served or benefited by it. In the tobacco plant the foliage is all that is required, and a profuse growth in this respect is the most guarantee of the quality that the leaf is expected to possess. Every one familiar with the tobacco fields the present season has remarked the phenomenal growth of the plants—larger, stronger and healthier than for a series of years. This is not due to any system of fertilizing, as there are seemingly no exceptions. It does not mean all fields are equal in size and appearance, but even the poorer lands show the remarkable influences that were at work to force the foliage to the fullest development. All have noticed the extreme height attained by the plants this year and the seemingly feeble attempt to produce seed. Practically only the main stem has resulted in mature seed, there being very few lateral ones, making the head as it is called, very small compared with the size of the plant. There was a profusion of such, particularly around the base of the stalk, and these again show that the increasing of the foliage was the main object of nature. The leaves produced by the stalks being remarkably large and thrifty, and these laterals growing weak efforts to go to seed, even when allowed to remain beyond the usual period.

What is true of the tobacco crop is also true with regard to other forms of vegetation. Corn is of remarkable growth, with more than the usual number of leaves, and with fewer ears and smaller husks. The ears themselves show that much of the nutriment has been absorbed by the general structure of the plant at their expense, as there are many undeveloped ears which have not a kernel to show, and many imperfectly filled; while the husks show that the nutriment has been used as a rule, nature has neglected that part altogether. Every one complaining of the remarkable growth of his pole beans, and the slow and imperfect development of the pods. Tomatoes which began to grow one of the three in that group, the other being potatoes, have all run to vines, which still continue vigorous, but the first has been exceedingly sparse. Squash and cucumber vines have also shown the same characteristics—the profusion of foliage and the absence of fruit in a corresponding degree. Lawns and the hay crop show the same effect, which cannot be entirely attributed to the amount of rain fall recorded to the season. The precipitation has been much less than that of last year, but on the season now passing vegetation has seemed to take moisture with avidity, a very distinctive feature from the season of 1897. Few people who at the end of the season when the water which has entered into the structure of the plants means an accumulation, and how much this is increased in such a season as this, complicating and increasing the labors of the farmers without a corresponding benefit in all cases, though it may be in the tobacco crop, a point that yet remains to be seen. This increase in labor comes from the enormous amount of water that has to be handled and evaporated by natural process.

Let us call attention to one or two instances, which may be considered as approximate rules for the season, or perhaps we should say estimates. Taking an average plant from a typical field of tobacco, it was found to weigh six and a half pounds without harvesting; at the old rule of 6,000 plants per acre of broadleaf, this would result in nearly twenty tons of the green product, that has to be carted off from each acre to the curing sheds. This enormous amount must be reduced by the curing or drying process to less than two tons, including the dried stalks. If we add to the weight actually produced per acre the tops, suckers and bottom or waste leaves thrown away, we should increase the weight about a fifth, making about twenty-four tons of the green product. From about the middle of the plant it is noticeable that the roots of plants through which this supply has been drawn are not of a growth of the super-structure of the plant. This perhaps shows the usual facilities offered for the plants to obtain the requisite moisture, as the roots are neither large, deeply set, nor usually numerous.

To allow the growth of vegetable matter represented in the corn crop, a single stalk was selected from the field of the large western variety, which with its fully developed ear, weighed exactly 6 pounds, 1 ounce; the height being 9 feet. As it is the usual custom to leave five stalks to the hill, and a plant three and one-half feet apart each way, the result would be—calling it 30 pounds per hill—over fifty tons per acre of the green vegetable matter which the soil has sustained.

MAJOR ON THE PHILIPPINES

The people of the United States in their newly aroused zeal for conquest have served themselves heirs of Spain to two quarrels of long standing. Alike in Cuba and in the Philippines, Spain has had for many centuries problems which were to her insoluble, or at least unaltered. The problems in the two colonies were essentially different. Cuba presented a problem of administration mainly; the Philippines presented a highly complicated racial as well as an ecclesiastical problem. What new aspects these questions may now assume it is hard to say, but the Government of the United States, having superseded the Government of Spain, cannot well allow the islands to drift. To do this is to hand over the inhabitants, at least for the time, to rapacious brigands like Aguinaldo, whose ambition and greed were to some extent held in check by the Spanish Government, impotent as in many ways it was.

The Philippines are inhabited by several races, more or less intermingled, and each of these races presents its own problem. The aborigines, of whom several millions remain (the total population of the islands is understood to be 7,500,000), are Negritos allied to some of the Polynesians. Repeated incursions of Malay pirates have resulted in a large Malay population, and the more peaceful immigration from China has given a Chinese population of about 1,000,000. The half-breed population of the island of Luzon consists mainly of Chinese-Malay metis although there is also a Malay-Spanish race. The islands have, as is well known, been fully conquered by Spain. The island of Mindanao is practically an independent sovereignty, and the Malays, known as Tagals, have elsewhere their own Sultan. It is very evident that the existence of a large number of petty, uncivilized rulers over a population habituated to a government of this kind must produce for the United States a crop of trouble, from which she will shrink. Her treatment of the black and the red man within her territories has not been so conspicuously successful or so humane that she can well apply the same principles to the Philippines. The Government and the people of the United States are alike interested in the extermination of the red man, and in checking the growth of the black one; but it will not do to carry out a policy of this sort elsewhere.

There can be no doubt that if the Philippines are retained the United States Government will have to do what Great Britain does, and train men specially for the task of governing such a vast territory. The Malays in the Malay peninsula, under the control of Great Britain, are as peaceable as any people in the world; and that because the administration of the country is carried on with the most scrupulous integrity and with great intelligence. Pirates, on a well-known principle, make excellent policemen, when they are well looked after. With Malay police and a single well trained and thoroughly well educated English resident, administration, or deputy administration, the semi-independent Malay States are controlled with a minimum of trouble. The one person whose presence in such a community would be positively dangerous, is the very person to whom the United States would be most likely to entrust its destiny, viz., "that insidious and crafty animal called the politician."

But the race question in the Philippines is not the only one. The Spanish from the beginning of their colonizing enterprise, in their treatment of the natives, have had two designs, to rob them and to convert them. Not infrequently the same instruments—human as well as mechanical—were used for both purposes. In the Philippines zealous competition in missionary enthusiasm led to the establishment of missions by several of the religious orders—the Dominicans, the Augustines, and the Jesuits, which were well established there by the beginning of the seventeenth century. Ever long these orders had acquired a great amount of property, so great indeed that the property of the religious orders together with ecclesiastical property, now comprises a very large part of the island of Luzon. It is not possible to say precisely how much; but probably one-half of the island would not be an overestimate. From about the third quarter of the sixteenth century the religious orders have been engaged in a more or less bitter feud with each other. No doubt the controversies among the orders in Europe had something to do with the disputes in the Philippines; but the quarrels there were concerned mainly with rivalry in influence over the inhabitants.

Besides the quarrels between the rival religious orders, there stood in a relation of permanent antagonism to the regular clergy; and the clergy as a whole stood in a relation of antagonism to the civil and military authority of Spain, and in all probability would have been in a similar relation to any alien government. This antagonism became intensified as the nominal conversion of the natives went on; and as the numbers of the clergy, native in birth, character and sympathies increased.

For fully three hundred years the islands have been a prey to disorders from these causes. Rebellions by the natives, aided and sometimes prompted by the clergy, have occurred periodically, and have always resulted in barbaric cruelty.

The most important recent rebellion lasted from 1837 to 1841. It was headed by a lay friar of the monastery of St. John the Divine at Manila, Apolinario de la Cruz, calling himself the King of the Philippines and King of the Tagals.

This pretender succeeded in convincing the simple folk who supported him by their arms that from a union between him and the Virgin would spring the first Emperor of the Philippines. He was finally captured by the Spanish troops, and with two thousand of his followers shot.

The next important insurrection occurred in 1872, and is alleged to have been prompted by the native clergy, against the growing power of the religious orders. This movement miscarried, and three clergies, with fourteen accomplices were executed. Between 1872 and 1896 several minor insurrections took place, the latter ones having been suppressed by General Weyler. Ardas, Blanco and Polvario were also later engaged in attempting to put down insurrections in Cuba.

These insurrections were unquestionably aided by Japanese and Chinese financiers, who provided the rebels with modern rifles, while Aguinaldo, who is a half-breed, has no doubt been able to provide sinews of war by mortgaging his considerable estates in anticipation of his being able to recoup himself as well as his Chinese and Japanese supporters in the event of the success of the revolt.

The proceedings, especially of Weyler and Polvario, were scarcely to be justified on any ground. According to the North China News the executions of rebels and suspects were carried out during a religious festival, and to church music, while the execution of 1,000 natives there were present 37 Spanish ladies. The executions took place in a public garden, twenty-four hours after judgment.

Not are the tender mercies of the insurgents any less cruel. The confession of one of the leaders of the insurrectionary movement of 1876, a certain Tung-Tai, a Malay-European metis, as given by M. de Varigny, is one of the indicative of the reign of bloodshed in the Philippines under Spanish rule. A Malay woman, who was privy to the designs of the rebels, became a convert, and, giving to confession, disclosed these designs to a priest. The priest communicated with the Spanish authorities and the rebels were rendered abortive. The woman confessed her treachery and was immediately killed, her body being left to be devoured by wild animals. The insurgents then made an assault upon the monastery at which the woman had committed the treason; they took it and killed all the priests, including the one to whom the woman had confessed to being a traitor. Then, in Tung-Tai's own words, "Entrenched in the monastery, the insurgents firmly awaited the enemy. And the struggle began, a struggle without quarter. The Spaniards slaughtered their prisoners; we crucified ours; they scorched us alive, we burned them alive."

The problems before the United States are thus by no means easy to solve. To civilize a half savage people accustomed to a variety of liberty not in vogue in the United States, accustomed to bear arms and to continual intrigue and revolution; and to deprive the religious orders of their power and the church of its landed property, and all this without provoking an uprising of the people, these are serious enough problems, in which the rough and ready answer usual in the United States is no answer at all.

If an attempt is made to transplant the mechanism of American politics to Asiatic soil, one of the most curious experiments in government will have been made; but at present the combination of the government of the islands on any basis and the maintenance of order are alone sufficient to occupy all the fit men available in the United States for such a purpose.

In taking the islands from Spain, the United States have incurred the responsibility of possession, and if underestimating that responsibility, her advisers keep the eyes closed while they are victimized by Aguinaldo and his band of Japanese and Chinese financiers, the last state of that people will be worse than the first.

Further than that this should happen, the United States must be careful that they way by continued civil war to self government, as in the case of Haiti.

CANADIAN BANK NOTES

The sole object and advantage of paper money is that it economizes gold. In ordinary times when business is running smoothly and there are no commercial disasters to upset trade, it is found that an amount of specie equal to a third or fourth of the issue of notes is sufficient to maintain the convertibility of these issues. It is upon this basis that paper money is issued. The banks act upon the rule; it is impossible to provide against the exception. Paper money would be of no use at all if an equal amount of gold were to be kept in the banks. In times of trouble when a run is made on a bank, it is not merely for gold for the notes—it is for deposits.

In Canada the issue of paper money have been feared around with the most rigid restrictions, and on account of this the study of our bank notes has seldom been questioned. Canadian banks are allowed to issue notes to the amount of their paid up capital and capital such notes may be of the denomination of $5 and upwards. A breach of this law incurs a heavy penalty.

In the old days ones, twos and fours were issued, but the latest regulations given by government only the right to issue in the small denominations. The old-established banks have some of their ones and twos out yet, but as soon as they are presented at the bank they are immediately sent to Ottawa for destruction. The banks had considerable amounts of $4 bills in circulation, but these are gradually being withdrawn and destroyed.

In revising the bank act of 1891 the question of limited liability as far as shareholders were concerned arose in connection with joint stock company

An Exciting Runaway

While Mr. "Bolly" Hill, driver for Messrs. E. Brown & Co., was taking a heavy load of empty cases along Hunter street, in the delivery wagon, the horse took fright and ran away. Rolly who was seated away up in the air on top of the load, finding the boxes were slipping from under him, bravely jumping aside the horse while it was running at breakneck pace, and endeavoring to check its speed, but without success. The rig finally collided with an iron post near Meyers' butcher shop, and the driver or rider thrown and the boxes and pieces of wagon scattered in all directions. Rolly was severely shaken up and is now confined to his bed. Fortunately no bones were broken. This is the second time within a week that this animal has run away. We advise Ed. to present the horse to some one against whom he owes a grudge.

LAST NIGHT'S ENTERTAINMENT

A Large Gathering Attended St. Joseph's Hospital Concert Last Night

Last night a large and fashionable audience took in the entertainment, under the auspices of the sisters of St. Joseph's Hospital, in the Opera House.

Mayor Davis occupied the chair, and in opening the entertainment referred to the pleasure it gave him to act as chairman on this occasion. He would not inflict any speech on them in view of the excellent program they had before them.

The first selection was a grand chorus by the Cathedral Choir, entitled, "Regina Coeli." Miss Hurley and Mrs. Ball, taking prominent parts and which was given with good effect.

Little Carrie Whyte, in her recitation, "The Little Aching Girl" proved herself to be a coming star as an elocutionist and was forced to give an encore.

Mr. and Mrs. Ball rendered a duet, "The Minute Gun at Sea" in excellent style and Miss Little Simons recited a great hit with her recitation, "The Gentle Story." She recited it with the fire of a cannon and the force of the wind in a storm.

The last selection of the first part was a Grand Chorus, "Laudate," by the Cathedral Choir.

The second part was opened by Miss Rosa Perkins, singing selections, descriptive of Ireland. The music was so realistic that one would almost think he had wandered off to the Emerald Isle.

A. W. White sang the same song, "The Emerald Isle," and a comic song, "The Good Night Song," which was well received.

WEDDED AT LAKEFIELD

Mr. Atwood, of Montreal, and Miss Bellford of Lakefield, United in Marriage

At St. John's Church, Lakefield, by the Rev. George Warren, incumbent, assisted by the Rev. A. W. McKenzie, Clementine Bellford, second daughter of H. J. Lefebvre, Esq., of "Uplands," Lakefield, to George Evan Atwood, of Montreal.

I seldom if ever has St. John's Church presented a more beautiful appearance than on the occasion of the above ceremony. The whole chancel was profusely decorated with palms, foliage, plants and cut flowers, a conspicuous feature being a large archway with a bell of aspers and tuberoses pendant from the centre.

Shortly after 1:30 p.m., the bride, appropriately attired in rich crested white silk, white veil and orange blossoms, and carrying a bouquet of bridal roses, entered, leaning on the father's arm and attended by the Messrs. H. and L. Le Fevre and Miss A. Atwood, as bridesmaids. Mr. H. Lempiere acted as best man, and Messrs. Cockburn, E. Tate, M. Strickland and I. Subald, officiated as ushers.

The bridesmaids were charmingly gowned in white, and carried bouquets of pink and green and white flowers, and wore pearl rings. The gift of the bridesmaids.

Despite the pouring rain a very large gathering of relatives and friends took place after the ceremony, at the bride's residence. Here a most sumptuous and delicious lunch was served, and the hearty congratulations and good wishes of all those present for the health, happiness and prosperity of the newly wedded couple.

An unusually large number of useful and beautiful presents testified to the love and esteem entertained for the bride and groom, and included amongst them were a full set of table silverware from Messrs. Tooke & Co. of Montreal, in whose firm Mr. Atwood has for many years held a very responsible position, and gifts from the Choir, Girls' Guild, Sunday School of St. John's Church, amongst whom the bride has been a faithful and untiring worker.

And a shower of rice and heartfelt good wishes the happy couple drove away at 4 p.m. for a short wedding tour in Montreal.

Besides the immediate relatives and friends residing in this locality, the following were present at the church and afterwards at the residence: Mr. and Mrs. Greenwell, Miss Rogers, Mrs. Read, Peter, Mrs. M. Blackwell, Ashcroft, Mr. H. Oiler, Mrs. Chas. Strickland, Toronto, Miss Thompson, Quebec, Miss Stewart, Ottawa, and Mr. Linwood, Kingston.

An interesting feature was the presence of Mrs. Grant to witness the wedding of her grand-son and grand-niece.

THE Y.W.C.A. CONVENTION

Another Session Held Wednesday-Visitors Entertained at Tea

The biennial convention of the Young Women's Christian Association which opened on Monday afternoon, put in a good day's work yesterday.

At 9:45 o'clock, the convention was opened by Miss McDonald, of Toronto, presiding.

Miss Doyle offered prayer, after which, Mrs. Chan of Victoria College, read an excellent paper on prayer. The questioner was then opened and the questions answered.

The minutes were read and confirmed. Reports from two new Associations were presented by Mrs. Fortier, of Winnipeg, for Winnipeg, and for the Y. W. C. Guild of Toronto. The latter has six delegates in attendance.

Three other new Associations have been formed during the year, but they were not represented.

A report was given by Mrs. Learmont, of Montreal, showing satisfactory work in that city. Reports were also read from Toronto University, McGill University, and the Women's Medical University, Toronto.

An hour was spent in Bible study. At the afternoon session the college conference lasted 2 o'clock and terminated in session until 5.

Representatives from 5 college associations were present. The subjects discussed were as follows:
 1. College Conference. Leader, Miss R. Rouse. General subject, "The Possibilities of the Young Women's Christian Association in Colleges."

1. The Study of the Bible. Miss Oliver, Women's Medical College, Toronto, presiding.

2. Religious Meetings. Miss Oliver, Women's Medical College, Toronto, presiding.

3. Missionary Study Class. Miss Fleming, Toronto University, presiding.

4. Necessity and power of Personal Work. Mrs. Stevenson, President Montreal Association, presiding.

5. Physical Work. Miss E. A. Bradshaw, Physical Director Y. W. C. Guild, Toronto, presiding.

The visiting delegates were entertained to her afternoon tea.

CENTRE SMITH ENTERPRISE

They Want to Establish a Creamery-A Meeting Held

On Monday evening last a meeting was held in the Temple building, Centre Smith, for the purpose of discussing the advisability of starting a butter factory. There was a large turn out of the representative people of that section, and a pleasing feature was the presence of so many ladies. A good musical program was run off, after which Mr. James McAdams of the R. A. Leckie & Co. of Montreal, gave an excellent address on the care of the cow and other matters pertaining to the butter industry. Mr. McAdams' lecture was very instructive and was much appreciated by those present.

Mr. Whitten and Mr. Moore of Peterborough, were also corroborative of what Mr. McAdams had said.

The meeting was strongly in favor of establishing a creamery in that section of the county.

An Apley Man Tries to Make Soap With a New Flavor

Dear Times.—It is now some time since you heard from me, but I have not had much time for writing lately, and even if I had there has been very little to write about—everything here remaining in its natural groove.

There was rather an amusing mistake made by Jumbo the other day whilst trying his hand at the culinary art. His better half, being sick up for a day or so with a violent headache. A happy thought struck him—that he would prepare some chicken soup as a surprise for the invalid upstairs. He accordingly procured the desired articles, and having carefully read over the directions in the family cook book, and followed them most implicitly, the soup was soon complete, and the savory aroma was wafted all through the house. He then proceeded to make a piece of thin toast, which he put up into small dice, and filling a chafin dish with the soup, and set it on a low fire, and with his wife's party and a smiling countenance. But what there was a peculiar flavor to the soup which ought not to have been there. "Tut," the question was asked, "what did you cook the chicken in?" "What, a saucepan," replied Jumbo. "What, the saucepan with the long handle?" "Certainly," said Jumbo. "Oh, yes! I have used that for two years for nothing else but boiling hops in to make my yeast!" Jumbo went down stairs in no enviable frame of mind, and deposited the contents of the saucepan in the swift barrel, and used some very strong language. We have been waiting anxiously to hear if his pig had since.

There are some signs of the municipal elections already. Three of our City Fathers were out on the front street early one morning preparing for a foot race. We did not hear how it came off, but presume the race will be run early in January when some of them stand to win.

The bears are rather numerous this season, a great many being seen and some killed. Mr. Chas. Cooke captured a very fine one last week. Competition is keen and it is rumored that some parties are even borrowing samples from unoccupied orchards.

It is with deep regret that we have to chronicle the death of Mr. Richard Hales, which sad event took place last week at the Nichols Hospital. The deceased had just returned from Manitoba, where he intended to remove to in the spring. His relatives have the heartfelt sympathy to the whole community in their sad bereavement.

Last night about nine o'clock a snow down at wharf, in which there was a quantity of live stock took fire. The animals were all saved but not any too soon as the fire was gaining great headway when noticed. The live stock belonged to H. P. Kennedy.

CARRANZA WAS WATCHED BY A UNITED STATES PRIVATE DETECTIVE

The Detective Took a Room Next to Him in the Queen's Hotel, Toronto—Following's Arrest and Escape

New York, Oct. 5.—Chief Winkie, of the United States Secret Service, has published an account of the operations of that body in hunting down Spanish spies during the recent war. He says that one of the first men employed in the special investigation was a young New Yorker of fine family and excellent social position. A long residence abroad had given him a fluent command of modern languages. He was sent to Toronto immediately after the departure of some of the first men employed in the special investigation of the movements of the former Minister's party.

He was fortunate in securing a room adjoining that occupied by Juan Carranza at the Queen's Hotel, and as there was a common dining room, which was the head of the hotel, he was able to keep Carranza under observation. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose. Early in the morning of Friday, May 1, an earnest conversation, this time in English, was being carried on in the hotel's room. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose. Early in the morning of Friday, May 1, an earnest conversation, this time in English, was being carried on in the hotel's room. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose.

WINKIE THE CODE.

Carranza arranged for him to go to Washington, where he was to secure certain information and forward it to Carranza, for which point the former Minister was to leave that afternoon. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose. Early in the morning of Friday, May 1, an earnest conversation, this time in English, was being carried on in the hotel's room. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose.

Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose.

That afternoon the following telegram had been delivered to Carranza: "Young Southern, Alexander (Cree, of Hull, Ont.), leaves for Washington tonight. My height and build, dark, small mustache, black soft felt hat, black sack coat, black sailor tie, somewhat shabby, evidently served on Brooklyn, has intimate knowledge of naval matters. Just had long interview with naval attaché. He is to write to Carranza."

WATCHING THE TRAINS.

The next morning arrangements were made to "cover" incoming trains in Washington, and Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose. Early in the morning of Friday, May 1, an earnest conversation, this time in English, was being carried on in the hotel's room. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose. Early in the morning of Friday, May 1, an earnest conversation, this time in English, was being carried on in the hotel's room. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose.

A cipher message had been sent off from the Navy Department to San Francisco directing the cruiser Charleston to proceed to Manila with 50 men and machinery for repairs for Dewey. A long cipher has been received from Dewey at department at 3:30 p.m. They are translating it now, and cannot find it out yet. Have heard important news respecting movements of others and cruiser Newark, at Norfolk Navy Yard; also about the new Holland boat, as to what they intend to do with her and her destination. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose. Early in the morning of Friday, May 1, an earnest conversation, this time in English, was being carried on in the hotel's room. Carranza was in the hotel for his purpose.

THE ARREST.

Capt. Sage, of the 9th Artillery, with a corporal and one man, was ordered to report to me at the Treasury building, and at 11 o'clock that night we arrested the suspected man in his room. A search of the apartment resulted in the seizure of partly finished letters to Carranza, and in the discovery of documents establishing the identity of the prisoner as George Downing, naturalized citizen, and formerly yeoman of the cruiser Brooklyn. In one corner of a bureau drawer, otherwise empty, I found a scrap of letter paper, upon one side of which the address in Berkeley street, and on the other "Mr. Carranza," was written. To send add 100, to receive abstract 100.

This was the key to the cipher he was to employ, the system being one in which thousands of ordinary words arranged alphabetically were under consecutive numbers of five figures each. In preparing a telegram, under the cipher indicated on the slip, the desired word having been found in the list, 100 would have been added to its corresponding number, and the word thus obtained would have been used in the cipher message. In reversing the cipher, after ascertaining the number associated with the word on the message, the subtraction of 100 would disclose the figures opposite, which would be the word desired.

Two days later the prisoner hanged himself in his cell at the barracks. It may be added that the Dutchman arrested by Carranza at the day before Carranza left Toronto.

It was generally believed that when Carranza's party landed in Canada they were the location to which the principal tasks of the division was the breaking up of that institution. While many facts ascertained by the agents of the American Secret Service made it certain beyond question that a regular system of espionage was being conducted on neutral territory, there was not enough on which to approach Carranza with a request for the extradition of the offender, and we were anxious to obtain something conclusive upon which action could be based. The man in Montreal was particularly alert for the right sort of revenge, and never left the Spanish combination alone for

"When the former Minister returned to Spain, Carranza and Senor Du Bosc rented a furnished house at 42 Tupper street. They took it for two months only, and having ascertained this fact one of our men secured a card from the real estate agent, requesting that the tenant kindly permit the bearer to view the house. A party of three was then made up, including a lady, and about 11 o'clock in the forenoon of Saturday, May 28, they called, were admitted by the maid and shown slowly through the various apartments.

Carranza and Du Bosc were at breakfast in the lower part of the house, and as the visitors passed through the sleeping room of the former one of the men saw an official looking letter, stamped and ready for the mail, lying on the dresser. The lady and one of her companions moved out toward the hall with the servant, while the third member of the party slipped the letter into his pocket. In the lower hall, just before they left, the postman passed in three large letters, and these also would have been in our possession in a moment but for the sudden appearance of the maid, who took them away.

As quickly as possible after leaving the house the letter was inclosed in another envelope, bearing both American and Canadian stamps, and was entrusted to an American locomotive engineer about to start upon his run, and he was instructed to take it as far as Burlington, Vt., and then mail it. He carried out his share of the work perfectly, the letter coming through all right and being delivered to me late Sunday night.

LEFT FOR TORONTO.

Immediately after leaving Tupper street one man and the woman left for Toronto to make other operations in the suburbs to look after another suspect. The excitement in the vicinity of the Spanish headquarters, when the loss was discovered, may well be imagined. Carranza knew what damaging admissions he had made, and if, as he feared, the letter had been made and his letter, his usefulness to his own was practically ended. He first denied that the letter was of any special value, and when a translation was printed claimed that certain of the published statements were not in his letter, asserting that interpolations had been made and whole sentences wrongfully translated.

"He secured the arrest of a Montreal private detective, whom he charged with the abstraction of the letter, but as the prisoner looked about as much like the man who got it as young Nelson does like Buffalo Bill, we gave him up."

THERE IS PLENTY OF FOOD.

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 5.—An estimate for the amount of provisions on the Yukon River indicates that the government relief expedition this winter. The two big transportation companies have at least 20,000 tons at various points on the river. The North American Trading and Transportation Company is credited with these figures:—At Dawson, 4,000 tons; Fort Cudahy, 1,500 tons; Circle City, 1,500 tons; Fort Yukon, 15,000 tons; Rampart City, 1,000 tons; Eagle City, 500 tons; Perry City, 100 tons.

The Alaska Commercial Company has about the same amount on hand, except at Dawson, where it has about 7,000. Trading posts have recently been established by the two companies on the Koyukok River, the Alaska Commercial Company locating at Arctic City, and the North American Trading and Transportation Company at Perry City, five miles from Arctic.

CEYLON WANTS A PREFERENCE.

Vancouver, Oct. 5.—Advices from Ceylon show that that island is endeavoring to obtain a better footing in the Canadian tea market, and sees in the preferential tariff a method by which the island could compete with her own products those of China and Japan, from which countries most of the tea consumed in the Dominion of Canada is derived.

The tea-growers of Ceylon say that the benefit of the 25 per cent. reduction in Canadian duties was to be confined, after the first year, to the empire, and that the country in the empire, the Customs tariff of which was no less favorable to Canada, and that India and Ceylon should come under this category.

The Local Government has been asked to open up negotiations with Canada, to learn if the arrangement of the Ceylon duties, British-grown tea could not be afforded some advantage over those of China and Japan. It is pointed out that the tea is hitherto been admitted free into Canada, except from the United States, when it is subject to a duty of 10 cents, and it is thought that the feeling of kinship ought to induce Canada to impose a similar duty on the Chinese and Japanese article. At present the latter reaches the Western Canadian market much more quickly than the article from Ceylon, but with the imposition of the duty, the growers of the island feel that the balance of advantage would be decidedly in their favor, and bring about a great extension of their trade.

EMPEROR MAY BE ALIVE.

London, Oct. 5.—According to a despatch from Shanghai, the Peking correspondent of the Mercury of that city asserts that the Emperor of China intended to remove the Empress Dowager from his path, and entrusted his hands to an adherent. The latter proved a traitor.

The Empress Dowager, on learning of the plot, sternly upbraided the Emperor, and invited him to drink the contents of a cup to which she joined. He swallowed the fluid at a gulp. It is impossible, however, according to this correspondent, to determine whether the Emperor is actually alive or dead.

A despatch to The Times from Vienna says that Mr. Strauss, the new American Minister to Turkey, started on Monday evening for Constantinople from Vienna. His first task will be to secure a satisfactory settlement of three questions—First, the complete establishment of the right of the United States to appoint Consuls at its own discretion at any of the ports of the Ottoman Empire; second, to remove the difficulties regarding the recognition in Turkey of naturalized American citizens; and third, to secure indemnity in connection with the Armenian outbreak.

Mr. Strauss is authorized, with a view to facilitating matters, to negotiate for the raising of the American Legation to an embassy. He hopes to dispose of the differences between the United States and Turkey diplomatically, without having recourse to the military measures which public opinion in the United States desires.

A SEASON OF FOLIAGE

All seasons in which nature makes her effort to reproduce, differ very materially from each other in their characteristics. Sometimes her object seems to be the development and increase of seeds, at other times, all her efforts seem to be directed to the possession of foliage. The latter does not necessarily occur in what we call a wet season. In fact it often occurs in a comparatively dry one. Of this character have been the preëminent features of the present season—a fact which the most careless observer cannot fail to notice. This is of undoubted advantage to tobacco growers, but it is doubtful if any of her cases of agricultural blessing is served or benefited by it. In the tobacco plant the foliage is all that is required, and a profuse growth in this respect is the most guarantee of the quality that the leaf is expected to possess. Every one familiar with the tobacco fields the present season has remarked the phenomenal growth of the plants—larger, stronger and healthier than for a series of years. This is not due to any system of fertilizing, as there are scarcely any exceptions. It does not mean all fields are equal in size and appearance, but even the poorer lands show the remarkable influences that were at work to force the foliage to the fullest development. All have no need of the extreme height attained by the plants this year and the seemingly feeble attempt to produce seed. Practically all the main spike has resulted in matured seed, there being very few lateral ones, making the head as it is called, very small compared with the size of the plant. There was a profusion of suckers, particularly around the base of the stalk, and these again show that the intensifying of the foliage was the main object of nature. The leaves produced by these suckers being remarkably large and turgid, and these lateral suckers growing too weak to be of any use, even when allowed to remain beyond the usual period.

What is true of the tobacco crop is also true with regard to other forms of vegetation. Corn is of remarkable growth, with more than the usual number of leaves, and with fewer ears and smaller tassels. The ears themselves show that much of the nutriment has been absorbed by the general structure of the plant at their expense, as there are many undeveloped ears which have not a kernel to show, and many imperfectly filled; while the lack of gapping over at the neck shows that the rule, nature has neglected this point altogether. Every one complains of the remarkable growth of his pole beans, and the slow and imperfect development of the pods. Tomatoes, which belong to the same order of plants as tobacco—one of the three in the group, the other being potatoes, have all run to vines, which still continue vigorous, but the first have been exceedingly sparse. Squash and cucumber vines have both shown the same characteristics—the profusion of foliage and the absence of fruit in a corresponding degree. Lawns and the hay crop also show the same effect, which cannot be entirely attributed to the amount of rain being 9 feet. As it is the usual custom to leave five stalks to the hill, and a plant three and one-half of rain fall accreted to the season. The precipitation has been much less than that of last year, but in the season now passing vegetation has seemed to take moisture with avidity, a very distinctive feature from the season of 1897. Few people stop to consider what all this water which has been poured into the structure of the plants means in availing, and how much this is increased in such a season as this, complicating and increasing the labors of the farmers without a corresponding benefit in all cases, though it may be in the tobacco crop, a point yet remains to be seen. The increase in labor comes from the enormous amount of water that has to be handled and evaporated by natural process.

Let us call attention to one or two instances, which may be considered as approximate rules for the season, or perhaps we should say whimsies. Taking an average plant from a typical field of tobacco, it was found to weigh six and a half pounds when harvested; at the old rate of 6,000 plants per acre broadcast, this would result in nearly twenty tons of the green product, before the leaves are cut off from each acre to the curing sheds. How much more must be reduced by the curing or drying process to less than two tons, including the dried stalks. If we add to the weight actually produced per acre the tops, suckers and other waste, we should have thrown away, and we should increase the weight about a fifth, making about twenty-four tons gross weight of vegetable matter supplied by each acre, which is mainly supplied by the atmosphere. The residue of two tons is partly drawn from the soil, representing the mineral constituents contained in the woody structure of the plant. It is noticeable also that the roots of plants through which this supply has been drawn are not of a growth of the superstructure of the plant. This perhaps shows the unusual facilities offered for the plants to obtain the requisite nutriment, as the roots are neither large, deeply set, nor unusually numerous.

TO FIGHT BENEATH THE OCEAN.

Verne Says the Next Naval War Will be Fought Under the Sea

Julius Verne, whose submarine dream in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," has proved such an accurate forecast of the future, has been corroborated by the experiments made with submarine and semi-submarine boats during the late war, to launch out into another and more emphatic prediction of greater things to come. Verne is convinced that we have reached a point in submarine navigation where the way lies open, and that so quickly shall we now progress in the building of ships to sail beneath the waves, and the next great naval war will be fought entirely between vessels far down in the sea.

The sea, says Verne, contains all that is necessary to provide the submarine ship with its motive power and the officers and crew with food. While electricity can be extracted from the sea to move the screw of the under-sea boat, and there is a limitless field to draw on for this power, food enough of the most wholesome kind can be found in the sea to feed the crews of all the submarine boats that could be built.

A NOVEL RETREAT.

It is pleasant to turn from the prediction of submarine fighters to that other prediction of submarine fighters, the submarine retreat. The submarine retreat is a novel idea that can be made to sink beneath the waves in stormy weather, rising to breathe in the morning and, having drawn breath enough for the day, returning to the submarine world without the great novelist's book. The first man to follow out the Jules Verne idea of a submarine retreat has appeared. The King of Siam has had a house of glass constructed at the bottom of the lake in his palace grounds, and there, in hot weather, he retires to lounge and smoke and read with such friends as are favored with invitations to share the luxury of the novel retreat. Air is obtained by means of tubes running from the glass house to the upper regions, and the atmosphere of the palace is always cool, fresh and healthful.

When the millennium arrives the submarine city will be the only one man will have for Jules Verne's suggestion. At present, while nations are struggling for the mastery of the sea, the submarine ship holds the inventor's attention.

As Jules Verne proudly points out, there are submarine boats already built that have done wonders in the way of submarine navigation. The story of the cruise of the submarine boat Argonaut has been read here with the greatest interest. That a submarine vessel should be able to sink to the bottom and make a long cruise among the fishes and the wrecks is regarded as a great feat. It is the cap of the inventive engineer. In the opinion of the inventor, the Argonaut, coming to be as great an improvement on its predecessors as its predecessors were on the crude means of under-sea travelling that were the best the submarine explorer at one time had.

NAVAL BATTLES.

Submarine travel is shown to be no longer a question of the future. Man is now able to explore the depths of the sea and move among the monsters of the deep with ease and security. It is therefore, only one step to the time when a naval battle will be fought of the kind predicted by those who believe a struggle beneath the waters will be the next novelty in marine warfare.

At present the submarine boats in existence can be counted on the fingers of one hand. The Plunger, the Holland, the Fish Hawk, the Fish Hawk, the Fish Hawk, and the Fish Hawk, are the only ones in existence, and, equipped with torpedoes, they would make naval surface fighting of the variety of which we have just had such a thrilling illustration, a matter of past history.

In the opinion of French engineers and naval men, it is not only possible, but easy, with boats of the Plunger and Holland type, to steal quietly beneath the waters to where a fleet of leviathans of the deep are lying quietly at anchor, and blow the entire collection of armor-protected, formidable and beautiful ships of war into fragments of scrap metal. What could not the Germans have done in the way of a surprise to the fleets of Sampson and Schley, it is argued by naval men here, had they been the possessors of two boats of the Plunger and Holland type, armed with torpedoes. The blockade of Santiago could have been raised very quickly, by raising the American ships in the air with a series of blows from beneath that they would have been powerless to resist. With pick and dash and a few torpedoes the whole story of the war might have been changed.

NAVIES USELESS.

Had such a thing happened it would have revolutionized naval warfare so that the navies of the world would have been rendered as useless for fighting as so many runways. This enemy that can come from the invisible world beneath the keel of the warships and smash the finest boat as the Maine was smashed would have to be met with its own weapons, and so there would come into existence the navies of the future, fighting ships that the novelist predicts must be one of the terrors of future naval wars.

Such a boat could have but one weapon—the torpedo—but this would be sufficient. No merchant vessel would dare to cross the seas in war time when it was known that a fleet of submarine commerce destroyers lay in wait for the spoils of war. It would be necessary for ships to be conveyed by fleets of the submarine boats which would cruise around beneath the waves and grapple with any craft encountered in the sea. It would be a strange voyage. No one in the surface ships would know ought of what was transpiring beneath the waves. Whether or not the protecting craft had met an enemy, and been sent to rest forever on the bottom of the ocean, or had been victorious and placed it out of the power of one enemy to do damage to the ships of the convoy, would never be known until the hostile craft appeared to capture or destroy the merchantmen, or the convoying submarine craft came up to tell the victory.

Tidings of fights taking place under such circumstances would be hard to get, and the record of craft lost without the slightest clue to the cause would be very materially added to.

To the lover of desperate adventure, the prospect of one of these sea fights far down beneath the waves is alluring, but to the possibly inclined man it is too terrible to contemplate with comfort. Terrible or not, it is the firm belief among the naval experts of France that Jules Verne's predictions is very soon to be verified by the appearance among the new naval craft of submarine ships, torpedo-equipped, and manned with dare-devils who will venture on any dangerous work that their government plans. Then we shall have seen the last of the steel-armoured battleships, the armored cruiser, the torpedo boat. Only the submarine warships, the torpedo and the man behind the torpedo, guns and the man behind the gun, will constitute the naval force of the future.

AN UNCANNY ISLAND

News was brought from Suva by the steamer Miowara that Falcon island, recently situated between the Tonga and Bhaal groups and immediately opposite the Nomunka group of islands has disappeared beneath the waves owing to volcanic action. There were about twenty native fishermen on the island and they have doubtless perished. In this connection the following story of the island is of interest.

An island of up and down is Falcon, a strange freak of the Tonga group that has puzzled more mariners than any in its day. Falcon comes and goes like the land we have read of in the story books, just as though some spirit of the sea had waved a trident over it and commanded it to appear or disappear.

For the fourth or fifth time in the knowledge of man, Falcon has disappeared. This time we are told that the vanishing act caused the loss of the lives of twelve fishermen who had taken up quarters on the uncertain bit of ground. News from Suva, Fiji, had it that Falcon had drawn beneath the surface of the ocean some time last month, and the disappearance was observed by some natives in all circles except that in which moves the old seaman.

Falcon Island is about 700 miles from Suva. It is somewhat isolated from, yet included in, the Tonga group. It derived its name from the British warship, Falcon, which in 1865 explored the Tonga group and reported that a low reef existed in the location of what has from time to time been called an island out of courtesy. The reef was almost awash, for the big breakers was almost awash, for the big breakers rolled clear over it, making navigation difficult. Little was thought of the discovery until 1877, when the gunboat Sappho passed "Falcon reef" and was surprised to find there a low island against which the surf washed, but the top of which was clear of the surging sea. Sappho was observed to be passing from the queer brownish gray mound and the reef was so low that it was uncomfortable to explore it afoot.

In 1885 another warship visited the spot and found the island still above sea level. The British government was so curious, so in 1890 the survey steamer Egeria was despatched to make a thorough examination and chart of the place.

The Egeria's crew found the island to be one and a quarter miles long, shaped like a wedge, and one mile wide at the broadest part. They also found that in the four years intervening between the visit of the gunboat to the place and the call of Egeria, Falcon had grown a most astonishing bump on its southern extremity which elevation reared its top 100 feet above the sea. The soil of the island was found to consist of sand, loose volcanic ashes and cinders that appeared to be constantly slipping down toward the surf. The ground was not composed of volcanic material from it on the south side, therefore there were no signs of volcanic activity. No coast was found.

Heading of the queer things that Falcon was doing, the commander of the French frigate Duchesne, in 1892, sailed over to the Tonga and took at look at Falcon. At the 25th anniversary had shrunk to a twenty-six foot bank. Everything seemed to be in good shape, and as the island appeared to be willing to remain standing for a while, the British schooner Ysabel set sail to land a few fishermen there and plant a few coconuts. Imagine the surprise of the Ysabel's skipper when he found the place awash again and at two furlongs distant it looked like a "black streak" just visible above old Neptune's realm.

The Ysabel visited the island in April, 1893. The skipper of the schooner, John O'Hryan, of Alpa, Samoa, hoping to conquer new worlds, set out his schooner with a small colony to settle on Falcon, plant trees thereon and found a colony. People who had heard the report of the Ysabel's trip sneered and thought that a good joke would be played on O'Hryan, and that Falcon's location and found there a "black streak."

But the world didn't have the laugh on O'Hryan. Falcon, in short of space on eight months, had popped up again and the O'Hryan party landed on an island with bold, steep sides and deep water all round, on which were planted some trees.

The "bold steep sides" didn't last very long, for in 1897 the Meg Mure, a schooner, passed there and discovered the place and almost awash again. The "bold steep sides," had given to John McGinty.

Judging from the nature of the despatches from Suva, settlers were not deterred from making a landing place on Falcon. The freak grew very weary of life above water and this time has apparently disappeared for good, with twenty human "steep sides," leaving a "black streak" as a means of future identification.

A SEASON OF FOLIAGE

All seasons in which nature makes her effort to reproduce, differ very materially from each other in their characteristics. Sometimes her object seems to be the development and increase of seeds, at other times, all her efforts seem to be directed to the possession of foliage. The latter does not necessarily occur in what we call a wet season. In fact it often occurs in a comparatively dry one. Of this character have been the predominating features of the present season—a fact which the most careless observer cannot fail to notice. This is of undoubted advantage to tobacco growers, but it is doubtful if any other class of agriculturists is served or benefited by it. In the tobacco plant the foliage is all that is required; and a profuse growth in this respect is the most gratifying of the qualities that the leaf is expected to possess. Every one familiar with the tobacco fields the present season has remarked the phenomenal growth of the plants—larger, stronger and healthier than for a series of years. This is not due to any variety of soil, but to the fact that the plants are growing in a season of foliage. It does not mean all fields are equal in size and appearance, but even the poorer lands show the remarkable influences that were at work to force the foliage to the full development. All have no doubt seen the extreme height attained by the plants this year and the seemingly feeble attempt to produce seed. Practically only the main spike has resulted in matured seed, there being very few lateral ones. The leaves are very large, making the head as it is called, very large and compact with the leaves of the plant. There is a profusion of such, particularly around the base of the stalk, and these again show that the increasing of the foliage was the main object of nature. The leaves produced by these suckers being remarkably large and compact, and the leaves of the main spike being very small and thin, showing but weak efforts to grow seed, even when allowed to remain beyond the usual period.

What is true of the tobacco crop is also true with regard to other forms of vegetation. Corn is of remarkable growth, with more than the usual number of ears, and each ear is larger and smaller tassels. The ears themselves show that much of the nutriment has been absorbed by the general structure of the plant at their expense, as there are many undeveloped ears which have not a kernel to show, and many tassels which are white and lack the snapping over at the nodes above that as a rule, nature has neglected this point altogether. Every one complaining of the remarkable growth of his pole beans, and the slow and imperfect development of the pods. Tomatoes, which belong to the same order of plants as tobacco—one of the three in that group, the other being potatoes, have all run to vines, which still continue vigorous, but the first has been exceedingly sparse. Squash and cucumber vines have also shown the same characteristics—the profusion of foliage and the absence of fruit in a corresponding degree. Lawns and the hay crop show the same effect, which cannot be entirely attributed to the amount of rain, but to the fact that it is the usual custom to leave five stalks to the hill, and a plant three and one-half inches of rain fall accredited to the season. The precipitation has been much less than that of last year, but in the season now passing vegetation has seemed to take moisture with avidity, a very distinctive feature from the sea-side where all this water which has entered into the structure of the plants means an avardrop, and how much this is increased in such a season as this, complicating and increasing the labors of the farmers without a corresponding benefit in all cases. Though it may be in the tobacco crop a point that yet remains to be seen. The increase in labor comes from the enormous amount of water that has to be handled and evaporated by natural process.

TO FIGHT BENEATH THE OCEAN.

Verne Says the Next Naval War Will be Fought Under the Sea

Julius Verne, whose submarine dream in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," has proved such an accurate forecast of the future, has been emboldened by the experiments made with submarines and semi-submersible boats during the late war, to launch out into another and more emphatic prediction of greater things to come. Verne is convinced that we have reached a point in submarine navigation where the way lies open, and that so quickly shall we now progress in the building of ships to sail beneath the waves, and the next great naval war will be fought entirely between vessels far down in the sea.

A NOVEL RETREAT.

It is pleasant to turn from the prediction of submarine fighters to that of other prophetic Jules Verne.

The cities of the sea found of air-tight habitations that can be made to sink beneath the waves in a moment, rising to breathe in the morning and, having drawn breath enough for the day, returning to the submarine world whose beauties are so vividly described in the great novelist's book. The first man to follow out the Jules Verne idea of a submarine habitation has been the Hon. Mr. J. P. Simeon. He has had a house of glass constructed at the bottom of the lake in his palace grounds, and there, in hot weather, he retires to lounge and smoke and read with such friends as are favored with invitations to share the luxury of the floating retreat. Air is obtained by means of tubes running from the glass house to the upper regions, and the atmosphere of the palace is always cool, fresh and healthful.

When the millennium arrives, the submarine city will be the only one man will have for Jules Verne's suggestion. At present, while nations are struggling for the mastery, the submarine fighting ship holds the inventors' attention.

As Jules Verne proudly points out, there are submarine boats already built that are capable of making long cruises across the great waters in the way of submarine navigation. The story of the cruise of the submarine boat Argonaut has been read here with the greatest interest. That a submarine vessel should be able to sink to the bottom and make long cruises across the great waters in the way of submarine navigation, and the wrecks is regarded as a great feat in the cap of the inventive engineer. It is remarked that this boat, the Argonaut, seems to be as great an improvement on its predecessors as its predecessors were on the crude models of undersea craft that were the best the submarine explorer at one time had.

NAVAL BATTLES.

Submarine travel is shown to be no longer a question of the future. Man is now able to explore the depths of the sea and move among the monsters of the deep with ease and security. AN UNCANNY ISLAND

News was brought from Suva by the steamer Mowara that Falcon Island, recently situated between the Tonga and Haapai groups and immediately opposite the Nukunua group of islands has disappeared beneath the waves owing to volcanic action. There were about twenty native fishermen on the island and they have doubtless perished. In this connection the following story of the island is of interest.

An island of up and down is Falcon, a strange freak of the Tonga group. It is a low, wide, more or less circular island, in its day, Falcon comes and goes like the land we have read about in the story books, just as though some spirit of the sea had waved a trident over it and commanded it to appear or disappear.

Heating of the queer things that Falcon was doing, the commander of the French frigate Dufraigne, in 1892, steamed over to the Tonga and took at look at Falcon. The 253-foot elevation had shrunk to a twenty-six foot bank. Everything seemed to be in good shape, and as the island appeared to be willing to remain standing for a while, the British whaler Yabel set out to sea with a few fishermen there and plant a few coconuts. Imagine the surprise of the Yabel's skipper when he found the place again and at two miles distant it looked like a "black streak," just visible above old Neptune's realm.

The "bold steep sides" didn't last very long, for in 1897 the Meg Merril, a schooner, passed there and discovered the place and blowed it away again. The "bold steep sides" had gone to join McGinty.

A PECULIAR STABBING CASE

The Victim Recovering from the Effect of His Wounds

Mr. Kenton Dorion, who resides at 272 St. Denis street with Lady Prefontaine gave himself up to the police authorities this morning on the charge of stabbing Mr. Charles Farrell, son of ex-Ald. Farrell. He appeared before Magistrate Lafontaine this morning and pleaded not guilty. The case was adjourned for hearing until October 11, bail being accepted in the meantime. The story leading to the issuance of the warrant for Mr. Dorion is as follows—Several young men were out camping at Lake Labelle, in the Joliette district, and among them were Messrs. Farrell and Dorion, two young men who were always looked upon as intimate friends. The party spent the day of the 25th of July in hunting. Some were more or less successful. Mr. Dorion remarked that Farrell was not a premier marksman and chaffed him about it. Farrell could not brook the comments on the shooting, and frequently told Dorion that he was going too far. At last Farrell struck Dorion a powerful blow in the right eye. Dorion, who is a smaller fellow, fell to the ground. He picked himself up, however, and in a moment, it is alleged, plunged his knife into Farrell's side. The victim was rendered unconscious, and at the time he was not expected to live. He was taken to the Royal Victoria Hospital in a very precarious condition, and since has improved. On the 5th of September he had a warrant issued for Dorion's arrest, but it was not executed until today.

Montreal, Oct. 5.—The annual general meeting of the Lake of the Woods Milling Company's shareholders was held at the office of the company, 27 Board of Trade building, today. The statement of the year's business was placed before the shareholders, and the report of the directors was unanimously adopted, and a dividend of 8 per cent was declared on the capital stock of the company for the year ending August 31, 1898. The following directors were elected—Messrs. Robert McEwen, John Hastings, R. B. Angus, John Turnbull, Montreal, and John Macdonald, Ottawa. At a subsequent meeting of the directors, Mr. Robert McEwen was elected President and Managing Director; Mr. W. A. Hastings, Vice-President and General Manager; Mr. G. V. Hastings, Manager; Winnipeg, and General Superintendent Mr. F. E. Bray, Secretary, and Mr. Frank Stephen McEwen, Treasurer.

HEAVY BANK ROBBERY

Thirty-Two Thousand Dollars Missing From the Vaults of the Winnipeg Bank

Winnipeg, Oct. 5.—The Molsons Bank in this city has been robbed of a large sum of money, said to be in the neighborhood of $30,000. The bank officials and solicitors are very reticent in regard to the matter, although they do not deny that the bank has been robbed. The details of the affair are kept from the public.

Mr. T. B. Phelps, manager of the bank, left yesterday morning for Russell, to confer with Mr. F. M. Russell, Beth, accountant and acting manager of the bank during Mr. Phelps's absence, was seen by a reporter. His statements were extremely guarded. For any inquiries of such a nature, he said, must refer you to the bank's solicitors, under whose directions I act during the absence of the manager. The robbery was not discovered until yesterday at noon, so that it can safely be inferred that the safe was not broken into, or any evidence left in the building by the robbers.

In fact, it is asserted that the vault was opened by the regular combination. This adds much to the mystery, as only one man in the bank knows the whole combination, each clerk who uses the vault locking a portion. It is said that the money stolen was in bank notes, and the robbery is believed to have taken place since Sept. 29.

It is not impossible that arrests will be made before another day goes by. The absence of any official statement is partially accounted for by apparent lack of authority in the part of both the manager and solicitors to give out any information. They declare that they have no authority to make anything public.

Mr. Wolfertan Thomas of Montreal, general manager of the Molsons Bank, confirms the report of the robbery. He said he learned early this morning that $32,000 had been taken. Out of this $25,000 was in negotiable notes so that $37,000 is the real loss of the bank. Manager Phelps has been communicated with and will be back in the city this evening.

Indications, in consequence of the robbery, have been issued from the head office of the bank in Montreal to the various branches, to keep a man on guard at night over the vaults until further notice.

Lindsay Post—Mr. Geo. Goodwin, returned this morning from a short visit with Colburn and Peterboro. Mr. W. C. Turner, of Peterboro, was in town yesterday. Mrs. Wm. Hudson, of Peterboro, is the guest of her niece, Mrs. Fred Russell, Lindsay street, for a few days.

WHAT BRIDES WEAR

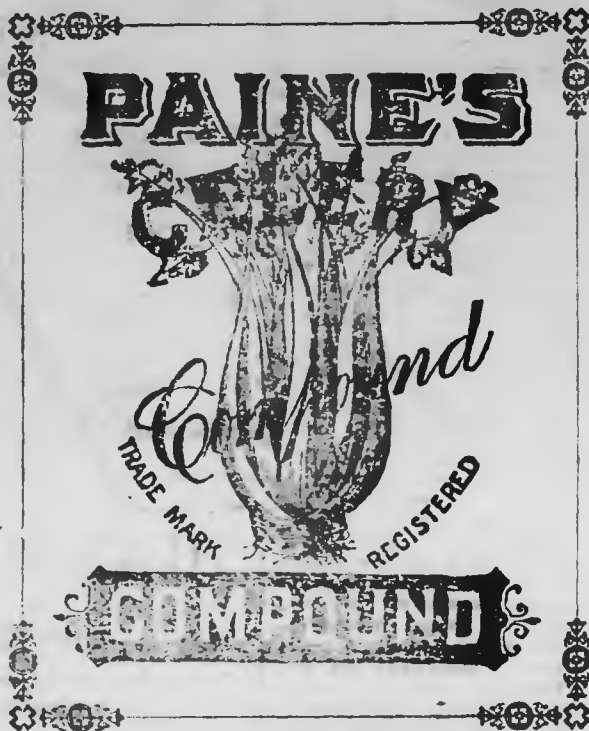

The October bride is willowy and avelte. Her robe of white satin is built on princesses, and encases her figure from shoulder to knees in close, faultless lines, the back fastened with a row of small round white satin buttons, which reach from the choker almost a third of the way down the skirt, says the Boston Herald. Below the lowest button, the long slender train starts with a few gathers, the hem of the bell skirt flaring just a little on the circular sides, and curving long and close in front. Some beautiful applications of rare lace, yellow with age, are thrown over the side of the skirt in front, and slender old bars are sewn down the outside of the light long sleeves, the inconstant part of the lace at the shoulder. This has the satin cut from under it, revealing the outside of the arm beneath from the shoulder to the wrist, the underpart of the sleeve fastened with many little buttons, as tight as it, a little leaved of lace falling over the hand. The princess front of the bodice is left untrimmed, save for the long chains of pearls, the neck cut down from each side of the choker into a square opening which is filled in with a shirred piece of ivory chiffon banded with a dog collar of pearls and diamonds. About this opening there is a little old lace collar, which lies flat against the dress, passes up the choker under the dog collar and then flares stiffly up about the head in a small ruff effect above the jewels—nothing could more becomingly frame the stately little head. The veil, to complete the simple effect, is a cloudy arrangement of tulle draped from a coronet of orange blossoms.

The fashionable wedding dress is quite as often combined with delicate color as it is of pure white. Especially in London has this been the fashion for the last season or two, where the most elegant robes are exquisitely embroidered with colored stones and crystal. Garlands of large—more in tight little bunches are worked out with turquoise and silver embroidery tinged with faint green like most delicate verdigris, this surrounding the court train of white satin, which is draped from the shoulders and shrouded in the lace veil from the head. The train is lined with palest, whitest forget-me-not blue satin, framing the white-laced figure charmingly. A thick ivory crepe de chine lined with palest pink satin was worn by a bride in London this summer, the whole skirt encircled in waving lines with graduated bands of white satin ribbon, a saff of white satin furling having deeply fringed long ends trailing on one side of the front. The bodice was a lattice of white satin crepe, and the sleeves and guimpes were of unlined white d'Alençon with the throat left bare save for a dog collar of jewels, into which some most exquisite pink coral was introduced. The gown was draped from the shoulders with a court train of white satin lined with countless white chiffon and lace ruffles, that made a soft white background for the delicate tinged white robe.

The train draped from the shoulders is especially suited to the formal pageantry of the modern fashionable wedding, and it is displayed to immense advantage up the side of a church. It can be made very girlish and diaphanous of unlined white chiffon, ruffled all about and completely shrouding the slender train of the gown itself. The lace veil falling from the head partly over this transparent train adds to the effect of a cloud-like envelope.

A little tulle which is being designed for late October has some charming gowns. The wedding gown is to be a handsome reception affair of palest silvery gray broadcloth, the skirt fitting like a glove and laced half way down the back the lining a delicate pink silk. The skirt is bell-shaped, wanting than recent skirts and very long, almost demitasse. The bodice is of coral tulle covered with an exquisite embroidered navy blue chiffon, the embroidery in white in a large palm-leaf pattern and resin transparent, the girdle a shaded one of coral velvet with a rosette and paste buckle. The sleeves of gray broadcloth are laced up the fore arm to match the skirt, the low square of the neck displays the tucked under-choker guimpe of white satin. This pink tulle vest effect is bound about the low, round neck, and down each side of a little front flashing with black velvet, a row of tiniest black buttons on one side, and of little black loops on the other, as though it might fasten over the white satin chemise. The bonnet—for bonnets are smart again, even for young girls—will be of coral velvet and paste buckles, broadly bowed across the front, back of the pompadour, white roses.

A bride with hair of decided red tinge and of the most glorious profusion and crispness, is introducing a color scheme which is the delight of an artistic eye, and is quite new. She has worn corals and carmine, browns and yellows and oranges, and recent reds and tans, until she is longing for a change of some kind so heliotrope she has pounced upon. The result is beautiful and most unusual. Try it, all Titian-haired women, and see what a sensation you will create. A black cadmore skirt gown that she is having made is to be trimmed with narrow heliotrope velvet ribbon edging lapels and sleeves and surrounding the single-breasted little jacket. Her stock is to be of white satin bowed in front squarely, and on her head, back of her pompadour is to be a little toque of jet sequins, with a broad, clever mass of heliotrope tulle ribbon bows across the front.

The fingerless gloves are of fine meshwork instead of tulle, and have ribbons of narrow wash silk run through cases of maine, instead of through bindings, making, when drawn a dainty little puffing between the ruffles and the narrow top edging—a dainty, new idea. The casing is feather stitched on both sides in some cases, and sometimes, is placed directly at the top of the chemise, next to the skin, a running vine of embroidery sometimes covering it, but not openworked like a beading. On one chemise there were two of these casings on each side of a broad band of pale pink dimit, which, when the pink ribbons were drawn up, gave the appearance of three puffings, the center one broad and pink, the outer narrow white ones, a narrow embroidered edge finishing the top very daintily. Drawers and nightgowns and petticoats were all trimmed with these pink dimit puffings to match the chemise. Another set had narrow hem-stitched bands of pale violet lawn, the stitchings openworked, and a fine line of white embroidery above it.

A PITIABLE CRIPPLE

From Rheumatism—Blistered by Doctors Till He Didn't Know Himself—South American Rheumatic Cure Performs a Wondrous Cure.

D. Desanetels, Peterborough, writes: "For months I was unable to work, had rheumatism in every part of my body. I was blistered by doctors at ten different times. My hands were drawn out of shape, my fingers were distorted, and my wrists and forearms were double their natural size. My leg was encased in a plaster case for four months. I tried South American Rheumatic Cure; I took two bottles. Twenty-four hours after first dose I felt like a new man. One week after I was able to go to work. Now I am as hearty and strong as ever."

LOW POLITICAL MORALITY

It is idle to speculate on the revelations at recent election trials, says the Toronto Star, but it is perhaps worth while remarking that there are two features made plainly evident by the there is a numerous class of people who prize their franchises simply for the dollars their ballots will bring; that, in fact, this northern zone does not necessarily produce a sturdy political honor, in keeping with the invigorating climate. It has been made quite clear that among enlightened communities we have large numbers of men who can be bribed for pleasure sums; who have no compunction about selling their honor; who exhibit no shame in admitting their disgrace, who are troubled no more by the thought of their exposure than by the loss of their citizenship. It must be confessed that too many residents in Canada are either too poor to have principles, or are shamefully ignorant of the value of the privileges, and honor they so lightly barter.

In the second place, the law seems to reach only the 92 man or the ton of coal voter; it fails to touch the chief conspirators and workers, and they not only retain their franchise but actually exhibit no shame, and are not even punished by the withdrawal of the confidence and esteem of their fellow-citizens of a better stripe. The chief effect of recent exposures is simply to retain the necessity of a more stringent law that will reach the principal conspirators as well as the poverty-stricken or poverty-principled instrument and recipient of bribes.

KIDNEY POISONS

Save the Life Spring and Make Putrid the Health Fountain—South American Kidney Cure Cleanses and Purifies.

If the kidneys fail to do their work other organs become involved; poisons generate—circulate through, and vitiate the whole system. Disease and disaster are as sure as sunrise if neglected. South American Kidney Cure acts on the kidneys like magic. It's liquid and attacks the ailing parts, quickly stops the spreading of disease, drives out the foreign substances and brings this important organ back to a healthy normal state. It's a kidney specific.

A PECULIAR STABBING CASE

The Victim is Recovering From the Effect of His Wounds.

Mr. Kenton Dorion, who resides at 272 St. Denis street with Lady Prefontaine gave himself up to the police authorities this morning on the charge of stabbing Mr. Charles Farrell, son of ex-Ald. Farrell. He appeared before Magistrate Lafontaine this morning and pleaded not guilty. The case was enlarged for hearing until October 11, bail being accepted in the meantime. The story leading to the issuance of the warrant for Mr. Dorion is as follows—Several young men were out camping at Lake Labelle, in the Joliette district, and among them were Messrs. Farrell and Dorion, two young men who were always looked upon as intimate friends. The party spent the day of the 24th of July in hunting—some were more or less successful. Mr. Dorion remarked that Farrell was not a premier marksmen and chafed him about it. Farrell could not throw the arguments on the shooting, and frequently told Dorion that he was going too far. At last Farrell struck Dorion a powerful blow in the right eye. Dorion, who is a smaller fellow, fell to the ground. He jacked himself up, however, and in a moment, it is alleged, plunged his jackknife into young Farrell's side. This victim was rendered unconscious, and at the time he was not expected to live. He was taken to the Royal Victoria Hospital in a very precarious condition, and since has improved. On the 5th of Sep-

PETERBOROUGH, OCTOBER 8, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Sporting News
The Lindsay curlers have organized for the coming season.
The Orillia Lacrosse Club are running a $1 excursion to Toronto on Thursday for that town.

The Brigade Called Out
At 5.30 o'clock, yesterday afternoon an alarm was sent in from the corner of Smith and Stewart streets. It proved to be a chimney that was burning out but the Brigade were on the spot in a short time.

A Snag
We have just secured a very large number of stereoscopic Views, which we will sell at five cents each. Our collection is the best shown anywhere. We invite intending purchasers to come early and make a selection while they can be had at such a low price. Times Bookstore, Peterboro.

Americans Hiring Men
Several American firms have started to engage men for work in the woods getting out logs during the coming winter. This fact led to much speculation as to the basis upon which the Americans were taking their action in view of the act passed at the last session of the Legislature in effect prohibiting the export of logs out after the 1st of April, 1898. An agent is now in town hiring men for the camps.

Heavy stock shipments
Mr. J. H. McDougall, of McDougall, Brandon, & Austin, Pendergast Falls, was in town yesterday attending the delivery of 100 hogs, a couple deer car, to the Matthews Co. During the month of September this firm shipped 75 car loads of hogs, cattle and sheep, 100 of which were sent to Buffalo. The firm paid out about $5,000 during the month for live stock. This is in addition to their large shipping business, which is one of the largest in this locality.

A new industry
A great fuel company will shortly commence operations in Simcoe county, near Barrie. The plant required is a large one, costing $130,000. The manufactured fuel is sold in cylinders, ranging from two to three inches wide, and during a recent test at the power house of the Toronto Metropolitan Railway it was shown that 100 lbs. of fuel was equal to 80 lbs. of coal, and that there was only a 4 per cent. of ash from the former, whereas coal has from 7 to 20 per cent. Other advantages claimed for fuel are no smoke, no dirt, no sulphur, and it will burn in any kind of a furnace, stove or grate. The market price of the new fuel will be between $3.50 and $4.

A strange conflict
A strange conflict has been going on between two young men of the West Ward. They are brothers, and the younger came home one night with a new razor. He used it, and it was fine, and went out, cautioning the older brother to let it alone. But the latter could not resist trying it, and when a nick in the blade appeared, he put it back in its place, and being cross-examined, denied his guilt. The incredulous younger brother was so incensed at this that he took one of the other's razors in his absence and purposely ruined it. Afterwards, he, too, but with an irritating smile, professing innocence. "See here," said the older brother, "I admit that I broke your razor, but I did it accidentally. You have broken mine on purpose, and I ever again after this, I find you wearing any of my clothes, I'll cut you out." The younger regarded this warning for awhile, then wore one night when the other was not expected home, a pair of his new trousers. But the older brother unexpectedly arrived and discovered the absence of the older brother's celebrated padlock coat which had been made in Toronto. Nothing since then has happened. But they continue to exist on a war footing, and either is expected at any time to take up the razors again and charge terribly on the wardrobe of the enemy.

HOME READING UNION

The Local Branch Organized Last Night Under Most Favorable Circumstances

The annual re-organization meeting of the local branch of the National Home Reading Union was held in the ladies' reading room of the Y.M.C.A. building last night and the attendance was most gratifying to the officers and members.

Rev. H. Symonds occupied the chair and in a few encouraging remarks opened the meeting.

Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

The Secretary, Max Dennistown, then presented the following report:—

Annual report of the Peterboro Branch N.H.R.U. for the year ending June 1898.

The aims of this society are to promote and encourage a taste for good reading to make it possible for all to provide themselves with the necessary books.

During the past year we have talked a great deal of ways and means of extending this society, feeling that all who possibly could should be induced to become members, and with this object in view we have held two or three public meetings at which some delightful music and several excellent papers have been given.

In April, Professor Fulton of Toronto University gave us an intellectual treat when he consented to speak on "The Women of Greece." Proof was given them by the well filled hall, that the keynote of the Reading Union had been struck when so many gathered to hear a great lecture even though it was given in the afternoon.

Number members for last year—57
No. members previous year—60-07—69
No. Circles 1897-98—3
No. Circles 1898-07—5
Balance for year ending June 1897—92
Amount of fees—28-50
Amount expended for books—39-10
Collected for supply extras—2-90

EXPENDITURE
Remitted to General Secretary—$22-80
Remitted to General Secretary—39-10
Postage Express, Money Orders—8-05
Balance on hand—1-47

These figures show a falling off of 12 members and the disbanding of two of our circles, the last difficulty however, has been met by most of the members joining the three remaining circles. And though we deplore the decrease in membership we do not find the interest in the work has at all abated.

It is encouraging to note a remark made by the President at our opening meeting last year. It is this, that the year is always considered the trial year of any society, we feel now that we have passed the Rubicon and are safely launched on the road to prosperity and we look forward to a most successful year where we hope all here will join us.

THE HAMILTON COY LOAN

Reasons Why the By-law Should be Supported

To the Editor of Morning Times—
Sir,—The time is drawing close at hand when the qualified ratepayers will be called upon to say whether they are in favor of loaning the Wm. Hamilton Co. the sum of $30,000 at $3 1-2 per cent. for twenty years.

It behooves every elector who has the welfare of the town at heart to give this matter the consideration, its importance demands. We have here in Peterboro a manufacturing concern which started in a humble way, until now it holds a prominent place among the leading manufacturing industries of Canada. A market for its output is found in every province of the Dominion and the excellence of the article turned out, has advertised the name of Peterboro wherever its machinery is sold. In order to keep a pace with the times, they find that it will be necessary to enlarge their premises and modernize their plant, and have asked us to assist them by way of the proposed loan.

No doubt the Wm. Hamilton Co. have every confidence in the people of Peterboro; or they would not have asked them for this loan. No doubt if they thought that the town were not as good as to run the risk of being refused it, and would have taken some of the tempting inducements of Belleville, Ottawa, and other places into their most serious consideration; but they undoubtedly expect that the people of Peterboro appreciate the enterprise enough to give them the assistance which they seek. And why should we refuse? In the first place it is not an instance of bonusing some new concern that is coming to town—something we are experimenting on. It is a matter of rewarding a large enterprising man, carrying out any of the covenants contained in the mortgage the town can easily realize the amount of their loan.

The amount of business that will be done with the enlarged establishment and the increased amount of money put in circulation will indirectly be felt by us all. Let every fair-minded ratepayer think these facts over before going to vote on the matter, and he will surely vote the right way, viz.—to grant the loan.

Yours, etc.,
RATEPAYER.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES

Mapplings in the Town and District During the Past Twenty-Four Hours
—Millbrook exhibition is now on—yesterday and today.

—The regulation forbidding the acceptance of postage stamps in payment of customs dues went into effect last week.

—The Times circulation is booming these days. Yesterday a list of 40 new subscribers was handed in by our circulation manager, the result of two day's work.

—Lindsay Warder—it is whispered on the streets that a prominent manufacturer will start the manufacture of bicycles in the old O'Connor works on William street.

—Lindsay proposes to ask the Government to allow the fixing of the amount to be paid the Police Magistrate as salary, to be at the discretion of the Council.

—The Cordova Exploration Co., of Belmont, made their regular shipment of gold bullion to the U. S. Office on Monday. The brick weighed two hundred and twenty ounces and was worth $4,200.

—Two phthisical young men of Port Hope made a firm wager years ago. Alfred Richards bet Robert Walker that the latter would die first. Walker lost the bet. Richardson lived long enough to vote on the plebiscite. He died on Saturday two days after.

—Lindsay Warder—it is reported that conductor Wm. Pym, of the Haliburton train, will, owing to ill health, resign his position. He is a popular conductor and will be missed by many. Mr. Pym and family will probably reside in Peterboro.

—The double tracking of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Toronto and Montreal has been commenced the other end of the line. The improvement was authorized at the recent annual meeting of the shareholders. It will be seen, therefore that the company has lost no time in getting to work.

—The editor of the Harper's Magazine, Mr. Henry M. Alden, has a daughter who has made a collection of over 100 dolls, each doll representing a different nation and being made in that country. The collection is considered to be the most unique and finest of its kind in existence. Miss Alden is now to show the world her dolls, and explain them, and in the next issue of the "Ladies' Home Journal" she will show pictures of the first twenty. In following issues she will show the others.

All Covered With Eruptions—Could Not Work, the Suffering Was So Great—Hood's Has Cured.

"I was all run down with complaints peculiar to my sex, and I broke out in sores on my body, head, limbs and hands, and my hair all came out. I was under the doctor's treatment a long time without benefit. They called my trouble eczema. Finally I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after I had used three or four bottles I found I was improving. I kept on until I had taken several more bottles and the sores and itching have disappeared and my hair has grown out." Mrs. J. G. BROWN, Brantford, Ontario.

"I was all run down and had no appetite. I had a tired feeling all the time. I was advised to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I did so and it benefited me so much that I would not be without it." Mrs. G. I. BURNETT, Central Norton, N. B.

An Insulted Enthusiast

The Belleville Ontario, a few days ago said: "A certain local preacher in the city is an enthusiastic exponent of prohibition, and he never fails to get in a word as the interests of his theories. He is so enthusiastic that the subject sometimes gets the best of him and he can't talk fast enough to keep to his thoughts, and the result is that it is difficult to understand him at times. Yesterday he approached a well-known merchant on Front street and began to talk prohibition. He got worked up and was talking 240 words to the minute, when the merchant stopped him and said: 'Mr. you are a nice man, and I like to talk to you; but I would be better pleased if you would come and talk to me when you are sober.' The exponent of prohibition stood aghast. When he recovered his bearings he started off as fast as his legs could carry him, probably to ask some of his friends if he acted like a drunken man."

ANCE-AMERICAN RELATIONS.

A. V. Dicey, professor of English law at Oxford, discusses at length in the Atlantic Monthly for October the practicability and possibility of an alliance between England and America. He insists that English statesmen for a generation have been cultivating the friendship of the United States. The recent manifestations of friendliness on the part of the English people, Mr. Dicey contends, is not a sudden ebullition of sentiment, but the indication of a set purpose on the part of the thoughtful men who have influence in shaping the policy of the English Government. This purpose has not been to have more than a moral alliance, although many Englishmen believe that the friendliness of the two Governments may come eventually to a political or defensive alliance.

In America the talk of an alliance with England may be a matter of impulse, Mr. Dicey says, but with England there are strong reasons for the cultivation of a friendship with the United States. He does not mention the chief of these reasons, which, of course, is the advantage of a union of the whole English-speaking race against Muscovite or other encroachment.

Mr. Dicey ridicules what he calls the fallacy of pan-Americanism. America and England are not like two women with loves and hates. Nations, he insists, are not ruled by sentimentality. Governments look to the interests of nations, and are more often ruled by political and business considerations than by sentiment. He must know, however, that sentiment cannot safely be ignored, and that sometimes it counts for much.

Mr. Dicey admits that the theory that the interests of America and England will always coincide is a delusion. When one ally requires the support of the other there will need to be certain immediate sacrifices by whichever party is called upon for help. The conditions of a treaty for mutual defence would be in the nature of a contract limiting the freedom of the contracting parties. In the case stands now he admits neither England nor America is prepared to curtail her own liberty of action.

Looking at the question from the standpoint of a lawyer and the publicist, Mr. Dicey cannot believe that the hopes of those who look forward to an alliance between England and America in the near future will be justified. Friendliness, he says, is to be achieved not by treaties of any kind, nor by formal alliance, but by state-ship which will lead the two nations to a better understanding of each other. A formal alliance at all events cannot be hurried, and if the time ever comes when there is a formal alliance between the two nations it will be for defence, not for offence.

On only one point does Professor Dicey agree with the advocates of an Anglo-American alliance in the United States. He favors an arbitration treaty between the two countries—not modelled on the one that was rejected by the Senate but merely an agreement to consider in the spirit of broad state-ship questions that may come up in controversy.

FRENCH ARMY'S NEW GUN

Stories have been published in the French papers of late time during the last five years regarding experiments with rapid-fire field guns, says the New York Herald. These experiments have now been successfully completed, and the field artillery branch of the French army will in the near future be equipped with the gun finally decided upon.

The gun is made of nickel steel and is provided with a breech lock operated by a screw mechanism, its calibre being 75 centimetres, or a little less than three inches. Smokeless powder is used and the charge and projectile are combined in one, as in an ordinary infantry cartridge. These cartridges are of considerable length.

Adding the gun is done by the cannon-crew on a track at the rear of the carriage, who operate the breech lock. After inserting a cartridge in the breech, this operation simultaneously setting the firing pin. After the shot is fired he catches up the empty shell on opening the breech.

The gun is aimed and fired by the cannon-crew sitting at the right of the carriage. Within a certain arc the lateral movements of the piece are made by means of a screw without disturbing the position of the carriage, while for greater changes of aim the carriage itself is moved, a lever extending from its foot being employed for this purpose.

When a shot is fired from an ordinary cannon the carriage has a tendency to run back. This is checked in the new gun by a glycerine brake, and the gun is replaced in firing position by means of compressed air. Part of the recoil, however, is communicated to the carriage, and to prevent the latter from changing its position it is furnished with a gear at its foot, which is forced into the ground after the first shot or two, rendering it immovable.

Rapidity of fire is obtained by use of the metallic cartridge, combining both charge and projectile, the possibility of aiming the gun while it is being loaded and its lateral movability without disturbing the carriage. Five shots a minute are considered slow work, and as many as twenty may be fired in a minute. For the protection of the gunners two steel shields are provided. Two kinds of projectiles are used—shrapnel and shell. The former contains about 250 lead bullets and are timed to burst just before striking, scattering bullets in all directions, while the latter are charged with melinite and are used to pierce brick walls.

Destructive effects of the shrapnel are increased by swinging the gun through its arc on the carriage while firing, thus covering a large area. This is called "faucheur le terrain," or "mowing the ground," a grimly suggestive term.

Other European countries have made experiments in this line, notably Germany, which has already equipped its field artillery with a somewhat similar weapon. During a recent trial in that country targets representing the equivalent of three-fourths of an ordinary field battery of the ordinary kind were put out of action in seven minutes at a range of 5.2 kilometres (about three and one-quarter miles).

From this it would appear that the next European war will be murderous beyond description—provided the Car's diamond-shaped projectile is not a failure before the smouldering fire breaks into flame.

A TERRIBLE NIGHT

The Chicago Times-Herald of yesterday says Miss Elizabeth Stephenson, who was recently selected by Governor Schiefel to christen the battleship Wisconsin, has had a narrow escape from death in the lava beds of Mount Vesuvius. Miss Stephenson, accompanied by her sister, Miss Harriet, and Mrs. Frederick C. Austin, and Miss Marion Austin of Chicago, were visiting in Naples. They started on the volcano early in the afternoon, and on route engaged three Italians who represented themselves as official guides. The Italians proved themselves anything but guides and the party lost their way. All night they wandered, frequently having narrow escapes from a terrible death in the boiling streams of lava coming from the crater above. At daybreak they got back to the road and reached their hotel almost exhausted. All the ladies are said to have been painfully scorched and almost exhausted from inhaling sulphurous gases.

SKETCH OF MISS STEPHENSON.
Miss Elizabeth Stephenson, who has been selected to christen the battleship Wisconsin at San Francisco Nov. 28, is one of the fairest daughters of the Badger State. She is the child of ex-Governor Isaac Stephenson of Marinette, and is just 21 years old. The Wisconsin sponsor was born in Marinette and was educated at Milwaukee-Dow College and La Salle College, near Boston. She was graduated from the latter institution with high honors. Miss Stephenson is a magnificent specimen of young womanhood. She is almost six feet tall, and slender. She has dark eyes and a bright, attractive face. Her father is quite wealthy, and he will take his daughter across the continent with a large party of Wisconsin people in fine style. Miss Stephenson will use champagne to christen the Wisconsin.

Symptoms.—Mucous intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate and become very sore. Swarms of Ointment stops the itching and healing, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. BY-LAW No.

A By-law to Aid the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company Limited

Passed the... day of... 1898.

WHEREAS The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, purpose and intend to enlarge their manufacturing establishment in the Town of Peterborough and for that purpose to erect a solid brick building as hereinafter mentioned in connection with their present manufacturing establishment and fit up and equip the same with fixed machinery at a total cost of not less than forty thousand dollars;

AND WHEREAS for the purpose of aiding the said company in the erection and equipment of such building and in the extension of their manufacturing establishment the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough have agreed, subject to this By-law receiving the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, to advance and loan to the said company the sum of thirty thousand dollars, upon the terms and subject to the conditions hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS it will be necessary to borrow the said sum, and for that purpose to issue debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum of Thirty thousand dollars payable as hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS there will require to be raised annually by special rate for paying the said debt and interest the sum of Two thousand and one Hundred and Ten dollars and eighty-four cents; AND WHEREAS the amount of the said rateable property of the Municipality according to the last revised Assessment Roll, is the sum of Four Million Three Hundred and Three Thousand and Three Hundred dollars;

AND WHEREAS the amount of the existing Debenture Debt of the Municipality is the sum of Two Hundred and Sixty thousand and one Hundred and sixty-one dollars and ninety-six cents and there is no part of the principal or interest thereof in arrear;

THE CORPORATION OF THE TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH

By the Council thereof therefore enacts as follows:

1. This By-law shall be imperative and shall have effect and until the same shall have received the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.

2. Subject to the provisions of the foregoing section this By-law shall take effect on the Thirty-first day of December, one Thousand Eight Hundred and Ninety-eight.

3. It shall and may be lawful for the Mayor and Town Council to borrow the sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and to issue Debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum under the Corporation Seal and signed by the Mayor and Treasurer of the said Town and countersigned by the Secretary of the Commission of the said Peterborough Town Council, such Debentures to be payable in Twenty years from the date of the issue of such Debentures and to bear interest at the rate of Three and a half per centum per annum, payable by instalments of half-yearly on the Thirtieth day of June and the Thirtieth day of December in each year and to have coupons annexed for the payment of such interest, such principal and interest to be payable at the Office of the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town in the Town of Peterborough.

4. The said Debentures shall be issued within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature.

5. The said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, realized from the sale of such Debentures shall be paid to the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, upon and only under the terms and conditions hereinafter contained.

6. The said Company shall, before becoming entitled to the said money for any part thereof, erect, furnish and equip with fixed machinery in connection with their present manufacturing establishment a solid brick building not less than one hundred feet by three hundred feet or a superficial area of not less than thirty thousand square feet, at a cost of not less than Forty thousand dollars, and shall have the same in running order in connection with their present manufacturing establishment within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature, evidence of the facts thereof to be furnished by Statutory Declaration, and shall make, execute and register in form approved by the Council a first Mortgage to the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust upon the said building and land occupied by the same and fixed machinery therein for securing payment to the said Commissioners, as Trustees for and on behalf of the said Corporation, of the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and interest thereon at three and a half per centum per annum payable half-yearly on the Thirtieth day of June and the Thirtieth day of December in each year, the said principal to be payable as follows—In twenty equal annual instalments of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-four Cents each payable on the First day of April in each year, such annual sum being equivalent to the sinking fund of said Debentures and being the sum at three and a half per cent, interest required to produce the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, the first of such instalments of principal to be payable on the First day of April, one thousand nine hundred and the first payment of interest computed from the date on which such money shall be paid to the Company, to be payable on the First interest day following such payment. Such mortgage to contain the usual statutory covenants and conditions including a provision for redemption on said buildings and fixed machinery to the amount of not less than Thirty Thousand Dollars or such less sum as may from time to time be due for principal money and interest on said mortgage payable in the event of loss to the said Commissioners to the extent of the balance unpaid on such mortgage. The amount of insurance money so paid to the Commissioners less the amount properly due on the mortgage to be repaid by the Commissioners to the said Company upon the said Company rebuilding and re-establishing their said manufacturing establishment and to remain upon the security of said mortgage as if such insurance money had not been paid to the Commissioners.

In case the said Company shall make default in payment of any instalment of principal or interest or shall cease to operate their manufacturing establishment for six months in any year (except in case of strikes of workmen or destruction of their premises by fire, flood or other cause of such period of six months shall be allowed in a cordance with the circumstances) or in case they shall remove their manufacturing establishment from the Town of Peterborough, or alter any proceedings to be taken to alter the said mortgage, then the whole of the remaining sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars over and above the instalments of principal already paid a saving interest thereon at the rate of three and a half per cent, from the date of the respective default or defaults shall be payable at once by the Company as contemplated.

The Company also to give to the said Commissioners the Government or Bond of the Company for the payment of the said principal money and interest at the said rate of three and a half per cent, and providing that the Company their successors or assigns shall not remove the whole or the substantial part of the machinery used for manufacturing from the building until the whole of the money payable by the Company shall have been fully paid and satisfied and at any time remove or alter their machinery used for manufacturing or substitute new machinery for those in use so long as the machinery is substantial sufficient for the said manufacturing as contemplated.

The words "fixed machinery" herein and in the mortgage aforesaid shall be deemed to include a travelling crane and shafting, pulleys and belting but shall not be deemed to include machines used in manufacturing which may be added or removed from time to time as the exigencies of the Company's business may require, as above provided.

7. There shall be raised annually for the payment of interest during the currency of the Debentures the sum of One Thousand and Fifty Dollars and the sum of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and eighty-four Cents for paying the debt hereby created by special rate upon all the rateable property in the Town of Peterborough liable therefor, and such annual rate shall begin from the date of the issue of the said Debentures. Provided always that the payment by the said Company of the said interest and principal in each year shall be taken in lieu of the levy of the same and it shall not be necessary to levy upon the rateable property any instalment paid by the Company.

8. The votes of the electors shall be taken on this By-law on the 18th day of October, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, commencing at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon and closing at the hour of five o'clock in the afternoon on the said day at the following places in each ward and before the following returning officers:

Ward Number One at Thomas LaPlante's shop, Rutledge street, Joseph Lumley to be Deputy-Returning Officer; Ward Number Two at the Town Council Chamber, Charles Cameron to be Deputy-Returning Officer; Ward Number Three at shop of J. & W. McMichael, Aylmer street, John Irwin to be Deputy-Returning Officer; Ward Number Four at the shop of Wm. Lee, Centre street, George W. Powell to be Deputy-Returning Officer.

9. The Nineteenth day of October at the hour of twelve o'clock noon and the office of the Town Clerk are fixed as the time when and the place where the Clerk of the Council will receive the number of votes given for and against the By-law. And the Seventeenth day of October one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight at the hour of twelve o'clock noon and the Office of the Town Clerk are hereby fixed as the time and place for the appointment of persons to attend at the various polling places and at the final summing up of the votes by the Clerk respectively on behalf of the persons interested in and promoting or opposing the passing of the By-law respectively.

NOTICE.
The foregoing is a true copy of a proposed by-law which has been taken into consideration and which will be finally passed by the Council (in event of the assent of the Electors being obtained therefor) after one month from the first publication in the Morning Times newspaper, the date of which first publication is the twenty-first day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight and at the hour, day and place therein fixed for taking the votes the polls will be held.
S. R. ARMSTRONG, Clerk.

The GRAPHOPHONE

Most fascinating invention of the age. Always ready to entertain. It requires no skill to operate. It reproduces the music of bands, orchestras, vocalists or instrumental soloists. There is nothing like it for an evening's entertainment. Other so-called talking machines reproduce only records of cut-and-dried subjects specially prepared in a laboratory, but the Graphophone has no limit to its reproduction. On the Graphophone you can really make and instantly reproduce records of the voice, or any sound. Thus it constantly awakens new interest and its charm is ever fresh. The reproductions are clear and brilliant.

Graphophones are sold for $10 and up.
Manufactured under the patronage of Bell, Western Union and Marconi. Our establishment is headquarters of the world for Talking Machines and Talking Machine Supplies. Write for catalogue.

THE WAYS OF PROVIDENCE.

While the travel along the pathway
Of this probation land
We meet with circumstances
That we fail to understand.
Some men we see fly up and
On the wings of fortune mount, While Providence keeps them Better far, forever standing
In the midst of tribulation,
On the lowest earthly landing
In a way that, think our best,
Reaches over all account.

Every day we meet with lives
Full of wickedness and might, Oppressors some poor Lazarus
At morning noon and night.
Yet he's clad in gorgeous purple
As the finest of kings,
While his ears he closes tight
To the beggar's piteous pleadings.
An keeps adding to his treasure,
So mightily an exceeding,
Till it seems as if his power
Had no end or beginning.

As if this world we're placed in
Was the final end of living,
An after death to mortals
No future state was given, We'd be right in thinking Providence
Had missed its calculations.
But when we realize that some day
There'll be a change of places
We'll keep right on going steady
In contentment's easy traces,
Feeling sure that at the end
She'll even up the scales.

SABINA WILKINS.

Miss Sabina had finished her morning duties, had dressed the butter, swept the back porch and turned the broom up in the corner, as nest housekeepers do, had gathered flowers and seed and eggs and now seated herself by the window to crochet.

But the fingers moved sluggishly. She was clean sickened out of fancy work, of nursing the sick, sitting up with other people's children, going to funerals and to church picnics—see young people in love enjoying themselves. She was tired, too, of being asked by she didn't get married. She had even literally joked to death on the subject.

But to look in the little room where Miss Sabina sat one would think she might be tolerably happy. Old Pansy purred kindly at her feet, ready to follow every step. On the mantel stood vases of gay flowers, and between them an old clock, ticking and striking the hours softly, out of respect, it may be supposed, to the sensitiveness of Miss Sabina, who faint would linger awhile longer at the rosy gate to the temple of time. On a table lay the family Bible, in which, however, was recorded one date that saddened Miss Sabina—her age. Near by hung a birdcage whose occupant, with head askew, perceived his owner's melancholy and forthwith began to sing.

Between the windows stood an old fashioned bureau, whose mirror kept Miss Sabina informed of all the changes in her face, which she prayed Father Time to touch gently, as it might yet be her fortune.

Feeling lonelier than ever before in her life, she looked about her, sat for some moments in deep meditation and then exclaimed:

"Is this all there is in the world for me?"

Here was the key to her discontent. Miss Sabina was right pretty, hadn't a sharp tongue nor a long neck, and was well off. Now, why did she have to live alone? God's original plan must certainly have included her happiness. Why not? What could Providence possibly have against her? She had never harmed anybody and never talked spitefully of men—a remarkable thing in a single woman of 40. When Miss Sabina contemplated the shrews, the redheads, the feminine scarecrows that were flourishing like green bay trees with husbands, and with children to spare, she just settled it that there was a hitch somewhere—something out of gear in the world's marriage machinery—and it never occurred to her that it is always darkest before day.

As Miss Sabina sat musing on life and its inequalities she heard the sharp whistle of a train which passed right in front of her house. Something must have happened. The whistle did not usually sound so far from the station. Looking out, Miss Sabina saw the train at a standstill, men running back on the track and passengers looking excitedly from the car windows. Seizing her sun-bonnet, she dashed down the yard to find out what had happened. Four men were approaching, bearing gently a gentleman who had been hurt. Attempting to walk from one car to another, he had made a misstep, lost his balance and fallen. The result was a badly mutilated foot. Miss Sabina's house being the nearest one in sight, he was taken to it, a surgeon summoned from town and the train moved on.

Amputation was at once pronounced necessary, and David Ware would not preach the next Sunday in the city to which he had accepted a call. He lay moaning in a cot in Miss Sabina's next little parlor. She never had anything to touch her feelings quite so much in her life as his sufferings and his big brown eyes, which she caught sight of now and then through the door. David Ware's foot was taken off, and a trained nurse employed to attend him. Miss Sabina had nothing to do in the case but to furnish fresh flowers and dainty edibles to David. She was relieved of much embarrassment when she heard that it was a minister under her roof. People wouldn't be so apt to joke about a man being in a house that never had such a thing before.

As David, in his pain, saw the little woman moving through the hall and heard her giving orders for his comfort, he thought of the cloud with silver lining about which he had so often preached. A realistic vision was passing before him. The third day that he lay in the little parlor, the nurse left him while he was sleeping and engaged Miss Sabina in conversation on the porch. It was now she learned that David was an unmarried man. After that the flowers were arranged with greater care, the chicken was broiled more delicately, and the biscuit took on a more delicate

TO A MEDICAL STUDENT AT A CLINIC.

Couldst thou, fair student, with a heart of stone,
Flay quivering flesh and amputate a bone?
With cool composure whip a cancer out,
And think no more on't than to lead a trout?
Art thou thy cultivated taste enjoyed,
And oft thy brush was genially employed,
Wouldst thou lose the crowning charm of thy young life,
Or mark unmoved its fairness all destroyed
By blood red stains of surgeon's saw and knife?
'Twere better far to be an M.D.'s wife.
Australia's daughter, with the steel blue eyes,
Revels in time from such a sacrifice!
To painting or to sculpture give thy powers,
And in æsthetic studies pass thy virgin hours.

A FAIRY STORY.

Hans lived among the mountains in Norway. One day he lay on a sunny bank watching the fleecy clouds, swift messengers of thought, as they sped across the blue ether, and he saw them take on many strange shapes. Now a monstrous troll, as the mountain giants are called in Norseland, would stand out in bold relief, and again curious beasts and birds would present themselves to his eager eye.

All at once he was adrift in folklore land, where he was to meet face to face beings of whom he had heard so much. He was bound to visit the castle of the Mountain King, the mightiest of trolls. The air was full of music, and he heard the birds singing about this king and his treasures.

Hans now heard a whizzing in the air, and there appeared before him the biggest bird he had ever seen in his life. As it plunged down beside him, it almost seemed as though a huge load of hay had been dumped on the ground.

If Hans would get on his back, the bird told him he would bear him to the Mountain King's castle, but the boy must hold fast to the feather at the nape of Bird Dan's neck lest he fall. This feather, you must know, was as big and as tall as a half grown spruce tree.

Hans did as he was bid, and away they went sailing through the air so fast that the wind whistled after them. Presently they reached some noble grainfields, and here Bird Dan paused to fill his crop. It frightened Hans to see how much he could devour. The boy himself sat down to partake of the modest lunch he carried with him, when he saw a man lying with his ear close to the ground.

"What are you doing?" asked Hans. "I am listening to the grass," was the reply. "My ears are so fine I can hear every blade as it grows. I need less sleep than a bird, and I can see a hundred miles by night as well as by day."

"You'd be a useful man to have on my journey," said Hans. "Will you go along?" "Yes, if Bird Dan will take me, and if you'll give me some of your lunch."

"My lunch isn't much, but such as it is I'll gladly share it with you," said Hans.

Bird Dan consented, and away they went with the new comrade. When next they passed, Hans saw a man walking about with his hand over his mouth.

"What is the matter with you?" cried Hans.

"I'm the man that has swallowed seven summers and 13 winters, and I keep my hand over my mouth lest they all escape at once and make utter confusion in the world."

"You'd be a useful comrade," said Hans. "Will you join my party?"

The man was willing if he might have some lunch and if Bird Dan would consent. So it was quickly arranged for him to go.

After Bird Dan had pursued his swift flight for a time with these three comrades on his back, Hans asked:

"How far shall we have to go?" "As far as the east lies from the west," was the reply.

"How long will it take us?" "As long as it takes the sun to make the same journey."

At this moment the man whose eyes and ears were so sharp cried out:

"I can see into the Mountain King's castle. There is one who has told him you are coming, Hans, and the king is ready for you."

"I think I'm afraid," said Hans. "Don't fear," said the man with the seven summers and the 13 winters. "I'll help you."

"We're most there now," said Bird Dan. Sure enough, there flickered and flamed before them a hedge of fire, and beyond it a castle glowed like the noon-day sun.

"Now," cried Bird Dan, "our good friend with the many seasons may let out a piece of a winter."

The man sent forth a chilling blast that quickly parted the flames and made Hans shiver.

"Go boldly into the castle," now said Bird Dan to Hans, "and perhaps the Mountain King will not be so dangerous as you think. His body is bigger and stronger than yours, but you have more sense than he. Keep your wits about you, and if you need help call on your ready helpers."

Hans made his way to the castle. He passed through room after room, but saw no one. At length he came to the great hall where the king sat at a table counting his money.

"Hu-to-ta!" cried the king. "How dare you enter my castle! Don't you know I could grind you to powder with one blow of my hand?"

"That I do," cried Hans in a flattering tone. "But I know you won't harm me for all that."

"And why, pray?" thundered the Mountain King. "Because I'll make myself so useful to you," said Hans.

"You need to me?" sneered the Mountain King. "Try me," cried Hans.

"Very well," said the Mountain King. "If you're man enough to sit in my smokehouse and tend to the furnace while 800 cords of wood are burned in it, I shan't harm you."

"I'll do it," said Hans. "If I may take a friend of mine along."

"Take all your friends," was the reply, given with an air of assurance.

WHAT BRIDES WEAR

The October bride is willowy and sweet. Her robe of white satin is built on princess, and encases her figure from shoulder to knee in close, faultless lines, the back fastened with a row of small round white satin buttons, which reach from the choker almost a third of the way down the skirt, says the Boston Herald. Below the lowest button, the long slender train starts with a few gathers, the hem of the bell skirt flaring just a little on the circular sides, and very long and close in front. Some beautiful applications of rare lace yellow with age, are thrown over the side of the skirt in front, and slender old bars are sown down the outside of the tight long sleeves, the broadest part of the lace at the shoulder. This has the main cut from under it, revealing the outside of the arm beneath from the shoulder to the wrist, the underpart of the main sleeve fastened with many little buttons, so tight is it, a little lapel of lace falling over the hand. The princess-front of the bodice is left untrimmed, save for the long chains of pearls, the neck and down from each side of the choker into a square opening which is filled in with a shirred piece of ivory chiffon laced with a dog collar of pearls and diamonds. About this opening there is a little old lace collar, which lies flat against the dress, pines up the choker under the dog collar and then flares stiffly up about the head in a small ruff effect above the jewels—nothing could more becomingly frame the stately little head. The veil, it accomplishes the simple effect, is a cloudy arrangement of tulle draped from a coronet of orange blossoms.

The fashionable wedding dress is quite as often combined with demure color as it is of pure white. Especially in London has this been the fashion for the last season or two, where the shimmering robes are elaborately embroidered with colored stones and crystals and crystal. Garlands of forget-me-nots in tight little bunches are worked out with turquoise and silver embroidery tinged with faint green like most delicate verdigris, thus surrounding the court train of white satin, which is draped from the shoulders and shrouded in the lace veil from the head. The train is lined with finest, whitest forget-me-not blue satin, framing the white-headed figure charmingly. Thick ivory crepe de chine lined with faintest pink satin was worn by a bride in London this summer, the whole skirt encircled in waving lines with graduated bands of white satin ribbon, a mass of white satin folded having deeply fringed long ends knotted on one side of the front. The bodice was a lattice of white satin crepe, and the sleeves and guimpes were of unfaded white d'Alemon with the throat left bare save for a dog collar of jewels, into which some most exquisite pink coral was introduced. The gown was draped from the shoulders with a court train of white satin lined with countless white chiffon and lace ruffles, that made a soft white background for the delicate tinged white robe.

The train draped from the shoulders is especially suited to the formal pageantry of the modern fashionable wedding, and it is displayed to immense advantage up the side of a church. It can be made very girlish and diaphanous of united white chiffon, ruffled all about and completely shrouding the slender train of the gown itself. The lace veil, falling from the head, partly over this transparent train adds to the effect of a cloud-like envelope.

A little tulle-train which is being designed for late October has some charming gowns. The wedding gown is to be a handsome reception affair of pale silvery gray broadcloth, the skirt fitting like a glove and laced half way down the back the lining a delicate pink silk. The skirt is bell-shaped, shorter than recent skirts and very long, almost demure. The bodice is of coral tulle covered with an exquisite embroidered navy blue chiffon, the embroidery in white in a large palmette pattern and some arabesque, the girdle shaded one of coral velvet with a rose and blue bow tie. The sleeves of gray broadcloth are laced up the forearm to match the skirt, the low square of the neck displays the tucked under-bodice of coral tulle, and still another choker of guimpes of white satin. This pink tulle veil effect is bound about the low, round neck, and down each side of the little front slashing with black velvet, a row of tiniest black buttons on one side, and of little black loops on the other, as though it might fasten over the white satin chemise. The bodice—for bonnets are smart again, even for young girls—will be of coral velvet and paste buckles, broadly bowed across the front, back of the pompadour, white ruffs.

A bride with hair of decided reddening and of the most glorious profusion and crispness, is introducing a color scheme which is the delight of an artistic eye, and is quite new. She has worn corals and carmine, browns and yellows and oranges, and sunset reds and tans, until she is longing for a change of some kind so brilliant as she has pounced upon. The result is beautiful and most unusual. Try it, all Titian-haired women, and see what a sensation you will create. A black cashmere street gown that she is having made is to be trimmed with narrow heliotrope velvet ribbon edging lapels and sleeves and surrounding the single-breasted little jacket. Her stock is to be of white satin laced in front squarely, and on her head, back of her pompadour is to be a little toque of jet sequins, with a broad, clever mass of heliotrope tulle ribbon bows across the front.

The lingerie in a certain tulle-train is of fine muslin instead of muslin, and has ribbons of narrow wash silk run through cases of pailonk, instead of through bindings, making, when drawn a dainty little puffing between the ruffles and the narrow top edging—a dainty, new idea. The casing is feather stitched on both sides in some cases, and sometimes, is placed directly at the top of the chemise, next to the skin, a running vine of embroidery sometimes covering it, but not openworked like a leading. On one chemise there were two of these casings on each side of a broad band of pale pink dimiti, which, when the pink ribbons were drawn up, gave the appearance of three puffs, the center one broad and pink, the outer narrow white ones, a narrow embroidered edge finish giving the top very daintily. Drawers and nightgowns and petticoats were all trimmed with these pink dimiti puffs to match the chemise. Another set had narrow hem-stitched bands of pale violet lawn, the stitchings openworked, and a fine line of white embroidery above it.

WHAT SHE MOST RESENTED.

She Could Readily Forgive and Forget Most Anything But This.

She swept into the office of the manager with cyclonic perturbation. Anybody could see from the haughty superiority of her manner that if she was not yet a star she fully intended to be one. In her hand was a newspaper, which she laid on the desk before the manager.

"Now, really, Miss Frostleigh," he said somewhat impatiently, "I am not responsible for what appears in the newspapers about you. I can't do anything more than say I am sorry you should have any trouble. That's all anybody does for me when I get into debt."

"Have you read that cruel article about my husband applying for a divorce?"

"Yes—that is to say, I glanced over the headlines."

"You can at least tell me where I can find the editor."

"Now, take my advice and keep away. It won't do you the least bit of good."

"But don't you think I have a right to complain?"

"Of course. It was too bad. I have no doubt it was a base calumny to say you cut his allowance down to $19 a week."

"I could have borne that," she murmured.

"And I can understand it was very annoying to have it said that you put him out of a cab one night and made him walk three miles to the depot."

"That was not the cruelest part of it, though."

"And it was naturally embarrassing to have it asserted in cold type that in a fit of jealous pique you knocked him down and then jumped on him."

"Do you think the papers in all of the cities printed that?" she inquired.

"In all probability they did. I'm sorry for the worry it must cause you."

"That wasn't all!" she exclaimed.

"I know. What you refer to is the insinuation that he is your seventh husband."

"That isn't the worst either," she said, with a heartbreaking sob. "They spelled my name wrong!"—Detroit Free Press.

WARTIME RECOLLECTIONS.

The Old Soldier Tells of His Going Away and of His Home Coming.

"My last recollection of the camp in which we were mustered in," said the old soldier, "was of my mother. We had been in camp for days, for weeks, in fact, filling up the regiment and drilling and getting equipped, and getting ready generally. Finally we were mustered in, and the next day after that we started."

"It was nightfall when we fell in for the last time in the company streets of our first camp and marched out and formed on the color line. There was a great crowd there, relatives and friends and sightseers come to see the regiment off. In front of my own company I could see my father and mother, come to see the last of their boy before he went to war. I was the apple of my mother's eye. I knew that, and I had expected to see her break down completely when the regiment marched away, but she stood as firm as a rock."

"When the regiment came home, we marched up through the same street

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

An Incident in Brazil During the Brazilian Revolution of 1894.

"The Count de Hubner tells in his 'Memoirs' a thrilling story of an adventure in the Italian city of Brescia during the days of the revolution of 1848. When the trouble began in the streets, he contrived to get into a house, taking with him two or three other persons, including the wife of a minor official who had invited the lady for a while to the count's care, but who was to have certain news of her as soon as possible."

The firing grew heavier, and the rebels soon had possession of almost every house in the street.

On the 19th of March, Count de Hubner decided that he must do something toward bettering his position in case of an assault, and he forced his only remaining servant to make a dash across the street to the palace where the Austrian general, Rask, was quartered, two blocks away and on the other side. The man was merely to let the general know that De Hubner himself was coming, and to ask that the gates be held ready for him.

"Myself, prudence and my honor had a long and heated argument," says Count de Hubner. "Finally I pulled myself together. I had to let Prince Mitternisch know about myself, to make a last report, and to keep my word to poor Mrs. M. I snatched the door, drew a long breath, and plunged down the street."

"The bullets flew all around me, spearing leaden showers from the stone pavement. As I arrived at the gates of the palace, they swung open, and in a second I was inside a bed. But only half my journey was done; I had still to go back again."

"A letter—my last report—was soon completed for Mitternisch and my message to the husband of Mrs. M. was given. I had to return."

"Again the gates were opened and I bounded forth. A veritable fusillade followed. From every window and house top came the spurts of white smoke, and I tried to dodge the bullets of cannon. In a minute I had reached my own door, and as I did so I turned to look back."

"Another man left the palace gates at full speed, but before he had half crossed the street a puff of smoke shot out of a window, and he fell flat and was knocked by lying like a log across the gutter. The fire stopped at once—what was would even an Italian do in shooting a dead man?"

"But on the second that all became quiet to my great astonishment I saw this 'dead man' rise to his legs like a cat and dash across the street into the half open door of his house."

"The sharpshooters were taken by surprise and he escaped."

The Good Old Times.

"An increase of salary" complained the pompous manager of a small omnibus company to a clerk who had just made that request. "I am afraid, sir, that you are too extravagant."

He toyed with his heavy watch chain and looked severely at the young man, who was staring at him. "It was the old phrase on each occasion, and the applicant had heard it all before. He meant to have that rise—go somewhere else."

"Excuse me, sir," he replied respectfully. "I haven't any chance to be promoted on what I earn."

"You mean," continued the pompous gentleman, "I have risen from the monkey board. How? By being careful. When I was young, I made money by saving bus fares."

"Ah, that was in the old days," said the young man, with a knowing wink. "But with the bell punches and the present system of inspection you would find you couldn't save expenses without being colored, however careful you were."

The manager nearly fainted, and the young man had to seek other employment.—Penny's Weekly.

DAY OF THE CLIPPER PAST.

In the Steamship Has Disappeared For Over From Most American Ships.

"Stunners out of fashion," said the skipper as he puffed vigorously at his old pipe, which has been around the Horn a score of many times last forty years. "They may be, but it is because of the economy has abolished them on American ships. However, an old skipper of mine who is a bit of a crank and left this the other day, still carries a topmast stunner. It may be for sentimental reasons, but a Confederal totem might play the flag under which he went to battle, but stunners are just as practical today as ever."

"Studding sail, you say? Oh, yes. Studding sail may be literally correct, but Jack says stunner. He objects to nautical principles and words with long end legs. He waxes briefly all the time—in everything perhaps except runs. The expression of language by sailors is proverbial. Stunners may be a corruption of studding sail. But studding sail itself is a corruption of studding sail or studding sail, which in my opinion was the original term. The stunner, although used only in moderate weather, was a driving sail. One Yankee skipper stunner today in the form of the immense side sail that is called the Confederal."

"It is come to fit a ship with a stunner. Their use means extra labor for the crew, or a larger crew, and their storage takes valuable cargo room. This means expense for the ship, which her earnings in the days of railroads and ocean lines do not warrant. The cargo that sailing vessels carry today do not demand quick transportation, with its high freight rates. The modern sailing ship is little better than a floating warehouse. It is not driven. Spices and cargoes are not passed as they were before the advent of the steamship. Sailing a ship to make a short passage is one of the lost arts. There is no demand for auxiliary canvas such as stunners. The Yankee clipper is out of it—done."

"A way back in the middle of the century the stars and stripes floated over ships that were really clippers below and aloft. In competition with one another and with foreign craft our clippers carried valuable cargoes—tea from China, coffee from Rio and fancy merchandise to San Francisco. The steamships do the tea and coffee carrying now. It was not in those days a go as you please run. The clippers were under orders to get there to catch the top of a market. Hours saved on their voyages long though they were, meant many dollars for all concerned. Ships were driven then with crews that fairly smothered them in fair weather and foul, and Yankee seamanship, with its characteristic judgment and nerve, was recognized and rewarded."

"But all this is merely a memory now. I am fancy the clipper of the fifteen long head, rising against the clear sky of the lower latitudes, her sails mounting above the blue horizon, tier upon tier—sky-sweepers, modorahs, cloud cleaners—a more white pyramids, an angel's foot about, as Jack says. Did they carry also girls? Ah, up to the royal yards."

IMPERIAL DISLIKE TO X RAYS

An interesting picture is drawn by Miss Emma Penber, a nurse who waited upon the ill-fated Elizabeth, Empress of Austria, during the time when the victim of the assassin's knife was recuperating at Naumburg. In a letter to the Frankfurter Finanz (Herald), she says, among other things:

To assist in making a proper diagnosis of the least trouble of the royal lady Dr. Chobot, her attending physician, made an X-ray photograph of her. When a second attempt was made to use the X-rays her Majesty said: "No, no, professor, I'll not tolerate it again."

"But, your Majesty," it is absolutely necessary." Perhaps, for you and my brother, but not for me. I will not be dissected alive. Take a photograph of one of the peasant boys about here, and send it to my brother as a picture of my heart." To me the Empress said afterward: "I do not like to be photographed. Every time I have had my photograph taken some misfortune has happened to me." Otherwise the Empress was a most obedient patient. Her nature was naturally refined. She scorned artificial means to add to her natural beauty. Her figure was delicate and her beautiful hair lay like a crown upon her head. She never wore any jewels, and the only thing of value she carried was a watch with a Greek inscription. An active correspondence was kept up between her and the Emperor during her sojourn at Naumburg.

SINCE THE TROLLEY'S CAME TO TOWN.

Ring out the loud hoananas and do the job up brown, for at last we have a trolley a-running through the town. The farmers stop their haying and wonder at the sight. For the way the cars go scooting is a revelation quite. Their clanging and their buzzing all other noises drown. For they make an awful racket a-running through the town.

The old town doesn't seem the same. It's mighty bright and gay. And every one can celebrate its resurrection day. 'Twas buried many years ago, and buried good and deep. But now it has awakened from its Rip Van Winkle sleep. And every hour of the day the cars run up and down. And every one is tickled now the trolley's come to town.

There's two new barns a-going up, excite ment everywhere. And a mild form of parents seems to permeate the air. The benefits to be derived have surely passed out. While real estate has risen to fifteen cents a foot and all the wimmin folks have bought a brand new muslin gown. For they're bound to cut a figure now the trolley's come to town. —Harvard Times.

AN EERIE EPISODE.

It was at a masquerade at Galinber H's studio in one of the old Roman palaces. There were music, the tripping sound of dancing feet, laughter and the unintelligible hum of conversation mingled in a gay medley.

Carson, an American, a new arrival in the city and a stranger to that colony of sculptors and painters, had been accidentally separated from the friend who brought him in the crowd shortly after his entrance to the ballroom.

He was wandering listlessly among the merry maskers, quite regardless of their glances and laughter at his expense. Tired at length of his aimless peregrinations, he turned aside from the glaring lights and heat to the shade and coolness of the balcony.

The wide casements at the end of the room were open and gave an unobstructed view of the kaleidoscopic scene within. A divan near the balustrade offered a place for repose, but it was not until he was seated that he was aware of the presence of a lady. She occupied the farther end of the divan and was partially concealed by the drooping tree ferns and palms with which the balcony was decorated. She moved slightly in her nest of tricolored cushions, and her fan fell with a slight clatter upon the stone floor.

Carson picked it up and gave it to her with a courteous bow. She thanked him, speaking in English, with just the slightest Italian accent.

"I fear that I am intruding, signora," he said.

"Not so. The balcony is free to all who come. There can be no intrusion." She reached up her hand as she spoke and pushed aside the feathery branches that swayed between them. Then he saw that she was young and very fair to look upon.

Her face was decidedly English. She wore an indescribable swathing garment of soft texture that was gathered up closely about her neck and fell to her feet in long, clinging folds—strongly suggestive of a Bernhardt costume. Two beautifully shaped arms were bare to the shoulder, and the small hands that lay in her lap looked as though they had been modeled in wax.

She leaned back, resting her head upon the stuccoed pillar, her fan waving languidly to and fro.

"Permit me," said the American, taking the dainty lace and ivory trifle from her hand and fanning her gently. She smiled a gracious assent, and then began talking.

It was so warm in the ballroom and she grew so tired dancing, she said. Did the gentleman dance? Perhaps he was not acquainted with many ladies—a stranger in Rome? Was he an artist or a sculptor?

"Neither, signora. I am an attaché." "From what country—England?"

"No—America." "America! Ah, that marvelous land!" She chatted on in an open, friendly manner until a bevy of tired dancers invaded their retreat. Among them was his friend Tarro.

"Great heavens, Carson! Where have you been? I have looked everywhere for you. Everybody is unmasking, and it is time for supper. No doubt you are starving. Come, I have secured a table, and you are to meet some charming women. What have you been doing here all alone? It was exceedingly stupid in me to get separated."

"I have not been alone," replied Mr. Carson. He glanced around, but the lady was gone.

"Not alone? Why, who was with you?" "The lady. Did you not see her when you came?"

"A caprice, my dear boy. I saw no lady. No, you sat there moaning, staring in a most sentimental manner at that Moorish lantern hanging over there. Come along. They are waiting for us."

They lingered long over their supper. There were merry, high pitched talking and much laughter, but Carson was not in a state of hilarity. His restless, bored glance wandered over the assembly, and once he started and turned sharply in his chair at the low voice of a woman who, with her escort, passed close beside him.

Tarro tried to rally him on his abstraction, but his brow contracted fretfully, and he nervously fingered a spray of flowers that lay by his plate. He was not sorry when the ball was over and he found himself on the pavement outside of the palace.

A cab was waiting, but without showing any desire to accompany his friend, saying he preferred to walk to his hotel. He muttered along slowly, with bowed head, churning staring at the dim shadows cast by the waning moon. As he was passing across the Piazza de Farnese he heard a low voice speaking:

"So we meet again!"

He halted. She, his new acquaintance, was beside him.

"Signora! You here at this hour and alone? Where are your friends?"

She smiled. "You will walk with me to the street below, will you not?"

"Certainly. But your friends—their carelessness is criminal."

They walked through the square and down several streets almost in silence. Presently she stopped before the entrance of a house.

"Here, signor!" she said. Almost simultaneously she swayed forward and caught his arm, at the same time uttering a smothered cry.

"You are hurt!" he exclaimed anxiously. "You have twisted your ankle on those wretched stones."

"I fear so." She pressed her hand upon her bosom and looked into his eyes with mute appeal.

"You cannot walk." He stooped and gathered her up into his arms. "I will carry you. Which floor?"

"The fourth," she replied, her face flushing as the light of the early day fell upon it.

A drowsy janitor answered his ring. He ascended the first flight of stairs without pausing, carrying her as a nurse might a child, happy at the delicious touch of her bare arms against his neck as she clasped him.

On the second flight ascent was not so easy. Her weight grew heavier, and the head that had now fallen on his shoulder pressed like a ball of iron, her arms were relaxing their clasp and lay against his neck with startling coldness. She seemed to be letting herself go, and at each step grew heavier in proportion.

He was no longer carrying a lifeless maiden, but something burdensome and horrible—something that was bearing him down and suffocating him with a sensation as though his chest was bursting.

On the third landing he felt her slipping.

"Signora," he faltered. He sought to renew his hold, but the burden, now a dead weight, slid from his arms, and she fell with a heavy thud to the floor.

"What noise is this?" called a masculine voice in Italian.

Carson began a hasty explanation to the man, whose head protruded from a partially open door.

The man came forward and bent over her.

"She does not belong here," he said. "She is a stranger. She is pale as death. Unfasten her clothing. She must have fainted. Where is the janitor? He is needed. Call him, signor, and send for a physician." His hasty hand broke the knot of ribbon that confined her bodice.

With a loud exclamation he instantly loosened his hold on her dress and started backward. The full throat and white bust were exposed. There were deep bluish purple bands around the throat and a gaping dagger wound, dark with coagulated blood, on the snowy bosom.

Their cries aroused the janitor, who hastened to call the police. Presently he returned, panting up the stairs, accompanied by an officer. Carson drew aside the curtain, and the bright light of day fell upon the body.

"Holy Virgin!" cried the policeman as he saw the dead woman.

"Can you identify her?" asked Carson.

"Yes," returned the man. "She is the woman who was found murdered on the Corso night before last. How came she here?"—M. M. Halm in Argosy.

De Lescage Station.
M. Fremont has finished the head of the enormous statue of the late Comte Ferdinand de Lescage which is to be placed at the entry of the Suez canal. The canal projector is to be represented standing, covered with an Arab burnous, and pointing toward the new waterway opened up to navigation. On one of the sides of the pedestal—which is to have a granite foundation—will be a medallion containing the portraits of the khedives who patronized the canal. —Boston Transcript.

Seating Oneself.
Next to the power of standing outside oneself and looking at me as other beings see me the most remarkable is this of (by the insight of genius and imagination) becoming you. The first makes one sometimes only too reasonable, too humble; the second warms the heart and enriches the soul, for it gives the charm of selfhood to beings not ourselves. —Jean Ingelow.

His Wife Was.
A Georgia man, who was unpopular in his community, insured his life for $2,000. He took the policy home to his wife and said:

"Maria, here's a life insurance document for $2,000."

"Thank you, dear," said his wife. "How are you feeling today?"

"Not well," he replied, "and I don't think I am long for this world, and I want to say to you that when I die it is my wish that you devote $1,000 of the money to defraying my funeral expenses."

"Mercy on me," exclaimed the wife, "why do you want such an expensive funeral?"

"I'll explain. I'm perfectly satisfied that nobody will attend my funeral, and I want to hire people to go at so much a head. I'm going out today and see what arrangements I can make for attendants on that forthcoming melancholy occasion. If they won't come gratis, why—I'll just hire 'em as give 'em an order on you for the money."

He went forth and at nightfall returned with a dejected look.

"Maria," he said, "it's no use. You can have the whole $2,000. Just go to my funeral yourself." —Atlanta Const.

FRENCH ARMY'S NEW GUN

Stories have been published in the French papers from time to time during the last five years regarding experiments with rapid-fire field guns, says the New York Herald. These experiments have now been successfully concluded, and the field artillery branch of the French army will in the near future be equipped with the gun finally decided upon.

The gun is made of nickel steel and is provided with a breech lock operated by a screw mechanism, its calibre being 75 centimetres, or a trifle less than three inches. Smokeless powder is used and the charge and projectile are combined in one, as in an ordinary infantry cartridge. These cartridges are of considerable length.

Loading: The gun is done by the cannoner on a seat at the left of the carriage, who operates the breech lock. After inserting a cartridge he closes the breech, this operation simultaneously setting the firing pin. After the shot is fired he catches up the empty shell on opening the breech.

The gun is aimed and fired by the cannoner sitting at the right of the carriage. Within a certain arc the lateral movements of the piece are made by means of a screw without disturbing the position of the carriage, while for greater changes of aim the carriage itself is moved, a lever extending from its foot being employed for this purpose.

When a shot is fired from an ordinary cannon the carriage has a tendency to run back. This is checked in the new gun by a glycerine break, and the gun is replaced in firing position by means of compressed air. Part of the recoil, however, is communicated to the carriage, and to prevent the latter from changing its position it is furnished with a spur at its foot, which is forced into the ground after the first shot or two, rendering it immovable.

Rapidity of fire is obtained by use of the metallic cartridge containing both charge and projectile, the possibility of aiming the gun while it is being loaded and its lateral mobility without disturbing the carriage. Five shots a minute are considered slow work, and as many as twenty may be fired in case of necessity. For the protection of the gunners two steel shields are provided.

Two kinds of projectiles are used—armor-piercing and shell. The former contains about 250 lead bullets and are timed to burst just before striking, scattering bullets in all directions, while the latter are charged with melinite and are used to pierce armor.

Destructive effects of the shrapnel are increased by swinging the gun through its arc on the carriage while firing, thus covering a large area. This is called "faucher le terrain," or "mowing the ground," a grimly suggestive term.

Other European countries have made experiments in this line, notably Germany, which has already equipped its field artillery with a somewhat similar weapon. During a recent trial in that country targets representing the equivalent of three-fourths of an entrenched field battery of the ordinary kind were put out of action in seven minutes at a range of 5.2 kilometres (about three and one-quarter miles).

From this it would appear that the next European war will be murderous beyond description, provided Carr's disarmament proposition is not accepted before the smouldering fire breaks into flame.

"Take Them Back At Once."

Mrs. S.—A Montreal lady, sent her young son to a store for a packet each of Diamond Dye Fast Black and Diamond Dye Fast Blue.

been used, failure and loss of goods would most likely have been the result. Diamond Dyes are always the brightest, strongest, most durable, and the cheapest.

The dealer, who had laid in a stock of dyes composed of soap grease and coloring matter—which he was anxious to sell as the profits were large—handed the young boy two packets which he brought to his mother.

Mrs. S., who had had years of experience with the ever reliable Diamond Dyes, told her son to "take them back at once," and if the dealer could not give him the Diamond Dyes, to get his money back and go elsewhere for what she wanted. The Diamond Dyes were procured, and the dyeing operation was a complete success. Had other dyes been used, failure and loss of goods would most likely have been the result. Diamond Dyes are always the brightest, strongest, most durable, and the cheapest.

WHAT BRIDES WEAR

The October bride is willowy and avelte. Her robe of white satin is built on princesses, and encases her figure from shoulder to knees in close, faultless lines, the back fastened with a row of small round white satin buttons, which reach from the choker almost a third of the way down the skirt, says the Boston Herald. Below the lowest button, the long slender train starts with a few gathers, the hem of the bell skirt flaring just a little on the circular sides, and very long and close in front. Some beautiful applications of rare lace, yellow with age, are thrown over the side of the skirt in front, and slender old bars are sewn down the outside of the tight long sleeves, the broadest part of the lace at the shoulder. This has the satin cut from under it, revealing the outside of the arm beneath from the shoulder to the wrist, the underpart of the satin sleeve fastened with many little buttons, so tight is it, a little lappet of lace falling over the hand. The princess front of the bodice is left untrimmed, save for the long chains of pearls, the neck cut down from each side of the choker into a square opening which is filled in with a shirred piece of ivory chiffon banded with a dog collar of pearls and diamonds. About this opening there is a little old lace collar, which lies flat against the dress, passes up the choker under the dog collar and then flares stiffly up about the head in a small ruff effect above the jewels—nothing could more becomingly frame the stately little head. The veil, to complete the simple effect, is a cloudy arrangement of tulle draped from a coronet of orange blossoms.

The fashionable wedding dress is quite as often combined with delicate color as it is of pure white. Especially in London has this been the fashion for the last season or two, where the smartest robes are elaborately embroidered with colored stones and crystal and crystal. Garlands of forget-me-nots in tight little bunches are worked out with turquoises and silver embroidery tinged with faint green like most delicate verdigris, this surrounding the court train of white satin, which is draped from the shoulders and shrouded in the lace veil from the head. The train is lined with faintest, whitish forget-me-not blue satin, framing the white-clad figure charmingly.

Thick ivory crepe de chine lined with faintest pink satin was worn by a bride in London this summer, the whole skirt encircled in waving lines with graduated bands of white satin ribbon, a wash of white satin fould having deeply fringed long ends knotted on one side of the front. The bodice was a lattice of white satin crepe, and the sleeves and gowns were of unlined white d'Alemon with the throat left bare save for a dog collar of jewels, into which some most exquisite pink coral was introduced. The gown was draped from the shoulders with a court train of white satin lined with countless white chiffon and lace ruffles, that made a soft white background for the delicate tinged white robe.

The train draped from the shoulders is especially suited to the formal pageantry of the modern fashionable wedding, and it is displayed to immense advantage up the side of a church. It can be made very girlish and diaphanous of united white chiffon, ruffled all about and completely shrouding the slender train of the gown itself. The lace veil falling from the head, partly over this transparent train adds to the effect of a cloud-like envelope.

A little trowsman which is being designed for late October has some charming gowns. The wedding gown is to be a handsome reception affair of palest silvery gray broadcloth, the skirt fitting like a glove and laced half way down the back the lining a delicate pink.

silk. The skirt is bell-shaped, scantier than recent skirts and very long, almost demitained. The bodice is of coral taffeta covered with an exquisite embroidered navy blue chiffon, the embroidery in white in a large palm-leaf pattern and semi-transparent, the girdle a-banded one of coral velvets with a rosette and paste buckle. The sleeves of gray broadcloth are laced up the forearm to match the skirt, the low square of the neck displays the tucked under-bodice of coral taffeta, and still another chokered guimpe of white satin. This pink taffeta vest effect is bound about the low, round neck, and down each side of a little front slashing with black velvet, a row of tiniest black buttons on one side, and of little black loops on the other, as though it might fasten over the white satin chemise. The bonnet—for bonnets are smart again, even for young girls—will be of coral velvet and paste buckles, broadly bowed across the front, back of the pompadour, white roses.

A bride with hair of decided red tinge and of the most glorious profusion and crispness, is introducing a color scheme which is the delight of an artistic eye, and is quite new. She has worn corals and cerise, browns and yellows and oranges, and russet reds and tans, until she is longing for a change of some kind so heliotrope she has pounced upon. The result is beautiful and most unusual. Try it, all Titan-haired women, and see what a sensation you will create. A black cashmere street gown that she is having made is to be trimmed with narrow heliotrope velvet ribbon edging lapels and sleeves and surrounding the single-breasted little jacket. Her stock is to be of white satin lined in front squarely, and on her head back of her pompadour is to be a little touque of jet sequins, with a broad, clever mass of heliotrope taffeta ribbon boxes across the front.

The lingerie in a certain trowsman is of fine nain-sook instead of muslin, and has ribbons of narrow wash silk run through cases of nain-sook, instead of through bindings making, which draw a dainty little puffing between the ruffles and the narrow top edging—a dainty, new idea. The casing is feather stitched on both sides in some cases, and sometimes, is placed directly at the top of the chemise, next to the skin, a running line of embroidery sometimes covering it, but not openworked like a beading. On one chemise there were two of these casings on each side of a broad band of pale pink dimité, which, when the pink ribbons were drawn up, gave the appearance of three puffings, the center one broad and pink, the outer narrow white ones, a narrow embroidered edge finishing the top very daintily. Drawers and nightgowns and petticoats were all trimmed with these pink dimité puffings, to match the chemise. Another set had narrow beaded bands of pale violet lawn, the stitings openworked, and a fine line of white embroidery above it.

A TERRIBLE NIGHT

The Chicago Times-Herald of yesterday says Miss Elizabeth Stephenson, who was recently selected by Governor Schiefel to christen the battleship Wisconsin, has had a narrow escape from death in the lava beds of Mount Vesuvius. Miss Stephenson, accompanied by her sister, Miss Harriet, Miss Charlotte Holmes of Menominee, Mich., and Mrs. Frederick C. Austin, and Miss Marion Austin of Chicago, were visiting in Naples. They started toward the volcano early in the afternoon, and en route engaged three Italians who represented themselves as official guides. The Italians proved themselves anything but guides and the party lost their way. All night they wandered, frequently having narrow escapes from a terrible death in the boiling streams of lava coming from the crater above. At daybreak they got back to the road and reached their hotel almost exhausted. All the ladies are said to have been painfully scorched and almost exhausted from inhaling sulphurous gases.

A CROUP Cure

Is what many a mother is looking for; something absolutely safe and reliable, that will disarm her terror of that dread rattling, strangled cough, so fearful to the mother, so fatal to the child. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is a croup cure that can be relied on. Thousands say so.

Mrs. W. J. Dickson ("Stanford Bleeth") writes from Truro, N. S.:

"That terror of mothers, the startling, croupy cough, never alarmed me so long as I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house."

"We have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in our family for years. Once when our boy had a severe attack of croup, we thought that he would die. But we broke up the attack by using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."

Shipment of Horses
Mr. T. Cavanagh returned from Rat Portage yesterday where he delivered a car load of fine heavy draught horses to the Rat Portage Lumber Co., who are operating in the Rainy River region. The horses were bought in this neighborhood, the weights ranging from 1500 to 1700 pounds. Mr. George Webber supplied one which weighed 1700.

People Say
—That the Times is the newest newspaper in this vicinity.
—That the square wheeled street car is a nuisance.
—That there will be considerable of a change in next year's council.
—That the Wm. Hamilton's loan by-law will receive the support of all ratepayers who desire to see our town prosper.

A Short Winter Foreboded
According to an old Maine weather prophet, next winter is to be shorter, beginning with a big snowstorm in November, from which time the snow will stay until the middle of March, leaving four months of sleighing. His reason for thinking so is that he has examined the goose bone, and found it white as the front end. Also that blacknut burrs, corn husks and mustard all tell the same story.

What's the Matter with Peterborough?
Fenelon Falls council held a special meeting on Wednesday to consider intimation to be held out to the Rat Portage Co. to leave their mill there. Mr. G. E. M. Baker, local manager here, attended the meeting by invitation. The corporate seal was affixed to a special resolution affirming the council's willingness to extend the most liberal treatment to the firm in case they decided to leave Lindsay, and Mr. Baker was instructed to forward the document to the head office at Deseronto—Lindsay Post.

A Close Call
Mr. Tom Calverly, of Reesor, had a narrow escape from serious injury at Midland Fair. He was one of the exhibitors, and attempted to drive across the track in a buggy while the speeding was in progress. A collision resulted, and the spectators for a couple of moments believed that both drivers had been killed or seriously injured. The racing horse was thrown, and Mr. Calverly's buggy was completely wrecked, but he escaped without a scratch. Mr. Levi Bowles, of Cavan, while attempting to stop some of the horses that were running received a blow in the pit of the stomach which caused him to seek a shady spot for an hour or two. Although it was a lively affair.

"So-so"
The Port Hope Athletic Association, which has been struggling along for the past few years, is now no more. A dividend is conspicuous not only by its absence, but, we understand, the shareholders had to put their hands in their pockets to clear liabilities. The large ten foot board fence that surrounded the grounds on Ward street, where the sporting fraternity of Port Hope have on many occasions been delighted to be present, has been torn down and the lumber disposed of to Mr. Thomas Long. The covered grandstand, which in its day was the boast of Port Hope, has met a like fate, and now the place is only a common pasture field. The life of the Association has certainly not been at all rosy, the support they received from the sporting element not producing adequate revenue, apparently to bear them over the flood.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

Of the Nicholls' Hospital Last Night in the Y.M.C.A. Building

The sixth annual commencement exercises in connection with the Nicholls' Hospital took place last night in the Y.M.C.A. hall. The room was comfortably crowded, which goes to show the deep interest the people of Peterboro take in this institution.

Mr. R. S. Davidson occupied the chair and on the platform besides the four graduates was a staff of the hospital. The chairman did not detain the audience with any very lengthy opening remarks and proceeded to read the following report—

REPORT OF SURGICAL CASES.

306 patients were admitted to the hospital during the year; 110 were pay patients and 196 free.

We have had under treatment 148 surgical cases and among these only five deaths two of the five being malignant tumors, and these practically past hope when admitted.

27 of the surgical cases were laparotomies and four of the deaths referred to ensued after these operations as a result of the circumstances mentioned above.

16 cases of appendicitis were treated (14 by operation) with two making good recoveries.

The remaining 15 laparotomies were of a still more serious nature and our success reflects great credit upon our surgeons and hospital.

Respectfully submitted,

M. F. BOLSTER.

Mr. Chas. J. Rogers opened the musical part of the program with a piano solo which was followed by a solo by Mr. James Dawson.

The presentation of the prize for bandaging was then made by Dr. Fife. The doctor first made a few remarks in reference to the report read by the Chairman and then proceeded to congratulate Miss Coleman upon her success. This was a grand one, the speaker pointed out, and in support of this, quoted the fact that none of the graduates were holding prominent positions in Montreal, New York, Brooklyn, Toronto and other places. The doctor then made the presentation to Miss Coleman, who very gracefully accepted it.

A recitation from Miss Alma McCallum was received with such applause that she was compelled to respond with an encore.

Miss Tina Belleghem rendered a vocal solo which was well received. The important duty of presenting the diplomas to the four graduates, Miss Coleman, Miss Brown, Miss Walton and Miss Barnett was performed by the Rev. H. Symonds.

After the solemn ceremony of giving the graduates their diplomas had been concluded, Mr. Symonds very ably laid out to them the importance of the work they had undertaken and which they had so far successfully carried out. He pointed out the close connection a religious life should have with their professional life, laid upon them the great importance of not getting careless. He wished them every success in their professional career.

The four young ladies were then presented with their diplomas.

After Mr. Chas. J. Rogers had rendered a piano solo, Dr. Fife delivered an address on the relation of the hospital to the public.

Miss Helen Coleman came forward and read the following valedictory:

Peterborough, Ont., Oct. 10th, '98.
Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:
Having been chosen for the graduating class of the Nicholls' Hospital, I feel it my duty to address you on the closing exercises of their course. We wish to say that in taking leave of this place, I may say our Alma Mater, after spending two years under tuition, we feel it not only our duty but privilege to bear testimony to the good work which we have learned to love; and it is with feelings of sorrow and yet of triumph that we find ourselves graduates of 1898; sorrow on account of leaving the associations connected with the Hospital and the severance of the intimate relationship we have had with our many friends while there, and yet, not only because we have gained the coveted certificate of graduation, but because we feel that having received a thorough professional training, we will be able to be of service to our fellow beings, by relieving the suffering, and rendering help to the afflicted, which should be the aim of every true nurse rather than the financial benefits that may result.

We feel that we can safely say that the Nicholls' Hospital, considering its capacity, affords facilities as a training school for nurses second to none in Canada, possessing as it does, a staff of Officers, who seem delighted to render every service possible to the students during their term of apprenticeship in order to perfect them in their chosen profession.

The Board of Management we think is particularly fortunate in having secured the services of their Lady Superintendent, and her Assistant. Their constant aim seems to be the welfare of the institution under their control, and their earnest efforts in assisting the members of the class in their work, and kind words of sympathy and encouragement, in times of trouble have endeared them to us, and caused many a cloud to disappear, and made for us many an oasis in the desert during our training course.

The Board of management is also fortunate in the case of their medical and surgical staff. We have no preference. They all seem to be united in a desire to forward the interests of the Hospital, and their careful attention and valuable time devoted to the many afflicted from whom nothing but gratitude and assurances not even that they can be expected cannot but be rewarded by Him who giveth every good and perfect gift.

For their zeal with the graduating class of 1898, instructing us in the different branches of their profession, graciously, and the many hours spent in lectures upon the different subjects on the course of instruction, at great loss of time and consequent financial loss, we have nothing to offer but our sincere thanks and kind regard, which will never be forgotten.

We have to thank the Board of Management for their kindness at all times in withholding nothing which was deemed necessary for the comfort of the patients, or the furthering of the interests of the students.

Our class which would have numbered five has been broken by the illness of Miss Blewitt. She worked with us for one year and during that time we learned to love and respect her. We are all very sorry she is not with us tonight.

And lastly, we must thank our fellow students for all their kindness and consideration towards us. We feel that apart from all hard work in connection with our Hospital course, we have had a great deal of pleasure too, and in going away, some of us perhaps to meet no more, let us remember that our goal is eventually the same, and that though in after life we may perhaps be separated by oceans, we all hope to reach the same harbor, which is beyond the skies.

One part me thought alike they thought.

One purpose bold where'er they fare, O, bounding breeze, O, rushing seas. At last, at last unite them there.

Messrs. Dawson and Crane gave a vocal duet which was well rendered after which the affair was brought to a close by singing the national anthem.

After the entertainment was over the graduates were the recipients of numerous congratulations by those present.

MR. ISAAC MILBURN'S SAD END.

Found Dead in a Fence Corner Out in Smith Township

Some days ago Mr. Isaac Milburn, a well-known farmer who lives on the Mud Lake Road disappeared, rather mysteriously and gravely apprehensions were entertained by the residents of the locality for his safety.

Mr. Milburn was last seen on Thursday afternoon about 5 o'clock when he left home in search of some cows. Not returning in the usual course of time his mother naturally became uneasy and when at seven o'clock he did not put in an appearance she decided that something was not right. Mrs. Milburn then notified the neighbors of the strange occurrence and a number of search parties were immediately organized. The swamps in the neighborhood were searched but without success for the missing man and the cows remained in the field in which Mr. Milburn was supposed to have gone for them, which was evidence that he had not got that far. The search was continued until Sunday when he was found from the head of Mud Lake one of the parties discovered the missing man in a fence corner dead. From appearances the predictions of the unfortunate man's friends were justified at it was quite evident that he died while in an attack of epilepsy.

The Opera Last Night
The Herald Square Opera Co. opened the three nights engagement at Bradburn's Opera House last night to a fairly large and enthusiastic audience presenting "The Mascotte," a three act comic opera by Edmond Audran. The opera is too familiar to theatre goers to need and criticism on our part. The cast is a capable one and the chorus attractive and well drilled. The costumes are the finest ever seen upon our local stage. Taken as all it is undoubtedly one of the best attractions to visit in this season and deserving of liberal patronage.

Tomorrow night Olivette is the Bill, and on Wednesday afternoon a matinee will be given with prices reduced to 15c and 25c for best seats. The Mikado will be presented both afternoon and evening. It is seldom we have an opportunity of witnessing an opera in Peterborough and at the extremely low prices of 25, 35, and 50 cents. This attraction should receive the encouragement which it so richly deserves as it may have a tendency to bring others of the same class here.

KELLY'S BAIL FORFEITED

The Fakir Failed to Put in an Appearance Yesterday Morning

If Thomas Kelly, the fakir, did some of the people at the Central Exhibition for a dollar or so, the Crown had done Mr. Kelly to the amount of $240.

It will be remembered that Kelly was on the grounds at the Central selling inducements to those who would buy. Those who bought in the early part of the afternoon got back their money and a good deal more besides. This of course induced others to buy who were unfortunately enough to not get back their money nor a present either as was supposed they would.

The same evening information was laid against Kelly on a charge of defrauding the public and he accordingly made his appearance before Magistrate Dumble on Saturday morning Oct. 1. The Crown was not prepared to go on with the case and asked an adjournment until the following Wednesday when they could have their witnesses there. Kelly, through his solicitor, Mr. O'Connell, then asked that the case be adjourned until Monday as he had some important engagements to fill. This was granted and the defendant released on $240 bail, which he himself put up.

Yesterday morning when the case was called, Kelly was not present, but Mr. O'Connell who appeared in his behalf asked for a further adjournment of ten days or so and in support of this read a letter from Kelly who is now in Toronto, stating that he had some engagements to fulfill and that his witnesses could not get down on Monday either.

Crown Attorney Wood objected on the grounds that the Crown had witnesses from the township of Hope, Hamilton, Monaghan, Burleigh, and from as far east as Havelock. Mr. Dumble did not think that Kelly should not detain to the point as to when his case should be tried and in view of the distance the Crown witnesses had come, he would have to declare the bail forfeited unless Mr. O'Connell would undertake to pay the witnesses' expenses back again. This Kelly's counsel refused to do and the magistrate declared the money forfeited.

A MARVEL
An old adventurer there was
Who lived up in a tower
Named Ptolemy Caperious Flammarion McDewer.
He said: "I am prophetic
With estimates correct,
And when the skies I contemplate
I know what to expect.
When dawn's light clouds obscure my sight,
I think perhaps 'twill rain,
And when the stars are shining bright
I know 'tis clear again."
And then abstractedly he scanned
The heavens hour by hour,

THAT SEDAN CHAIR.

"I repeat it," said Jacques d'Ebligne, with an emphasis so curious that all turned to look at him; "it gave me the fright of a lifetime."

"A sedan chair?"

"Yes. Listen, if you would know all about it." And he told us the following story:

"A love tale," said he, "of the city of Lille, of my twentieth year, and my pretty girl, a daughter, a mere child, but so pretty, so sweet, so adorably quaint, moreover, so admirably skilled in all pertaining to her father's business. Nowhere else could I buy such cake, such bun, such sugared almonds. And the stacks and stacks of rich confections that I devoured each day to prove my devotion!"

"The fire of my love—which she returned between the smiles bestowed upon her father's customers—alone saved me from gastritis by consuming the heaviness of my stomach."

"This was the state of things, when, one day, I chanced to find the pass key of 'le pere,' who spent half his time in the wine-shop across the way and the other half gossiping at his door with his equally idle neighbors."

"Determined to profit by this piece of luck, I managed to speak a word to Victoire, my little sweetheart, and to propose to her a visit to the theater that evening, if she could elude the vigilance of her mother and join me unseen. She could easily re-enter by means of the pass key."

"Victoire was charmed with my inspiration, and six hours after I had conceived the project we had carried it into execution. Although it was the middle of the winter, the night was superb, a late rising moon, and thousands of brilliant stars shinning from every quarter of the heavens. Victoire trembled like a leaf in the wind, but I was filled with such burning ardor that it mounted to my head like a drink of wine."

"We were young, you see; the theater for us was a scene of enchantment, in love with each other and more than happy. Our hearts, like the strings of some delicately tuned instrument, vibrated to the slightest touch. In fact, we forgot everything but each other and never thought of moving when at last the final curtain fell until the lamp-light appeared to turn out the lights."

"Hurrying then to the street, we found that the night had changed. The stars were gone, the moon hidden under a canopy of clouds, a cold, penetrating rain beginning to fall and all the sedan chairs gone with the stars."

"No, I was wrong; one was left standing by the roadside a little way below us. At sight of it a fatal idea popped into my brain. It was not yet very late, and I had still so many beautiful things to say to Victoire. Why not get into that chair, a refuge from the chilly rain, and talk everything all over again?"

"The clock at the corner was just striking 12 as we slipped into our movable couch, neither cramped, to be sure, but both of us were cold and this, in drawing close and snug like birds in a nest, we awaited the passing of the shower—cheerfully awaited it, too—when all at once something very strange occurred."

"The door of the house near which the chair was standing opened suddenly, as if hung on velvet, and two men looked out, evidently desiring neither to be seen nor heard."

"Amused of solitude and a clear count, they descended to the street, bearing in their arms a heavy burden. Just at that instant the moon slid from under the clouds, and we distinctly saw that this burden was a human being wrapped in a long cloak closely muffled about the face and shoulders."

"This was startling enough, but fancy our horror when the bearers of this strange load moved straight to the chair where we crouched in terror, and one of them already had his hand on the door when Victoire uttered a stifled shriek, answered by a frightful oath, and quick as a flash the men were gone as they had come, and the door reopened as softly as it had opened."

"The whole thing had passed so quickly that we might have believed it some fearful vision, only doubt was not possible—we had seen it—both of us had distinctly seen the same thing, and without a spoken syllable were filled with the same blood freezing thought—murder—a murder doubtless committed in this very house, from which the murderers were now seeking to carry away and to conceal all traces of the crime with the victim's body."

"Oh, let us go, let us go!" moaned Victoire tremblingly. "Let us go at once, Jacques. I am so frightened!"

"Go? Yes, I was willing enough, but how? For as Victoire spoke, two men emerged from the darkness around us—we could barely distinguish them, as the moon had gone behind a cloud again—caught up the chair and were bearing away into the dismal night."

"This was a predicament. We were stopped. What must we do? Cry out, and make a dreadful scandal? Betray Victoire, and expose myself to the risk of discovery? Never! It was not to be thought of! It was not to be thought of! It was one of those times when trust in chance was the only resource, hoping by blind confidence to precipitate her lover."

"Perhaps this was the case; perhaps, and I am inclined to think the latter, we were both so frightened that we had neither the strength nor the courage to attempt anything. Victoire had unconsciously thrown herself into my arms. Her warm breath fanned my cheek. Her little hand held fast to mine. No matter what threatened us, it was something, at least, to have gained this happiness. We would die together, her last sigh on my lips."

"For these men—we were sure of it—were accomplices of the first two, and by a previous arrangement they had been engaged for the carrying off and concealing of the dead body. Deceived by our joint weight, they believed they had it, and we, instead of the murdered victim, were hurrying away through the shadowy gloom."

"True, so we were, but where were we hurrying? Where were we heading, as the men trotted on with swift, untiring steps, at times almost a run? What were they going to do with us—their sinister burden?"

"Presently we saw that we were passing one of the city gates leading into the distant country. Again I was tempted to cry out, to call to the sentinel, but fear for Victoire deterred me, Victoire, whose mother believed her slumbering sweetly under her little white curtain."

"What should I do? What could I do? I was nearly distracted."

"By this time we were clear of the suburbs, but still swept onward. Another lightning of the sky, and I saw ahead of us a glittering sheet of water, the river Deule. I knew it well—a deep, rapid stream, the running of whose current we even now could hear."

"Undoubtedly the wretches were going to fling us into this seething vortex."

"This time I would have cried out, but Victoire, mad with fright, clung so tightly to my neck, clasping me with such force that my voice died in my throat, my eyes closed and the cry was strangled. . . ."

"How long a time elapsed I never knew. I was brought back to consciousness by the chair striking the ground. They had set it down preparatory to—yes, but where, where? Decidedly not in the river. It was a room, on the contrary, the dirty, grimy chamber of a low country wine-shop, where a crowd of rough, coarse men were drinking, swearing and rolling about a lot of boxes, barrels and packages, like merchandise."

"Mme. Jervaise, Mme. Jervaise!" they shouted in chorus, as our bearers set us down. "Have you brought us Mme. Jervaise?"

"She is here," the bearers replied.

"To work, to work, then! We have no time to lose."

"And the chair door was thrown open."

"But scarcely had they caught sight of Victoire and me, crouching half dead in the bottom of the chair, when a wild stampede took place, a helter skelter rush for the outside. The lights were extinguished, the thud of feet was heard pounding away into the night, and then a deep, bloodcurdling silence."

"We were alone in black darkness."

"Luckily I had noticed the direction of the door. To leap from the chair, seize Victoire's hand and make my way to it was the work of a second. The clouds had not deepened, the rain had ceased, and by the purest miracle we found the road back to the city. By daylight we were safe at home."

"A fortnight later perhaps an article in a morning paper gave me the key to the mystery of that hideous night in which we (Victoire and I) had been so strangely involved. The article announced the capture by the police of a band of smugglers who had installed themselves in an old, abandoned wine-shop in the outskirts of Lille—a regular magazine, as it turned out, of contraband goods, which they had smuggled in and out of the city by means of a manikin representing a sick old woman, partly paralyzed, and which, muffled in wraps and placed in a sedan chair, they carried back and forth under the very nose of the gendarmes without the slightest fear of detection."

"An invalid ordered by the doctor to take the steam baths," they told the officers of the law, "by name Mme. Jervaise."

"Mme. Jervaise!" The name told me all and explained everything that hitherto had seemed mysterious and inapplicable in our midnight adventure. Happily for us our nocturnal escapade had never been suspected, and Victoire and I escaped a summons to appear as witnesses before the court of assizes. All the same from that day to this the thought of a sedan chair gives me goose flesh down the spine."—From the French in Cincinnati Enquirer.

Compressed Flour.

The British admiralty and the war department are testing, under various climatic conditions, the new method for preserving flour. One objection to the establishment of national granaries has been the difficulty of storing grain for any length of time. The grain germinates and is ruined, and to keep large quantities in sound condition has been pronounced impracticable. Experiments are being made with a system of compression into bricks by hydraulic pressure. The trials show that the flour so treated is not affected by damp, even under unfavorable conditions, and is free from mold. The compression destroys all forms of larval life and the flour is thus rendered safe from the attacks of the insects. The saving in storage is enormous, as the cubic space occupied by 100 pounds of loose flour will hold more than 800 pounds of the compressed article.—Scientific American.

Mrs. Minnie B. Lee says: "In a Paris cafe I asked the maid whether she did not think the name on the menu, 'Grand menu de la nuit' was a little strange in a glass of cold coffee and milk."

"Yes, madame," she replied, "it occupies the mind as well as the stomach."

THIS WONDERFUL YEAR

Whoever concerns himself with history in the making takes all the world for his province, and seldom has there come a year more wonderful than this. It has seen every state in Europe, except peaceful Scandinavia and the Dutch communities, face to face with either war or internal dissension—some of them within measurable distance of both. Yet the greatest effects have not been in Europe; 1898 has seen the United States forced, not by any greed of power, but by its humanitarian ideals, to take its part in European relations. Next in importance to this accession comes a falling off; China has been thrown like a quarry to the armed States of Europe, and the face of the Far East must be strangely altered within the next few years. These two main facts—the rise in the international significance of America and the eclipse of China—have brought a host of quick-following consequences. They led directly to the ruin of Spain or it may be rather regeneration, but it is, to a salvation as a fire. They have, according to some politicians, made Russia arbiters of the world's destinies, now that she has free right to extend her dominion to the open waters of the Pacific, and enlist the insuperable yellow race. They have certainly led to the establishment of Germany as a naval power, and they cannot be separated from the bold attempt yet made to challenge England's naval supremacy—a challenge so promptly answered by Mr. Goshen's supplementary estimates. This, too, has born its fruit, for who shall say how much this naked revelation of the war which is being waged in time of peace a grand coup d'argent—by a desperate contest of expenditure—has influenced the Czar's unforeseen decision, urging disarmament upon Europe. Lastly, the events in America and the events in China, taken together, and seen in all their bearings, show themselves likely to be parents of a power the like of which has never before been known in the English-speaking races.

It is to the sake of these far-reaching movements begun in it that we would claim for 1898 so sounding a title as "the wonder-year," out in a smaller sense of the word, it has also been marvellous—the year of sensations. January opened with rumors of trouble from China, and with all the sudden joyousness aroused by Germany's loud cry upon a fragment of the prey. Within the first week of the month Russia and France were definitely allied, and Russia was known to be stirring, and a fortnight later Sir Michael Hicks-Beach intimated public opinion in this country by a discourse in which he spoke of British interests that must be defended. Early in the month Russia began the first act in the French drama which has been ever since progressing, and has not yet reached its last scene. M. Zola was prosecuted for his savage attack upon the Headquarters Staff, when he accused of conspiracy to fix a gun in an innocent man's breast. Europe listened intent for some revelation which might endanger the peace between nations, but only saw a court resolute, in defiance of common justice, to enforce the irreducible character of a single decision, and it saw the driving force in French affairs revealed when a whole party of generals trooped into court—as we know now, at the suggestion of Col. Henry—to denounce a Dreyfus, and declare that the honor of the army was bound up with the maintenance of the court-martial. Meanwhile it was known to add interest to the matter that France and England were playing a dangerous game of bluff in West Africa, yet it came with a surprise to the nation when Mr. Chamberlain announced in the House of Commons that French troops had endeavored to expel British from two stations—Wu and Borne—in our hinterland, and had ordered the Union Jack to be hoisted down. This was published in a Saturday paper, and the insult to the flag instantly roused the fighting spirit.

On the following Monday, Feb. 21, came further news that the French had crossed the Niger into the territories of Sokoto. War seemed inevitable, and even when M. Hanotaux disavowed the proceeding there was little assurance of peace. The best pacifier was the Chinese Ambassador, which diverted men's minds from the West African business. Among all those extinctions an attempt to assassinate the King of Greece, which in any other year would have filled the papers for a week, was merely a secondary item of intelligence. March was even more perturbed than February; the Times's correspondent at Peking continued to fling bombs, in the shape of telegrams announcing the designs of Russia and the defeat of British policy. Russia's demand for Port Arthur and Tientsin was published on March 12; the West African affair was no nearer settlement; America was arming fast, though the world still doubted of her willingness to abandon the old policy till the explosion which sank the Maine put an end to all hesitation. And while all other nations were preparing for a fight, this country was as usual actively engaged in war. The Sirdar's army, moving up the right bank of the Nile, was within striking distance of the derelict advanced force, and on Good Friday the battle of the Bara was fought. But the habit of success had bred a kind of indifference here to one more victory over Orientals or Africans, and this battle, though a far more serious operation than any under arms this year, except its successor at Omdurman, did not rouse half the interest set over the American war.

The rush for news in the first few days, the wild picnicking of triumphs because some tramp steamer had been ordered to leave, to show the tension of public curiosity about a modern naval war. Admiral Dewey's destruction of the Spanish fleet at Manila gratified the desire for picturesque detail, and foreshadowed the end. It was a type of the unequal contest between skill and resources against incompetence and bankruptcy. May was crowded with events. A revolution in Italy, taking the shape of bread riots at Milan, Como, and Turin, threatened to unsettle the existing order, and showed to the world one more Latin community tottering. In Austria-Hungary, Germany's and Russia's were slowly being driven from each other's throats. Spain was haunted with a fear of a Carlist rising, and the general preference shown by Europe to the Spanish side, so marked in contrast to the enthusiasm of this country, filled the air with talk of an Anglo-Saxon Alliance. Yet in the height of all this a great man died, and for a week England put aside all other thoughts to show honor to the body of Gladstone. Through June and July Spain and America held the stage, and thrilling news was now waiting. One day it was Shafter's rash advance upon Santiago, heroically carried through by his troops next was the amazing and umbelical rush of Admiral Cervera to his destruction. This had at least the effect of checking excitement, the war was evidently over; but there was a falling off in the supply of fresh surprises.

Mr. Hooley's bankruptcy opened a scandal here that should have made us a little more reticent about the soiled lines of our neighbors. Then came the horrible story of the wreck of La Bourgogne, where men heaved at drowning women. August began with more sensational telegrams from China about Russia's interference with the Niu-Chwang commission, and for the twentieth time this year Government was urged to show fight. That was busy, too, and Bremen followed Gladstone. This was after Parliament had ceased to sit; yet there was hardly time to speculate upon the blank that such a man would leave, for events crowded thicker than ever. On August 24 the least preparation of the public mind, and France was shaken by the news. The Czar issued his receipt without the On August 30 Col. Henry admitted that 200,000 papers containing a policy of domination of Dreyfus, and committed suicide. On Sept. 2 the Khalifa's power was finally crushed in the great battle at Omdurman. And in the middle of all this the Pall Mall Gazette announced with considerable detail the existence of an Anglo-German agreement. Since then have come pell-mell on one another M. Cavagnac's resignation, a fresh outbreak in Crete, the news that Fachoda is occupied by white men, and the assassination of the Emperor—an event which may involve Switzerland in considerable trouble.—London Spectator.

HOW NICKEL WAS DISCOVERED

In Canada. The Precariousness and Value of Nickel. Interesting Account.

Many of the greatest discoveries in the scientific world have been made by accident, as we know from the old and familiar stories of Wally and his two kettles and Franklin and his kite, to the more modern instances connected with the telephone and the phonograph and other electrical inventions. It was Bacon who wrote that "all the discoveries which can take rank among the noblest of their kind have been brought to light, not by small elaborations and extensions of art, but entirely by accident." The accidental findings of precious metals are no less interesting. The evidence of diamonds in South Africa, it is said, revealed quite by accident—a man discovering a strange glint and sparkle in a piece of earth. Even the half-breed who found gold on Klondike Creek, in the Yukon, in the summer of 1896, was as much surprised as delighted at the unexpected revelation of the yellow metal of which men dream and for which they strive. The first gold in California was detected while digging a raceway on a ranch.

was the finding of the rich nickel deposits in Canada in what is called the Sudbury district, two hundred miles east of Sault Ste. Marie. During the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway a deep cutting had to be made through a hill. Among the debris were pieces of rock that glinted in an unusual way in the sunlight. The workmen thought they had found pure silver; the contractors examined it and pronounced it copper. The first assay did not solve the problem. It was some months after that the existence of nickel was proven—a metal comparable in value to gold.

This was in 1892, Sir Henry Vivian, the proprietor of the great smelting works at Swansea, Wales, bought a piece of land in the neighborhood of the cutting, had shafts cut and machinery in the mine, and in course of time, "deep in the mine" dark mystery, were found great bodies of the ore. Others

WELL KNOWN VIOLINIST

Traveled Extensively Throughout the Provinces—Interesting Statements Concerning His Experience.

STELLARTON, N.S.—James R. Murray, a well known violinist of this place, who has traveled extensively throughout the Provinces, makes this statement: "I was running down in health and my weight fell off from 175 to 150 pounds. Prescriptions did me but little good. My trouble was called nervous dyspepsia. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and after taking five bottles I was greatly benefited. I feel as well now as ever in my life, and have increased in flesh so that I now weigh 177 pounds. I am well known in this part of the country, having followed my profession, that of a violin musician for the last 26 years. I gladly tell my friends what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me. Before I began taking the medicine I did not have any ambition, but now all is changed and my dyspeptic trouble perfectly cured." JAMES R. MURRAY.

followed and soon the country had a nickel boom, with prospectors and brokers many and the town of Sudbury was born. Today there are several nickel properties in this locality. The chief mine is known as the Copper Cliff, into which shafts have been sunk to a depth of nine hundred feet. This, and the Globe mine adjoining, are the chief producers of nickel and have extensive smelters and roasting beds for the extraction of the sulphur and other foreign substances in the rough ore. The work thus far done has revealed one of the few discovered storehouses of this metal, indeed much the largest, the next in extent being in New Caledonia, the French convict colony in the South Seas. The nickel mines of the United States are few and small in extent, so that the Canadian mines are recognized as one of the world's principal supplies.

What is the secular value and quality of nickel? You ask. Its chief use up to the present is as an alloy with steel, nickel giving toughness and hardness to its sterner metal. In its union with steel the two make an armor plate for war vessels that is far superior to the ordinary armor plates formerly used. The United States naval authorities were the first to test and adopt these nickel-steel armor plates, and their example was in turn followed by Germany, Russia and France, and, last of all, Great Britain has but recently come to the same conclusion after years of severe testing of the amalgamation.

Nickel has other uses as well, the same alloy with steel being the component parts of the bicycle tubing of the present day. In less degree the pure metal is utilized in the manufacture of domestic utensils and in other ways, thus contributing to both war and peace, and no doubt in years to come still other uses will be found for this rich and rare treasure of the earth.

There are different ways of entering the Sudbury mines. Some have explored by means of ladders, very long and very shaky, with both top and bottom disappearing in darkness, the light of the candle only illuminating the immediate vicinity. And then, having reached one of the main underground thoroughfares, you pick your way over the rough boulders for a distance, catching glimpses as you pass of branching arteries with little specks of light at the far ends where the miners are at work. Holding your light above the head, you will be astonished at the great walls of rock unimpregnated with the veins that tell of the nickel deposits by the silvery quality of the ore. Other mines are descended by means of sloping railways, where the effect is no less striking, as you plunge into the bowels of the earth with a roar and crush that shakes the nerves. Or you may be lowered by a series of elevators that seem to have no end, and the thought will persist in asserting itself, what would happen if it dropped? But those who visit or work in mines must leave their nerves on top, to be picked up again after you emerge from your journey through the shining streets of nickel hundreds of feet below the earth.

FRANK YEIGH

FRENCH ARMY'S NEW GUN

Stories have been published in the French papers from time to time during the last five years regarding experiments with rapid-fire field guns, says the New York Herald. These experiments have now been successfully concluded, and the field artillery branch of the French army will in the near future be equipped with the gun finally decided upon.

The gun is made of nickel steel and is provided with a breech lock operated by a screw mechanism, its calibre being 75 centimetres, or a trifle less than three inches. Smokeless powder is used and the charge and projectile are combined in one, as in an ordinary infantry cartridge. These cartridges are of considerable length.

Loading the gun is done by the caponier on a seat at the left of the carriage, who operates the breech lock. After inserting a cartridge he closes the breech, this operation simultaneously setting the firing pin. After the shot is fired he catches up the empty shell on opening the breech.

The gun is aimed and fired by the cannonner sitting at the right of the carriage. Within a certain arc the lateral movements of the piece are made by means of a screw without disturbing the position of the carriage, while for greater changes of aim the carriage itself is moved, a lever extending from its foot being employed for this purpose.

Spain Refuses

TO BE BOUND BY THE PROVISIONS OF THE PROTOCOL

The Spanish Commissioners Allege That the Document Was Signed Under So Great a Necessity that it is Not Binding

Paris, Oct. 12.—The sitting yesterday of the Joint Peace Commission of the United States and Spain were devoted, according to the Gaulois, to an examination of the solution which it is possible to give to two questions in the protocol. The Philippine question, the Gaulois adds, was discussed incidentally. The United States Commissioners seeking to impose a system of compensation for claims connected with the entire group by assuming the debt, provided, Spain guarantees the Cuban debt.

The Spaniards, it further appears, with the United States to assume the Cuban debt, and to hand over to Spain all the war material in Cuba and Porto Rico.

The discussion still according to the Gaulois was very animated. Judge Day, the president of the American commission, and Senator Montero Rios, the president of the Spanish commission, have received precise instructions from their respective Governments; the Americans consider that they cannot discuss the principles forming the base of the protocol, to which the Spaniards reply that the protocol was signed at a critical moment, and under so pressing a necessity that it cannot be considered as expressing the sovereign will of a free nation.

A PAINFUL IMPRESSION.

Madrid, Oct. 12.—The rumors which have been published here as to the attitude of the United States Peace Commissioners are described as having caused a painful impression, especially the reported decision of the American commissioners not to recognize the Cuban and Porto Rico debts.

WILL DEMAND INTERVENTION.

New York, Oct. 12.—A copyrighted despatch to the New York Journal and Advertiser from Rome says: "The Spanish Ambassador informs the New York Journal representative that Spain will demand the intervention of the great powers of the United States in the case of the annexation of the Philippines."

NO CHANGE IN THE STANDARD.

London, Oct. 12.—Lord Salisbury has written to the Parliamentary Committee of the Cardiff Corporation with reference to the proposed alterations in the Royal Standard. His Lordship points out that the proposal is a novel one and does not feel that the present moment is opportune for introducing so important an alteration into the Arms of the Royal Standard, which were established at the time of Her Majesty's coronation by Order-in-Council. He feels there would be constitutional objections both constitutional and heraldic, which would militate against Her Majesty's approval of the proposed change.

MASHUD WARHIS MAKE A RAID.

Simla, India, Oct. 12.—A small party of Mahar Waziris suddenly descended from their hills, and raided villages near Jandola. Coming across a levy post, the Waziris opened fire, and killed one of our men and wounded two others. The Waziris and the fighting brought a cavalry escort upon the scene, and the troopers were received with a volley, but without sustaining any harm. The raiders then bolted back towards their own country. They are now being hotly pursued by cavalry and infantry from Jandola.

SOLDIERS FIRED UPON EXILES.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 12.—A shocking incident in Siberian prison life is reported from the settlement of Zherdovka, in the Lena district. An officer named Posherba, in charge of an emigré-arrived gang of convicts, developed symptoms of insanity. He tortured the unfortunate prisoners and finally refused to give them their ration. A murmur of revolt arose from the wretched gang. Calling the guard out, the starving exiles, several of whom fell dead at the first discharge. Another volley was fired, and more convicts dropped. A superior officer came running up and put an end to the butchery. Posherba was immediately placed under restraint.

NEGRO TROOPS CREATE A RIOT

A Colored Cavalryman is Arrested While Making a Disturbance

Huntville, Ala., Oct. 12.—The 10th Cavalry, colored, arrived from Montauk yesterday, and had not been off the train an hour before some of its members became involved in a difficulty with the provost guard. One man was killed and five wounded, two fatally.

Soon after the men left the train one of the cavalrymen went to a house frequented by white men and attempted to clean out the place. He was arrested by a provost guard. The arrest was quickly noticed about and the negro cavalrymen attempted to rescue the prisoner. The first man who advanced toward the guard was halted, and as he turned to run was fired upon. Firing then became almost general and continued several minutes. Corporal McLaughlin, Company L, 6th Infantry, commanding the detail, was killed at the first fire. Private E. Wiles, company M, 6th Infantry, was shot in the knee, and Private Larkin, company L, 10th Cavalry, received a ball in the leg. Private James Gleason, Troop M, 10th Cavalry, was wounded here entering a very bitter feeling against the negro troops, and it is feared trouble will occur whenever the two races meet.

GIBSON HAS AN O'PONENT

DR. COUGHLIN NOMINATED BY THE CONSERVATIVES

No Opposition Was Offered in the Convention at Ottawa Yesterday—Felling Day Will Be October 17

Fergus, Oct. 11.—Conservatives and Independent election of East Wellington met to-day in the town hall for the purpose of selecting a candidate to oppose the Reform nominee, Hon. J. M. Gibson. About two hundred representative men from different parts of the riding were present, and this in spite of a steadily down pour rain, which no doubt prevented several hundred more from attending. Mr. R. E. Smith, president of the Conservative Association, presided. The meeting was opened by a reading of a letter from Mr. N. J. Spence, who, on the leading Provincial political issues, and incidentally the indiscreetly chosen course pursued by Hon. J. M. Gibson in the recent Hamilton Gas Works deal. He was followed by Dr. Coughlin, the late candidate of the Conservative party, who thanked the party for the very flattering support which they gave him in the recent Provincial general election, and in unreserved terms scored the late Patron candidate, Mr. Park, for the disgraceful conduct which he had given his former political friends. In conclusion he assured the delegates present no matter who their choice may rest upon in the coming struggle, of his hearty support and co-operation in the effort to redeem their constituency from Grit misrule.

Nominations were called for and Dr. Coughlin, of Arthur township, William T. Doherty, of Erin township, and John McLeod, of West Gairdara, were selected. Messrs. Doherty and McLeod retired and Dr. Coughlin was made the unanimous choice of the convention. Although Dr. Coughlin has for the past five or six months been suffering from a very severe attack of inflammation in the throat, he determined to characterize in his mind, and to carry on the campaign until the last vote is polled. The doctor's acceptance and remarks thereon were greeted with tremendous applause and those present pledged themselves to leave no stone unturned to secure his triumphant return.

THE EMPEROR'S PILGRIMAGE

Kaiser Wilhelm's Plans for the Holy Land With 150 Troops

Berlin, Oct. 12.—The Emperor and Empress of Germany started at nine o'clock this morning on their journey to the Holy Land. They will go direct to Constantinople and from there to Palestine. The suite of the Emperor included General Physician Leutold, Count Von Eulenburg, the grand marshal of the court, General Von Hake, the chief of his Majesty's private military cabinet, Dr. Von Lucan, the chief of his Majesty's private civil cabinet, Baron Von Buelow, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Legation Counselor Klemm and a number of other officials. The empress has with her three ladies of the court; and Count Marshall Baron Von Mirbach. The imperial party is also accompanied by eighteen eunuchs.

THE ASHCROFT TRAIL

Men and Horses Dying on the Roadside

THE MUD IS KNEE DEEP.

Giant Roots Proved Death Traps to Many Poor Beasts

Victoria, B.C., Oct. 12.—Dr. McLaren, of Highgate, Ont., who spent the best part of the summer in trying to enter the Klondike by the Ashcroft trail has returned to Victoria and confirms the startling stories already told as to the terrors of that route. Dr. McLaren, with 15 other men and three horses, left Ashcroft July 17, with strong hopes of reaching their destination, Glenora, in 30 days. Proceeding by wagon to Quesnell, everything was lovely until that point was reached, but no sooner had the settlement been left behind than bogs, quagmires, muskegs, almost impassable bridges, and every other obstruction known to the wayfarer of a "blaze" became plentiful. The horses were for days together up to their chests in mud. The riders had to sit with their legs in a horizontal position to keep them clear of the boggy consistency through which their steeds were plowing. The pack horses would halt on a swaying bridge, get a foothold in a series of bogs, turn round and disappear over the side into the ravine. The giant roots with their interlacing tentacles proved a death trap to many a poor patient equine, and powdered wood eaten by the horses for want of food would bring on sickness and death. Provisions ran low, clothing was destroyed by the tangled brush, foot covering became worse than useless against the thousand and one obstacles which the mud stumbled, and untimely death stared the party in the face.

Dr. McLaren says the trail, instead of being only 50 days, occupies at the least possible calculation a period of a party setting out with supplies sufficient for a month, will find themselves having accomplished but one-third of the distance, without food. The trail is fully 1,500 to 1,600 miles long, instead of the 500 or 600 miles claimed by the "boomers" of it. The members of the party fear that many have lost their lives in attempting to make the trip.

At a place between the two summits there is a division of the road, a trail and one fork leads out. A way up in the mountains can be seen the camp fires marking the progress of those who had been unfortunate enough to follow it. They can never find a way out. Starvation, destitute of clothing, with a chill of winter approaching, their fate, Dr. McLaren says, is sealed.

The Steamer City of Seattle, which arrived from the north this morning, had 243 passengers, a great many of whom were rushing out of Dawson to avoid the winter. A great many of them had gold, but the majority had none, being men who were inland in search of work, and finding the labor market already too crowded.

MAJOR WALSH AND MR. WHITE.

Met at Ottawa and Together They Interviewed Mr. Wilson

Ottawa, Oct. 11.—Major Walsh came into the city today from Brockville. He met Mr. P. White, who wrote a series of letters from the Yukon to Reuter's press agency, in England, criticizing the mining regulations of the Yukon. Along with Mr. White was Mr. Bolder from Dawson City, who is a mining engineer. Major Walsh accompanied them to Mr. Wilson, the Minister of the Interior, and talked with them over matters in the Yukon. Mr. White denies the report sent last, that he was going to make specific charges against the Yukon officials. He did not know, he said, of any charges to make, and he never said that he intended making any. Mr. White is on his way to England.

It was stated today that the lumbermen of the Ottawa Valley had decided to unite with the lumbermen of the Georgian Bay district, regarding the exportation of logs, and that it had been decided to insist that the Quebec concession that the manufacturing clause in the Ontario bill be removed, only on condition that the United States remove the duty on lumber.

MRS. DRIFTER'S SAY.

Mrs. Drifter grew considerably the other evening. Some of Drifter's friends had called, and the subject of his adventures in the South came up.

"Of course, it is all right," said Mrs. Drifter, "for Drifter to tell about the trials he endured when he was the editor of a paper in Texas. I never put in such a time in my life. I expected that Drifter would come home to me, but he had a hole made up in somebody's skin."

"Drifter reassured me by telling me that the crack of a pistol did not always mean that somebody had been hit. But you know what a brave man Drifter is. No, you don't, either. You say you don't know anything about the time he spent in Texas? I don't think I ever realized before just how courageous Drifter is. You know I had seen a ranch not a herd of cattle when I arrived in Texas, and I begged Drifter to take me where the real Panhandle cattle could be seen, so he took me out to the stockyards beyond Fort Worth."

"Times were very, very hard down there, and the packing house was closed, and there were no signs of life at the stockyards. We walked around and around the huge inclosure, and I tried to imagine what it must be like when the herds of Texas steers came in from the Panhandle. We had gone quite a distance from the high board fence, and were admiring the scenery, when some cows came straggling along. We stood watching and admiring them until about 50 or 75 had passed us, when all at once the horses in the corral began an immense Texas yell. His manner was dignified and majestic. He looked at us, elevated his head, snuffed, and my heart gave a jump."

"That was when Drifter and his in-born bravery came to the front. It is needless to say that I was frightened. I thought my last moment had come. The fence of the stockyard must have been 50 feet high; at least it looked so to me. Drifter afterward said that it was not more than 15, but I know that the trees around the stockyard were as tall as the fence. He grasped me by the hand and said: 'Little girl, run for the fence. I will stay here and protect you.'"

"I was brought up in the country, and I know it is foolishness to run from a wild animal, so I fairly refused. If we are going to die, we will die together, Drifter, and I, but the best thing to do is to run away from that awful bull. We backed toward the fence, and the bull paced toward us, never taking his eyes off us. Now I could hear Drifter's heart beat, but I must have been anxious for me, for he is not afraid of anything."

"Get behind that tree," he said, "and his voice sounded as if it was away off somewhere, and I felt as if I were to be separated forever. Reassuringly he said: 'I will see that he does not touch you.' With that, his little hand, which was not over three inches long, and said: 'There' with as much defiance in his tone as if he had been behind a stone wall. He raised his arm and a Martini rifle. Somehow or other we got to that fence at last. It was evident that Drifter would not let me take any chance, and after she had said, 'I did, and if you ever saw two people climb a high fence in the quickest possible space of time, it was Mr. and Mrs. Drifter.'"

"We sat there on the top of the fence until dusk, and Drifter never let go of the knife. I really believe that if the bull had attacked me Drifter would have slain him with that penknife. In the evening, after I had mustered up courage enough, we made our way, keeping close by the fence, until we reached a little hotel connected with the stockyard. Drifter never said a word about the adventure, and you would not have thought he had done anything remarkable, but I know that he saved my life from the wild Texas bull."

"It took Mrs. Drifter's friends some time to rise to a proper appreciation of the courage displayed by her husband in that time of danger, and after she had fanned herself vigorously, she continued: 'You ought to get Drifter to tell you about the time he went out to the lake near Fort Worth. I was just doing for a slight bit of water. It did seem to me as if I would dry up there in Texas unless I could get within sound of the ocean's roar, so Drifter did the best he could. He took me out to a pleasure resort about five miles from the city, at a place called Arlington. The trolley cars ran there, and the company made a great fuss over the Arlington lake. I told Drifter I would be satisfied if I could spend a few hours in a sailboat out there. At any rate, I would see a body of water once again in my life.'"

"Well, we had our dinner at the hotel, and I said: 'Now, Drifter, let us get right out on that lake as quick as possible. I want to see the people in the hotel told us in what direction to walk to the lake, and we walked. We kept on walking, and not a sign of a lake was to be seen. At last we found our way back to the trolley line, and asked one of the railroad men where the Arlington lake was. 'Oh, he said, 'I guess they have not turned the water on yet. There isn't a drop of water in the lake. Sunday there was a big excursion, then you could have seen the lake full of water.'"

"Turn the water on," I exclaimed. "I thought they advertised sailboats and pond lilies and all that sort of thing?"

"So they do, indeed," said the trolley man, "but you know it's pretty dry country down here, and they can't afford to waste water. That lake unless there's a crowd." Drifter bristled up and said: 'What we want to know is where the lake is and when there is any water.'"

"The trolley man was accommodating. He walked along with us, took us up what he called a hill, and then pointed out a hole in the ground about 50 yards round, and as dry as the hotel porch. Of course, I was amused, but nevertheless disappointed.

"Never mind," said Drifter. "I will take you for a sail on the Trinity River some afternoon. They are talking now of running a line of boats up the Trinity from Galveston, and it will seem like old times to get on a real big excursion steamer."

"For the next week or two, Trinity River navigation was thoroughly advertised in the Texas papers. As near as I could make out, the principal difficulty seemed to be that they were clearing the river of snags. I read that snag boat No. 1 had accomplished wonders; that snag boat No. 2 had just left Dallas, and I fairly revelled in the anticipation of a trip on the broad bosom of the Trinity. Then the newspapers began to print columns about the 'snag' boat, and it was reported that the snag boats were tied up, owing to the

A FAIRY STORY.

Hans lived among the mountains in Norway. One day he lay on a sunny bank watching the fleecy clouds, swift messengers of thought, as they sped across the blue ether, and he saw them take on many strange shapes. Now a monstrous troll, as the mountain giants are called in Norseland, would stand out in bold relief, and again curious beasts and birds would present themselves to his eager eye.

All at once he was aloft in folklore land, where he was to meet face to face beings of whom he had heard so much. He was bound to visit the castle of the Mountain King, the mightiest of trolls. The air was full of music, and he heard the birds singing about this king and his treasures.

Hans now heard a whizzing in the air, and there appeared before him the biggest bird he had ever seen in his life. As it plunged down beside him, it almost seemed as though a huge load of hay had been dumped on the ground.

If Hans would get on his back, the bird told him he would bear him to the Mountain King's castle, but the boy must hold fast to the feather at the nape of Bird Dan's neck lest he fall. This feather, you must know, was as big and as tall as a half grown apple tree.

Hans did as he was bid, and away they went sailing through the air so fast that the wind whistled after them. Presently they reached some noble grainfields, and here Bird Dan paused to fill his crop. It frightened Hans to see how much he could devour. The boy himself sat down to partake of the modest lunch he carried with him, when he saw a man lying with his ear close to the ground.

"What are you doing?" asked Hans. "I am listening to the grass," was the reply. "My ears are so fine I can hear every blade as it grows. I need sleep than a bird, and I can see a hundred miles by night as well as by day."

"You'd be a useful man to have on my journey," said Hans. "Will you go along?"

"Yes, if Bird Dan will take me, and if you'll give me some of your lunch."

"My lunch isn't much, but such as it is I'll gladly share it with you," said Hans. Bird Dan consented, and away they went with the new comrade.

When next they paused, Hans saw a man walking about with his hand over his mouth.

"What is the matter with you?" cried Hans.

"I'm the man that has swallowed seven summers and 15 winters, and I keep my hand over my mouth lest they all escape at once and make utter confusion in the world."

"You'd be a useful comrade," said Hans. "Will you join my party?"

The man was willing if he might have some lunch and if Bird Dan would consent. So it was quickly arranged for him to go.

After Bird Dan had pursued his swift flight for a time with these three comrades on his back, Hans asked: "How far shall we have to go?"

"As far as the east lies from the west," was the reply.

"How long will it take us?"

"As long as it takes the sun to make the same journey."

At this moment the man whose eyes and ears were so sharp cried out: "I can see into the Mountain King's castle. There is one who has told him you are coming. Hans, and the king is ready for you."

"I think I'm afraid," said Hans.

"Don't fear," said the man with the seven summers and the 15 winters. "I'll help you."

"We're most there now," said Bird Dan.

Sure enough, there flickered and flamed before them a hedge of fire, and beyond it a castle glowed like the noonday sun.

"Now," cried Bird Dan, "our good friend with the many seasons may let out a piece of a winter."

The man sent forth a chilling blast that quickly parted the flames and made Hans shiver.

"Go boldly into the castle," now said Bird Dan to Hans, "and perhaps the Mountain King will not be so dangerous as you think. His body is bigger and stronger than yours, but you have more sense than he. Keep your wits about you, and if you need help call on your ready helpers."

Hans made his way to the castle. He passed through room after room, but saw no one. At length he came to the great hall where the king sat at a table counting his money.

"Hu-to-tu!" cried the king. "How dare you enter my castle? Don't you know I could grind you to powder with one blow of my hand?"

"That I do," cried Hans in a flattering tone. "But I know you won't harm me for all that."

"And why, pray?" thundered the Mountain King.

"Because I'll make myself so useful to you," said Hans.

"You needful to me?" snarled the Mountain King.

"Try me," cried Hans.

"Very well," said the Mountain King. "If you're man enough to sit in my smokehouse and tend to the furnace while 200 cords of wood are burned in it, I shan't harm you."

"I'll do it," said Hans. "If I may take a friend of mine along."

"Take all your friends," was the reply, given with an air of assurance.

WORDS ABOUT DANCING

Good People in a Measure Answerable for the Sin of Dancing

Motion is universal, and man is endowed with capacity to appreciate its beauty and rhythm. Should we doubt, then, that the pleasure of motion is part of man's nature? How strong the effect of rhythm is upon the human mind is shown in man's own creations. Notice the irresistible effect of rhythm when aided by melody and harmony in the stirring strains of a military band, or the drum corps, who fail to keep step or how thrilling to hear the steady tramp, tramp of a large body of men! That nearly every nation and tribe upon the face of the earth has its dance is further evidenced by the innate love of the human race for rhythmic motion. In our own country, notwithstanding the condemnations and exhortations of many well meaning people, repeated for years and still recurring, the dance or rhythmic motion, maintains its hold upon favor as one of the chief amusements of the young; so no doubt, it will ever do. The instinct is so fully a part of our nature that even those gray-haired ones, who so strongly condemn this motion to music, may be seen swaying to and fro in exact rhythmic accord, and with evident satisfaction, while singing one of the old-fashioned tunes, such as "The Old Maid's Lament," "The Old Maid's Lament," "The Old Maid's Lament," thus proving in their own persons the irresistible power of this benign law.

Certainly, to make pleasant motions to go of music cannot be sinful. It is said, however, that dancing leads to such things that are sinful, which is often true; but these good people are in a measure answerable for this. They have blocked up nearly every road except the one leading to vice.

Would it not be well, now, to open a few paths through this forest of sin and which would lead to virtue? It can be truthfully asserted that our young people of to-day are as virtuously and modestly inclined as those of any period; and when space is sufficient, fashions of decency in dancing are soon abandoned. Would it not, therefore, be more in accordance with wisdom for the older ones to provide those whose nature is to dance with places and opportunities for the exercise of this pleasure, amid proper circumstances, and not compel them to seek it where they are too frequently surrounded by temptations destructive alike to health and morality?

What reasonable objection would there be to every "Young Men's Christian Association" having weekly meetings for the enjoyment of this pleasure?

In our public schools a daily recreation, dancing might be given as a subject, together with the courtesies of social intercourse could be inculcated upon, making politeness and consideration of others habitual. The lessons would afford ever-recurring occasions when the pupils might be made to feel from immediate practice how necessary and useful this is, and that in thus treating others with kindness and courtesy they truly fulfill the precepts of the golden rule. Surely, the daily practice of these social virtues would produce a better result than sending the children to the street or playground for recreation, as it is called, which usually means rough and practice in rudeness, the strong abusing the weak, and all taking daily lessons in tyranny, imposition and turbulence; the outcome of which is too often lawlessness in later life. The sight of two or three hundred young children enjoying themselves, under the influence of their better feelings, could not be so heretofore than acceptable to a kind father, either on earth or in heaven.

To some persons the subject may seem too trivial to deserve serious attention; but such a view will probably in the long run give way to the growing artistic feeling of the age. Seeing that art is daily becoming more and more closely interwoven with the habits and surroundings of our existence, it seems scarcely too bold to predict that the future is not far distant when the eye shall grow musical as well as the ear, and the aesthetics of rhythmic motion shall receive some share of the cultivation now bestowed upon harmonious sound. Should this point ever be reached we may have reason to be grateful to dancing for having added one more to the number of artistic interests whereby we seek to make gracious our lives.

At the recent annual convention of the American National Association of Masters of Dancing of the United States and Canada, which was held in the city of Detroit, near Detroit, for the season were exemplified and the stamp of approval placed upon them. The association is composed of ladies and gentlemen whose ability for teaching dancing, deportment and the "grace of man" stands upon the very highest plane of fame; and therefore, whatever manner of motion they set the seal of approval upon is official in the dancing world.

The "German" (or Cotillon, as it is sometimes called) is an ever popular form of amusement in the leading social circles of the United States. That it has not obtained a very great foothold here in Canada is due in a large measure to the enormous cost that usually attends the production. Think of spending $25,000 for cotillon! Favor it! It sounds somewhat romantic but it is true.

nevertheless. The trinkets that the pretty people of New York have recently decided upon as the right sort of souvenirs of the German are not to be purchased for a song. They cost all the way from $500 to $2,500 apiece, and when it is considered that a thousand or more is necessary to go around among the guests the total figure is enormous.

As an offset to this seemingly unnecessary expense a new and inexpensive German has been devised by Robert F. Thumser of Pittsburgh, and adopted by the A.N.A., entitled "A Trip Around the World in One Night." The writer of this article took part in it, and can truthfully say that it is the most charming and enjoyable conception of the kind that it has ever fallen to his lot to participate in. It consists of the start (new acquaintances); arrival at railway station, New York; all aboard; Mardi Gras festival and a German figure in Paris; Rome, visiting the Colosseum; the game of chance, Monte Carlo; the worship of Mecca; a Persian character; a souvenir of Bombay; a stop over at Calcutta, refreshments; a Chinese court; the Garden of Eden; a visit to Rear Admiral Dewey; fun in Fuzhou; a Kiondoo wedding; digging for gold; San Francisco; across the plains; home again.

In one of the figures "confetti" are freely distributed. They are multi-colored paper discs which, thrown by ladies and gentlemen at each other in a general fashion, are supposed to represent the confetti of the game of chance. In another figure "serpentine" or rolls of various colored paper which unwind when thrown in the air, and produce very weird combinations of colors and designs, are pelleted over the heads of the dancers while in motion.

A most amusing part is where the ladies are suddenly confronted by a band of Indians in costume. War-whoops are freely indulged in; each Indian captures a "squad" and whirling her off in a captivating two-step to the music of the drum. The gold nuggets, miniature ships, far more than any other inexpensive novelties in keeping with the trip around the world in one night.

The new round dances, or more properly speaking, fancy figure dances, are "The Doves," by Prof. Landrum, of Salt Lake City; "The Landrum" (Amateur), by E. B. Gaynor, Chicago, Ill.; and "The Landrum," by Prof. John F. Davis, of Toronto. They are very pretty conceptions. The Landrum was the prime favorite with all the teachers. It is a dance facing the line of direction, side by side, the gentlemen supporting the left hand of the lady with his right—move forward by stepping to the fourth position—close to third position—again to fourth position—two measures—repeat for two measures—extend to fourth position, front—same to fourth position, back—face partner in second position—return in like manner to starting point. Take waltz position and "Side Dip Waltz," 16 measures thus, side dip and waltz alternately.

The masters were very emphatic in their denunciation of the "vaudeville" assumed by dancers in round dances, which, in plain terms, means that hugging partners in the ballroom must cease. During the present season every legitimate effort will be put forth by the masters to retain to the very essence of the art, and to cultivate the most becoming ladylike and gentlemanlike positions and attitudes in the waltz and two-step, etc.

It was decided to hold the next annual meeting at Niagara Falls next June.

JOHN F. DAVIS.

THIS WONDERFUL YEAR

Whoever concerns himself with history in the making takes all the world for his province, and seldom has there come a year more wonderful than this. It has seen every state in Europe, except peaceful Scandinavia and the communities, late to face with either war or internal dissension—some of them within measurable distances of both. Yet the greatest effects have not been in Europe, 1898 has seen the United States forced, not by any greed of power, but by its humanitarian ideals, to take its part in European relations. Next in importance to this accession comes the falling out; China has been thrown like a quarry to the armed States of Europe, and the face of the Far East must be strangely altered within the next few years. These two main facts—the rise in the international significance of America and the collapse of China—have brought a host of quick-following consequences. They led directly to the ruin of Spain and to a belated regeneration, but it is, to a salvation as by fire. They have, according to our politicians, made Russia arbitress of the world's destinies, now that she has free right to extend her dominion to the open waters of the Pacific, and enlist the innumerable yellow race. They have certainly led to the establishment of Germany as a naval power, and they cannot be separated from the boldest attempt yet made to challenge England's naval supremacy—a challenge so promptly answered by Mr. Goeben's supplementary estimates. This, too, has borne its fruit, for who shall say how much this naked revelation of the war which is being waged in time of peace a grand coup d'argent—by a degenerate content of expenditure—intended the Czar's unforeseen Reciprocity disarming upon Europe. Lastly, the events in America and the events in China, taken together and seen in all their bearings, show themselves likely to be the parents of power that may transform the world—a league of the English-speaking races.

Liver Ills

It is for the sake of these far-reaching movements begun in it that we would claim for 1898 to sound a title as "the wonderful year," but in a smaller sense of the word, it has also been marvellous—the year of sensation. January opened with rumors of trouble from China, and with all the sudden passions aroused by Germany's journey upon a fragment of the prey. Within the first week of the month Kiaochow was definitely ceded; Russia and France were known to be stirring, and a fortnight later Sir Michael Hicks-Beach informed public opinion in this country by a discourse in which he spoke of "the necessity at the cost of war."

Early in the same month began the first act in the French drama which has been ever since progressing, and has not yet reached its last scene. Mr. Zola was prosecuted for his savage attack upon the Headquarters Staff, whom he accused of conspiracy to fix guilt upon an innocent man, Dreyfus. Europe listened intent for some revelation which might endange the peace between nations, but on a court resolute, in defiance of common justice, to enforce the irrevocable character of a single decision; and it saw the driving force in French affairs revealed when a whole posse of generals trooped into court—as we know now, at the suggestion of Col. Henry—to denounce Dreyfus, and declare that the honor of the army was bound up with the maintenance of the charge. Meanwhile, it was known to add interest in the matter that France and England were playing a dangerous game of bluff in West Africa, yet it came with a surprise to the mass when Mr. Delcasse's resignation was announced in the House of Commons that French troops had endeavored to expel British from two positions—Wadai and Bahr—in our hinterland, and had ordered the Union Jack to be hauled down. This was published in a statement issued by the British government, the flag instantly roused the fighting spirit.

On the following Monday, Feb. 21, came further news that the French had crossed the Niger into the territories of Sokoto. War seemed inevitable, and even when Mr. Hanotaux disavowed the proceeding, the war was in the assurance of peace. Cure Constipation and you cure its consequences. These are some of the consequences of constipation: Bloating, loss of appetite, pimples, sour stomach, depression, coated tongue, night-mare, palpitation, cold feet, debility, diarrhoea, weakness, backache, vomiting, jaundice, piles, pallor, stitch, irritability, nervousness, headache, torpid liver, heartburn, foul breath, sleeplessness, drowsiness, hot skin, cramps, throbbing head.

Ayer's Pills

Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills are a specific for all diseases of the liver, stomach, and bowels.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. After vainly trying various remedies, I began to take Ayer's Pills. Two boxes effected a complete cure."

D. BURKE, Seco, Me.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. They began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural action."

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, OCTOBER 13, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Boarders Wanted.
Accommodation for a couple of boarders. Apply at 22 Gilmour St.

Police Court.
At the Police Court yesterday morning, John Biggs was charged with peccating his horse on Victoria Park. He was found guilty and fined $2.00.

Lumbering Operations.
The Dickson Company have three large camps in the woods and intend getting in a fourth. This means about 300 men will be employed. The mill at Lakefield and Peterborough will be employed to their fullest capacity next season.

County Maps.
There are only a few of the new maps of the County of Peterborough left, and all who require one should procure it at once. In order to clear out the balance on hand they will be sold, hand-somely mounted, for $2 each, and on paper 50 cents each. Apply at Times Bookstore, Peterborough.

A Snag.
We have just secured a very large number of stereoscopic views, which we will sell at five cents each. Our collection is the best shown anywhere. We invite intending purchasers to come early and make a selection while they can be had at such a low price. Times Bookstore, Peterborough.

Card of Thanks.
To Mr. J. E. Partridge, Supt. London Life Ins. Co., Water Street, Peterboro'. Sir—Please convey to your company my thanks for the very prompt payment of claim, caused by the death of my daughter, Ethel. She died on 5th inst., and claim was paid on the 7th. Yours truly, DANIEL HENNESSEY.

Orilla Likely the Winner.
Next Friday is set as the day on which the final lacrosse match of the intermediate series of the C.L.A. will be played. The competing clubs are Stratford and Orilla, and in case the match comes off, either Orilla or Toronto will be the battle ground. The chances are, however, that Stratford will give the game to Orilla by default. The latter team is in perfect condition. Taking this and Stratford's lack of practice during the past few weeks into consideration, it is conceded that the western players would not have a fighting show with the Orilla sluggers.

Appointments Granted.
The current issue of The Ontario Gazette contains notice of the following appointments: T. W. Chaple, R. Fortage, Judge of Rainy River District, to be Judge of Surrogate Court of the same district; C. B. Langford, M.D., of Blenheim, to be an associate Coroner for Kent County; A. M. Chisholm of Ottawa to be a Notary Public for Ontario; Charles West of Campbellford, to be Clerk of the Fifth Division Court of Northumberland and Durham; R. P. Somerville of Lucknow, to be Clerk of the Eleventh Division Court of Bruce County.

THE ANNUAL RIFLE MATCHES

The Weather Was Unfavorable but Some Good Shooting Was Done

The Peterborough Rifle Association held their annual prize meeting on Tuesday afternoon and notwithstanding the very unfavorable weather some good shooting was done. The different matches resulted as follows:

NURSERY MATCH.

Open only to residents of the county of Peterborough who are members of the Association and have never attended either Dominion or Provincial matches. The prizes were:

	200 yds.	400 yds.	Total
1-G. N. Anderson.....	30	15	45
2-R. H. Kellam.....	17	16	33
3-M. Green.....	19	13	32

BANKERS' MATCH.

Open to members of the Peterborough Rifle Association. Ranges 200 and 500 yards. Seven rounds at each range.

	200 yds.	500 yds.	Total
Capt. Milligan.....	35	32	67
T. Hodgson.....	35	33	68
J. H. Oliver.....	30	33	63
F. Bartlett.....	32	30	62
Capt. King.....	34	28	62
C. Fitzgerald.....	34	28	62
C. Curtis.....	29	31	60
C. E. Whittem.....	31	29	60
E. B. Clegg.....	32	27	59
D. Cameron.....	27	31	58
T. J. Ritchie.....	30	28	58
A. Bladen.....	25	32	57
Wm. Hilton.....	26	31	57
G. N. Anderson.....	30	27	57
J. B. Pentland.....	28	28	56
Capt. Williamson.....	33	23	56
W. Eastwood.....	27	29	56
S. English.....	29	27	56

Several of the gentlemen competing were from Lindsay and elsewhere.

COX MATCH.

Open to members of the Peterborough Rifle Association. Ranges 400 and 600 yards. Only the 400 yards contest was shot, as the targets became too wet to be handled for the 600 yards.

	400 yds.	Total
J. A. Williamson.....	34	400
Capt. King.....	34	34
J. H. Oliver.....	33	33
William Hilton.....	32	32
F. Miller.....	32	32
S. English.....	32	32
J. B. Pentland.....	32	32
D. Cameron.....	31	31
G. E. Whittem.....	31	31
Capt. Milligan.....	29	29
T. J. Ritchie.....	29	29
C. Fitzgerald.....	29	29
A. Bladen.....	28	28
G. W. Bennett.....	28	28
T. Hodgson.....	27	27
Col. Ball.....	25	25
F. Bartlett.....	25	25
C. Curtis.....	25	25

AGGREGATE MATCH.

To be awarded to the highest aggregate scores in the Bankers' and Cox matches.

	53	33	96
J. H. Oliver.....	67	29	96
Capt. King.....	62	34	96
T. Hodgson.....	67	29	96
G. E. Whittem.....	60	31	91
C. Fitzgerald.....	62	29	91
Wm. Hilton.....	57	32	89

The extra series match was not shot off on account of the rain. As regards the Bankers' cup and the Cox cup, the matches were not such as to allow these to be awarded. In the Bankers' cup contest, which must go to a resident in the county, here is a tie, which, it is expected, will have to be shot off. For the Cox cup only one range was shot and the match will have to be completed before the cup will be awarded.

APLEY NEWS ITEMS

The Annual Fall Fair was a Success in Every Way

The annual fair, which was held in Apley Oct. 7, was as usual a success. The entries of cattle were not up to former years on account of so many having been taken out by buyers. There must have been in the neighborhood of one thousand cattle sold from this district during this summer. But the display of roots, grain, apples, etc., could not be excelled in the country and was away ahead of other years, as was also the ladies' work. The collection of vegetables shown by Mr. John R. Alrie, deserves special mention both for variety and the tasteful manner in which arranged. The gate receipts were larger than usual. The weather was just right and altogether the show was a success.

The Presbyterian student, Mr. L. S. Hall, who has been with us during the summer, preached his farewell sermon last Sunday afternoon and has gone to Toronto to resume his studies at Knox College. Mr. Hall has done good work while amongst us, and before he left had set again the building of a new church in Apley, which his brother, Mr. R. F. Hall, had so strongly agitated last summer and which had almost fallen through on account of the difficulty of procuring a suitable building site. But Mr. L. S. Hall has made arrangements with parties in Peterborough for one of the finest locations in Apley, and now for the church. He will be missed by all his congregation, both here and Clydesdale. Our best wishes go with him.

Four more of our young men are leaving for Minnesota—T. F. Lean, Joseph Wilson, Bert Downing and Edward Wilson. They are jolly good fellows and will be missed by all. I think I hear someone singing "Don't you go Tommy, don't go!" Good luck to you boys, and we hope you will come back in due time.

There were quite a number of lady teachers in Apley at the fair, and several spent Saturday and Sunday visiting friends in and near Apley, and horses and buggies were in demand early Monday morning to drive them to their respective schools. We were told that one party spent an hour catching a horse to drive one home Saturday, and after getting all ready a certain person came along and cooly took the said young lady away. It was rather too bad, as Saturday was a beautiful day for driving. But you can never tell where lightning is going to strike or what these ministers will do.

Jumbo's pig died to-day, whether it was the soup or a part-pickney combination killed it, we don't know.

LOCAL BREVITIES

Happenings in the Town and District During the Past Twenty-Four Hours

—Mr. J. Frost is about due.

—There is an enormous squash in the window of the "Spo. Cash" grocery. It is worth seeing.

—The Morning Times received an addition of 45 new subscribers to its list yesterday for the country.

—A few maps of the county of Peterboro are still left. Will be sold cheap. Apply at the Times Bookstore.

—Mr. Crossman, the new dry goods man is doing a rattling business. His advertisement elsewhere is worthy of perusal.

The work on the George Mathews building is being pushed forward with all possible speed and the brick work will soon be completed.

—Owing to the fact that most of the town councillors are away fishing or hunting there are no committee meetings in sight.

—Mr. Harvey Thompson, the popular proprietor of the Rockland House, Belknap, reports having a very successful season last year.

—Drunken men are not frequently seen on the streets of the town now, but one was escorted from a telegraph pole on corner of Water and George streets to the Central Park last night where he slept off his dizzy spell.

—The brickwork on the Ackerman building is now finished and the structure is assuming a rather complete appearance. The work on the inside of the building is being pushed forward with great rapidity.

—Rev. S. S. Craig, of Oakville has broken away from the Presbyterian Church and will found an independent pulpit in Toronto. He will begin on Sunday, his first sermon in the Guild Hall being "My Apology."

—The Canadian General Electric Works are taxed to their utmost to fill the orders they have ahead of them and they are running day and night to catch up. The Armature Department is particularly busy.

CADET CORPS IN SCHOOLS

Peterborough Should Make an Effort to Have One Established

On Thursday afternoon the Public School Board of Toronto took advantage of Major General Hutton's visit to that city to interview him concerning the drill corps of the various schools throughout the city.

Major Hutton promised his best assistance to Chairman Burns in his effort to advance the corps efficiency. He agreed to at once secure a number of Lee-hatfield for distribution among the senior drill corps.

It is proposed to form cadet corps in the various schools in the city and have a company or so affiliated with each of the city regiments.

What is our local school board doing in this line? Why can't Peterborough have one or more of these companies in connection with our schools. The matter ought to receive careful consideration from the members of the School Board as well as from our local military men.

By giving the boys early military training it would certainly prove of great help to the local regiment in after years.

Other towns are taking the matter in hand and Peterboro has no reason to be behind the rest.

SPORTING NOTES

What is Going on in Local and Outside Sporting Circles

RUGBY.

A telegram was received last night saying that Upper Canada College seniors would be here on Saturday to play the colts.

Upper Canada College is one of the strongest teams in the O. R. F. U. Junior series and on their last visit to Peterboro two years ago defeated the local seniors. If they play in fine form and if they play in the same dashing form they exhibited in Port Hope they will give Capt. Darling's men a great game.

The colts had a fine turn out to practice yesterday. Gray Bell will play in the half back line on Saturday and Sandy Hall will come up on the wing.

LACROSSE.

The Orillians have four excellent men available who are not being played on the present twelve, viz. Hammond, McKee, Ford and Grant.

Lionel King, of the Peterboro Lacrosse Club, is in the City. Since the close of the lacrosse season he has taken to football and is punting the pigskin from Trinity's half-back line.

Kidd's kid boots are unsurpassed. All the latest styles.

Watch this and Two Dollars A repetition of the same old story of a glitzy tattered peddler, a confident victim and finally the audacious swindle, is going the rounds. The scene of the plot was Millbrook fair, the villain was a vendor of stuff for cleaning clothes, the victim, Mr. C. A. Hagerman, who suffered to the extent of being deprived of a gold watch and a part of hero and heroine have been cut out and the villain has not yet been apprehended, leaving the curtain still unlowered. On the day of Millbrook fair the peddler was in town making sales. Prof. Williams spotted him as a sharper, and politely told him that he didn't fit there worth a cent. He crossed the road, though, and was driven to Millbrook by the Manager of the fair, Mr. Hagerman. On the latter he seemed to have worked a wondrous lure. He proposed to do some slight of hand work. Chris didn't see him stuck, but gave him $2. It is said the effect was such. The vendor required a gold watch and chain for some reason. Chris with all docility and generosity was equal to the emergency. So was the vendor. The conclusion is that the only good of legemidism given during the day is known by Mr. Hagerman, who upon once loving sight of his friend could not account for his disappearance, watch, chain, $2 and all—Guide.

RAILWAY NOTES

Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railway Paraphrase of Interest

—Considerable freight is passing through on the local lines.

—There is considerable freight passing through the local lines.

—Several car loads of hogs arrived town yesterday from the north for the Mathews Co.

—Several car loads of hogs arrived in town yesterday from the north for the Mathews Co.

—General Manager Hayes is making an inspecting tour of the Grand Trunk system.

—Over 1000 tickets were sold at the C.P.R. station yesterday morning for Norwood, it being the season for the C.P.R. freight rates.

—Under the new C.P.R. freight rates the charge for bulk wheat shipped from Port Williams to Peterborough and points west will be from 10c to 11c-12c per 100 lbs., and 13c-14c to all points east.

—A couple of car loads of granite were brought to town yesterday from the Longford mills for the Moore marble works. A quantity of cord wood is being brought to town from Central Ontario for Mr. T. Fitzgerald.

—The train dispatchers and telegraph operators in the employ of the Grand Trunk Railway will this week meet the management of the road and ask for a new agreement with the company. The men claim to have grievances, and they especially want some definite understanding in respect to the number of hours daily they must work. Also, they desire a revision of the scale of wages, and generally an agreement upon somewhat similar lines as that made by the Canadian Pacific with its men. It is understood, however, that the management of the Grand Trunk are not disposed at present to grant the requests of the men, and the negotiations are likely to be lengthy before any settlement is reached.

NO HOME RULE

The Transatlantic convention at Dublin is talking loud. It passed this resolution: "This convention denounces the project of an alliance between Great Britain and the United States as a selfish attempt on the part of England to drag the American people to its aid in its struggles with the power of Europe, among whom it now stands by reason of its bad faith absolutely isolated. Consequently, as friends of America, we, the members of this conference, hope that the republic will not allow itself to be controlled in European squabbles, from which, however, these may result, it cannot derive any corresponding advantage for American interests." As long as this animosity is openly and aggressively voiced the Pan-Americanists may be sure that the British House of Commons will not grant home rule.

ROAD DRAINAGE

The first necessity of every good road is drainage. Dirty water and watery dirt make bad going, and mud is the greatest obstacle to the travel and traffic of the farmer. Mud is a mixture of dirt and water. The dirt is always to be found in the roadway; and the water which comes in rain and snow and frost softens it; horses and wagons and narrow wheel tires knead it and mix it, and it soon gets into solid condition that a fairly loaded wagon cannot be hauled through it. We cannot prevent the coming of this water, and it only remains for us to get rid of it, which can be speedily done if we get about it in the right way. Very few people know how great an amount of water falls upon a country road, and it may surprise some of us to be told that on each mile of an ordinary country highway (three rods wide), there falls each year an average of twenty-seven thousand tons of water. Water is a heavy, limpid fluid, hard to confine and easy to let loose. It is always seeking for a chance to run down hill; always trying to find its lowest level. In the ordinary country dirt road the water seems to stick and stay; but there is no other place for it; and this is because we have never given it a fair opportunity to run out of the dirt and find its level in other places. We cannot make a hard road out of soft mud, and no amount of labor and machinery will make a good dirt road that will stay good unless some plan is adopted to get rid of the surplus water. To state it briefly, every country road should have side ditches—one on each side of the roadway, wherever possible.

Some soldiers giving information entirely different from that of the correspondents from Cuba brings the comparatively powerfulness of the pen and sword to a direct issue.

The platform of the Massachusetts Republican Party is to any extent that will support the Atlantic fishery interests of the State. This is probably the only thing that caused the United States representatives in the Quebec conference to desire an adjournment. There are many interests in the United States which may fear the work of the conference, and whose hostility the Government's party would not want to incur. Like Sir Wilfrid Laurier with the plebeian version, the commission is a book theirs a subject to hasten slowly with.

Comments upon the clash of French and British interests at Fashoda, now that the blue book despatches have been given out, forms the major part of the foreign news. A general opinion prevails that the French Ministry will withdraw Major Marchand if given time to divert popular attention to other issues. It is a clash, they say, not of opposing policies, but of commercial interests, and a permanent agreement would affect a friendly settlement if the press of the two countries would only cease to excite public opinion. The worst that can happen is the resignation of the French Ministry, and that is a small affair as things go in Paris.

KRUGER'S DILEMMA.
A dispatch from Cape Town says that Great Britain will take over the Transvaal, and that the Transvaal will take over the Orange Free State. It is also stated that the Transvaal Republic and the Orange Free State are discussing the law which limits the two states to mutual assistance in the event of an attack from the outside. The two items of information undoubtedly have a close connection with each other. They show roughly the condition of affairs in hostile camps.

The court of arbitration that has been considering the McMurdo claims award an indemnity far greater than Portugal is able to pay. These claims are based on the belief that a discovery and have been in controversy for a long time. The Swiss tribunal has been very slow in reaching its decision, but important events are now proceeding from it. It is said that the Transvaal Government awarded £100,000 to Portugal for the money with which to meet the terms of the finding. If the award had been accepted, it would, in return, have secured control of the railway, thus finding a pathway to the sea and strengthening its commercial and political advantages immensely. But the Boer republic was not permitted to help itself in this way. The Transvaal great powers, Great Britain and Germany, put in and to this condition of the little state. It is well understood that this matter is the subject of an agreement which Great Britain and Germany recently made. The hand of Cecil Rhodes is supposed to be deeply involved in it; for he is said to be a member of the syndicate which fought the McMurdo claim in court. Great Britain has spared no pains to gain control of both Delagoa Bay and the railroad from it to the Transvaal.

There is now no doubt that the Transvaal is permanently cut off from the only seaport in its immediate vicinity. It and the Orange Free State are surrounded by British influence. Hence they are consulting earnestly with each other as to their future course. It is an interesting situation and one would suppose some sympathy for the Transvaal if that little state had not shown such a bigoted spirit. As it is, one must admire the grim courage of the people, under the leadership of the stubborn Kruger. If Germany had remained at its side, its fight for freedom would have some show of success. Now it seems fated to be at the mercy of its powerful neighbor.

Graphophone with a Graphophone.
The Graphophone is to the ear what the photograph is to the eye, and more, for the graphophone catches instantly and preserves every tint and shade of sound. A most interesting use of a Graphophone is to make records of your friends' voices to be preserved for future use. You can catch the story of your jolly friend just as he told it, or the favorite song of your loved one just as she sang it, and have it reproduced perfectly at any time and as often as you please. Besides the Graphophone affords wonderful entertainment in the way of reproducing the music of bands, orchestras, or vocal or instrumental soloists. No investment will return so much pleasure as the purchase of a Graphophone. It is the perfect talking machine. BY-LAW No.

A By-law to Aid the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company Limited

Passed the 11th day of October 1898.

WHEREAS The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, purpose and intend to enlarge their manufacturing establishment in the Town of Peterborough for that purpose to erect a solid brick building as hereinafter mentioned in connection with their present manufacturing establishment and fit up and equip the same with fixed machinery at a total cost of not less than forty thousand dollars;

AND WHEREAS for the purpose of aiding the said company in the erection and equipment of such building and in the extension of their manufacturing establishment the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough have agreed, subject to this By-law receiving the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, to advance and loan to the said company the sum of thirty thousand dollars, upon the terms and subject to the conditions hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS it will be necessary to borrow the said sum, and for that purpose to issue debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum of thirty thousand dollars payable as hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS there will require to be raised annually by special rates the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred and ten dollars and eighty-four cents;

AND WHEREAS the amount of the whole rateable property of the Municipality according to the last revised Assessment Roll, as the sum of Four Million Three Hundred and Three Thousand and Three Hundred Dollars;

AND WHEREAS the amount of the existing Debenture Debt of the Municipality is the sum of Two Hundred and Sixty Thousand One Hundred and Sixty-one Dollars and Ninety-six cents and there is no part of the principal or interest thereof in arrear;

By the Council thereof therefore enacts as follows:

1. This By-law shall be operative and in force from and after the date of its passing by the Council of the Town of Peterborough, and shall remain in force until the 31st day of December in each year and until the amount of the principal and interest thereof shall have been paid in full.

2. Subject to the provisions of the foregoing section this By-law shall take effect on the 1st day of January in each year, and shall remain in force until the 31st day of December in each year.

3. It shall and may be lawful for the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough to issue Debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum under the Corporate Seal and signed by the Mayor and Treasurer of the said Town and countersigned by the Secretary of the Corporation.

4. The said Debentures shall be payable in Twenty years from the date of the issue of such Debentures and to bear interest at the rate of Three and a half per centum per annum, payable in even portions, half-yearly, on the 1st day of June and the 1st day of December in each year and to have coupons annexed for the payment of such interest, such principal and interest to be payable at the Office of the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust in the Town of Peterborough.

5. The said Debentures shall be issued within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature.

6. The said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, realized from the sale of such Debentures shall be paid to the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, and shall be used by them on the terms and conditions hereinafter contained.

7. The said Company shall, before becoming entitled to the said money by any part thereof, erect, furnish and equip with fixed machinery in connection with their present manufacturing establishment a solid brick building not less than one hundred feet by three hundred feet or a superficial area of not less than thirty thousand square feet, at a cost of not less than Forty Thousand Dollars, and have the same in connection with the said building a present manufacturing establishment within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature, evidence of the facts aforesaid to be furnished by Statutory Declaration, and shall make, execute and register in form approved by the Council a first Mortgage to the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust upon the said building and land occupied by the same and fixed machinery therein for securing payment to the said Commissioners, as Trustees for and on behalf of the said Corporation, of the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and interest thereon at three and a half per centum per annum payable half-yearly on the 1st day of June and the 1st day of December in each year, the said principal to be payable in twenty equal annual instalments of One Thousand and Sixty Dollars and Eighty-Four Cents each payable on the 1st day of April in each year, such annual sum being equivalent to the sinking fund of said Debentures and being the sum at three and a half per cent, interest required to produce the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, the first of such instalments of principal to be payable on the 1st day of April, one thousand nine hundred, the first payment of interest to be made on the 1st day of June, and the said sum shall be paid to the Company, to be payable on the 1st day of April following such payment. Such mortgage to contain the usual statutory covenants and conditions including a provision for insurance on said buildings and fixed machinery to the amount of not less than Thirty Thousand Dollars or such less sum as may from time to time be due for principal and interest on said mortgage payable in the event of loss to the said Commissioners to the extent of the balance unpaid on such mortgage. The amount of insurance money to be paid to the Commissioners shall be the amount properly due on the mortgage to be repaid by the Commissioners to the said Company upon the said Company repaying and re-establishing their said manufacturing establishment as hereinafter provided and to remain upon the security of said mortgage as if such insurance money had not been paid to be Commissioners.

In case the said Company shall make default in payment of any instalment of principal or interest or shall cease to operate their manufacturing establishment as aforesaid at any time in any year (except in case of strikes or workmen or destruction of their premises by fire, flood, or tempest, in which case a reasonable extension of such period of six months shall be allowed in accordance with the circumstances) or in case they shall remove their manufacturing establishment from the Town of Peterborough, or in case any proceedings be taken to wind up the company, then the whole of the remaining sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars over and above the instalments of principal already paid, allowing interest thereon at the rate of three and a half per cent, from the date of the respective payments compounded half yearly shall at once become due and payable.

The Company also to give to the said Commissioners the Covenant or Bond of the Company, signed and sealed by the Mayor and Council of the said Town of Peterborough, at the times and in manner aforesaid. And providing that the Company their successors or assigns shall not remove the whole or the substantial part of the machinery used for manufacturing from the building until the whole of the said money for the said Company shall have been fully paid and satisfied provided always that the Company may at any time remove or alter their machinery used for manufacturing or substitute new machinery for those in use so long as the machinery is substantially sufficient for the said manufacturing as contemplated.

The words "fixed machinery" herein and in the mortgage aforesaid shall be deemed to include a travelling crane and shafting, pulleys and belting but shall not be deemed to include machines used for manufacturing or for the alteration or removal from time to time as the exigencies of the Company's business may require, as above provided.

7. There shall be raised annually for the payment of interest during the currency of the Debentures the sum of One Thousand and Fifty Dollars and Sixty Cents, to be paid by the said Company, for paying the debt hereby created by special rate upon all the rateable property in the Town of Peterborough liable thereon, and such annual rate shall begin from the date of the issue of such Debentures, and shall be payable by the said Company, for the payment of the said Debentures of the said interest and principal in each year shall be taken in lieu of the levy of the same and it shall not be necessary to levy upon the rateable property any instalment paid by the Company.

The votes of the electors shall be taken on this By-law on the 18th day of October,

one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, commencing at the hour of nine o'clock in the forenoon and closing at the hour of five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day at the following places in each ward and before the following returning officers:

Ward Number One at Thomas L. Lundy to be Deputy-Returning Officer; Ward Number Two at the Town Council Chamber, Charles Cameron to be Deputy-Returning Officer; Ward Number Three at shop of J. & W. Methers, Aylmer Street, John Lundy to be Deputy-Returning Officer; Ward Number Four at the shop of Wm. Lee, Smith Street, George W. Powell to be Deputy-Returning Officer.

9. The Nineteenth day of October at the hour of twelve o'clock noon and the office of the Town Clerk are fixed as the time when and the place where the Clerk of the Council will sum up the number of votes given for and against the By-law. And the Seventeenth day of October one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight at the hour of twelve o'clock, noon and the office of the Town Clerk are fixed as the time and place for the appointment of persons to attend at the various polling places and at the final summing up of the votes by the Clerk respectively on behalf of the persons interested in and promoting or opposing the passing of the By-law respectively.

The foregoing is a true copy of a proposed By-law which has been taken into consideration and which will be finally passed by the Council (in event of the assent of the electors) being obtained. The By-law will be published in the first publication in the Morning Times newspaper, the date of which first publication is the twenty-first day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight and at the hour, day and place the polls will be held, taking the votes of the electors will be held.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES

SINCE THE TROLLEY'S CAME TO TOWN.

Ring out the loud huzzas and do the job up brown. For at last we have a trolley a-running through the town. The farmers stop their haying and wonder at the sight. For the way the cars go scooting is a revelation quite new. Their clanging and their buzzing all other noises drown. For they make an awful racket a-running through the town.

The old town doesn't seem the same. It's mighty bright and gay. And every one can celebrate its resurrection day.

'Twas but many years ago, and buried good and deep. But now it has awakened from its Rip Van Winkle sleep. And every hour of the day the cars run up and down.

And every one is tickled now the trolley's come to town.

There's two new larks a-going up, excitement everywhere. And a mild form of paroxysm seems to permeate the air.

The benefits to be derived have surely passed proof. While real estate has risen to fifteen cents a foot.

And all the old folks have bought a brand new trolley.

For they're bound to get a share now the trolley's come to town.

AN EERIE EPISODE.

It was at a masquerade at Galinber-ti's studio in one of the old Roman palaces. There were music, the tripping sound of dancing feet, laughter and the unintelligible hum of conversation mingled in a gay medley.

Carson, an American, a new arrival in the city and a stranger to that colony of sculptors and painters, had been accidentally separated from the friend who brought him in the crowd shortly after his entrance to the ballroom.

He was wandering listlessly among the merry maskers, quite regardless of their gibes and laughter at his expense.
 Tired at length of his aimless peregrinations, he turned aside from the glaring lights and heat to the shade and coolness of the balcony.

The wide casements at the end of the room were open and gave an unobstructed view of the kaleidoscopic scene within. A divan near the balustrade offered a place for repose, but it was not until he was seated that he was aware of the presence of a lady. She occupied the farther end of the divan and was partially concealed by the drooping tree ferns and palms with which the balcony was decorated. She moved slightly in her nest of tricolored cushions, and her fan fell with a slight clatter upon the stone floor.

Carson picked it up and gave it to her with a courteous bow. She thanked him, speaking in English, with just the slightest Italian accent.

"I fear that I am intruding, signora," he said.

"Not so. The balcony is free to all who come. There can be no intrusion."
 She reached up her hand as she spoke and pushed aside the feathery branches that swayed between them. Then he saw that she was young and very fair to look upon.

Her face was decidedly English. She wore an indescribable swathing garment of soft texture that was gathered up closely about her neck and fell to her feet in long, clinging folds—strongly suggestive of a Bernhardt costume.
 Two beautifully shaped arms were bare to the shoulder, and the small hands that lay in her lap looked as though they had been modeled in wax.

She leaned back, resting her head upon the stucco pillar, her fan waving languidly to and fro.

"Permit me," said the American, taking the dainty lace and ivory trifle from her hand and fanning her gently.
 She smiled a gracious assent, and then began talking.

It was so warm in the ballroom and one grew so tired dancing, she said.
 Did the gentleman dance? Perhaps he was not acquainted with many ladies —a stranger in Rome? Was he an artist or a sculptor?

"Neither, signora. I am an attaché."

"From what country—England?"

"No—America."

"America! Ah, that marvelous land!"

She chatted on in an open, friendly manner until a bevy of tired dancers invaded their retreat. Among them was his friend Tarro.

"Great heavens, Carson! Where have you been? I have looked everywhere for you. Everybody is unmasking, and it is time for supper. No doubt you are starving. Come, I have secured a table, and you are to meet some charming women. What have you been doing here all alone? It was exceedingly stupid in us to get separated."

"I have not been alone," replied Mr.
 Carson. He glanced around, but the lady was gone.

"Not alone? Why, who was with you?"

"The lady. Did you not see her when you came?"

"A caprice, my dear boy. I saw no lady. No, you sat there mooning, starting in a most sentimental manner at that Moorish lantern hanging over there. Come along. They are waiting for us."

They lingered long over their supper.
 There were merry, high pitched talking and much laughter, but Carson was not in a state of hilarity. His restless, bored glance wandered over the assembly, and once he started and turned sharply in his chair at the low voice of a woman who, with her escort, passed close beside him.

Tarro tried to rally him on his abstraction, but his brow contracted fret-fully, and he nervously fingered a spray of flowers that lay by his plate. He was not sorry when the ball was over and he found himself on the pavement outside of the palace.

A cab was waiting, but without knowing why he declined to accompany his friend, saying he preferred to walk to his hotel. He muttered along slowly, with bowed head, absently staring at the dim shadows cast by the waning moon. As he was passing across the Piazza de Farnese he heard a low voice speaking:

"So we meet again!"

He halted. She, his new acquaintance, was beside him.

"Signora! You here at this hour and alone? Where are your friends?"

She smiled. "You will walk with me to the street below, will you not?"

"Certainly. But your friends—their carelessness is criminal."

They walked through the square and down several streets almost in silence.
 Presently she stopped before the entrance of a house.

"Here, signor!" she said.

Almost simultaneously she swayed forward and caught his arm, at the same time uttering a smothered cry.

"You are hurt!" he exclaimed anxiously. "You have twisted your ankle on those wretched stones."

"I fear so." She pressed her hand upon her bosom and looked into his eyes with mute appeal.

"You cannot walk." He stooped and gathered her up into his arms. "I will carry you. Which floor?"

"The fourth," she replied, her face flushing at the light of the early day fell upon it.

A drowsy janitor answered his ring.
 He ascended the first flight of stairs without pausing, carrying her as a nurse might a child, happy at the delicious touch of her bare arms against his neck as she clasped him.

On the second flight ascent was not so easy. Her weight grew heavier, and the head that had now fallen on his shoulder pressed like a ball of iron, her arms were relaxing their clasp and lay against his neck with startling coldness.

She seemed to be letting herself go, and at each step grew heavier in proportion.

He was no longer carrying a lifeless maiden, but something burdensome and horrible—something that was bearing him down and suffocating him with a sensation as though his chest was bursting.

On the third landing he felt her slipping.

"Signora," he faltered.

He sought to renew his hold, but the burden, now a dead weight, slid from his arms, and she fell with a heavy thud to the floor.

"What noise is this?" called a major-domo voice in Italian.

Carson began a hasty explanation to the man, whose head protruded from a partially open door.

The man came forward and bent over her.

"She does not belong here," he said.

"She is a stranger. She is pale as death.
 Unfasten her clothing. She must have fainted. Where is the janitor? The fool! He never is here when he is needed. Call him, signor, and send for a physician." His hasty hand broke the knot of ribbon that confined her bodice.

With a wild exclamation he instantly loosened his hold on her dress and started backward. The full throat and white bust were exposed. There were deep bluish purple hands around the throat and a gaping dagger wound, dark with coagulated blood, on the snowy bosom.

Their cries aroused the janitor, who hastened to call the police. Presently he returned, panting up the stairs, accompanied by an officer. Carson drew aside the curtain, and the bright light of day fell upon the body.

"Holy Virgin!" cried the policeman
 as he saw the dead woman.

"Can you identify her?" asked Carson.

"Yes," returned the man. "She is the woman who was found murdered on the Corso night before last. How came she here?"—M. M. Halm in Argo-nast.

Seeing Ourselves.

Next to the power of standing outside oneself and looking at me as other folks see me the most remarkable is this of (by the insight of genius and imagination) becoming you. The first makes one sometimes only too reasonable, too humble; the second warms the heart and enriches the soul, for it gives the charm of selfhood to beings not ourselves.—Jean Ingelow.

His Wife Won.

A Georgia man, who was unpopular in his community, insured his life for $2,000. He took the policy home to his wife and said:

"Maria, here's a life insurance document for $3,000."

"Thank you, dear," said his wife.

"How are you feeling today?"

"Not well," he replied, "and I don't think I am long for this world, and I want to say to you that when I die it is my wish that you devote $1,000 of the money to defraying my funeral expenses."

"Mercy on me," exclaimed the wife,
 "why do you want such an expensive funeral?"

"I'll explain. I'm perfectly satisfied that nobody will attend my funeral, and I want to hire people to go to as much a head. I'm going out today and see what arrangements I can make for attendants on that forthcoming melancholy occasion. If they won't come gratis, why—I'll just hire 'em as give 'em an order on you for the money."

He went forth and at nightfall returned with a dejected look.

"Maria," he said, "it's no use. You can have the whole $2,000. Just go to my funeral yourself."—Atlanta Const.

Who wears his mother's petticoat out,
As well as many a willow sprout,
And shows and sto kings' good and stout?
That baby boy.
Who breaks and tears and pulls and hauls,
Who buries the dog, the kitten maids,

HYPNOTISM BY DOCTORS

Discussed by Dr. J. M. Smith, Physician at the Peterborough Dispensary

Should hypnotism be used by doctors in their ordinary practice? That question has just been seriously discussed by the British Medical Association at its annual congress. Without bringing any new discoveries to light, the discussion shows that, although medical men do not cling to the old prejudices against the therapeutic value of hypnotism. Some are anxiously seeking to fathom the fascinating mysteries connected with hypnotism, and to test its practical value by actual experiment. All the theories of the Nancy School, or the miraculous cures at the Salpêtrière, are not now accepted, but we have doctors who hypnotize their patients instead of drugging them. The discussion was raised on a paper by Dr. Milne Bramwell, in which he gave the results of his experience with his patients. He has many instances of cures—insomnia and depression were got rid of, suicidal tendencies removed, anaemia cured, and troubles arising chiefly from mental characteristics were treated successfully. A lady patient who suffered from neurasthenia, the leg to such an extent that every one gave up her case, was made whole and strong.

Drugs, massage, electricity, baths at Drotwisch, at Bath, were tried in succession, but she steadily grew worse. She was wheeled about in a bath chair, a helpless invalid, became emaciated, and "had lost all interest in life." She was hypnotized, "completely recovered in two days, and learned to walk." If this can be done by hypnotism, Dr. Bramwell will not lack patients. He has studied the subject carefully while practicing it, and confirms the belief, now generally accepted, that the subject under hypnotism does not lose all sense of personal identity, or all power of independent action. In every case Dr. Bramwell's patients were, of course, willing subjects. He found that a subject on his suggestion would not steal a watch because she knew it was wrong, but she would put a lump of sugar in a friend's cup if told it were arsenic. The explanation she gave for this distinction, when in hypnosis, was more subtle than one would expect. "I would not," she said, "steal a watch, even if I knew the suggestion was made as an experiment, because this would be pretending to commit a crime. I would, however, put a piece of sugar into a friend's cup if I were sure it were arsenic; because then I would not be the one who was pretending to commit a crime."

It was objected by critics that this was not a fair test of whether a person under hypnotic influence would commit crime. In the first place, a person without latent criminal instincts would not commit a crime as such, but would do so if made to believe that it was an innocent act. Such persons would sign a document, for instance, or commit an assault, if told to defend themselves. The subject cannot be deprived of all volition, and become a mere automaton, but Dr. Bramwell gave a wonderful instance of dual mental activity on the part of a subject, who wrote automatically the result of a problem suggested to him in hypnosis, while at the same time he concentrated his attention on reading aloud from a book he had not read before. Dr. Bramwell, who said he "hypnotized" the majority of his patients in his rounds, usually leaving them quietly asleep; also taught them to hypnotize themselves, and considered that the whole system was devoid of danger or unpleasant symptoms. We are not surprised that other medical men do not accept this theory. There is a danger of creating a mind craving for hypnosis, and the danger of one individual becoming, to a large extent, the passive agent of another.

Dr. Benedikt, Professor of Neurology at the University of Vienna, who has had thirty years' experience in hypnosis, considers that it "may become dangerous to the nerves, to the intellect, to the strength of will, and the character of patients." The opinion of the majority of medical men at the congress was that hypnosis was a dangerous tool for the general practitioner to use. No one now denies that good results follow the adoption of hypnosis, particularly in the case of mental diseases, or any trouble arising from depression and insomnia, but it cannot be used indiscriminately with advantage. When the doctors themselves do not get under and all the phenomena of hypnosis, it is too soon to talk of its general application.

THE BRAVE GEM. WHEELER

Was a cousin of the Late Sir John Lubbock of New Haven

At the recent patriotic demonstration at Casino, New York, given in aid of the Soldiers and Sailors' Families' Protective Association, Roosevelt Wheeler, Jack Philip and Wolford were present and were cheered tumultuously by the happy and enthusiastic assembly. Among those who had the honor of a presentation to General Wheeler at the Windsor hotel the day of the meeting was our esteemed townsmen, Hon. James M. Townsend, who had a highly enjoyable chat with this famous war general and was most pleasantly received by him, they having mutual remembrances to recall the days of old long ago. General Wheeler, it will be remembered, was a former Derby man of years ago. General Wheeler was all attention when told that Mr. Townsend was from New Haven, the general adding remarks concerning old times in this city, with which he was familiar. On learning that Mr. Townsend was an ex-captain of the New Haven grays the general remarked that he had the honor to be a cousin of one of New Haven's former mayors a two late Philip S. Galdin, who was also a former captain of the Grays. General Wheeler added that some of his pleasant remembrances of old Connecticut were his school days at the famous school in Sheshire.

The Sun gave the following concerning General Wheeler's introduction to the meeting and what he said.

"General Wheeler was introduced as president officer by Major John Byrne, president of the Association. General Wheeler made a slight speech and then presented General Wheeler who wore the uniform of a major general. The little cavalry officer of Sheshire's army must have been pleased at the reception accorded him. There was much applause for a few moments, then the entire audience arose and cheered the veteran of two wars for several minutes."

"General Wheeler's theme was woman's work and woman's sacrifice in time of war. The men of war time of war. The men who have fought the nation's battles on land and sea," said he, "have come to be spoken of as 'the men behind the guns.' It is a good thing to have men behind the guns sometimes, and in fact, we could not very well do without them. But I tell you my friends, this nation is quite as much indebted to the women of the army who are ever and always behind the men who are behind the guns. 'It is not light work or easy work or untiring work that a soldier has to do in the field, and he must be ever ready to give his life if the call comes. His life, however, is essentially a life of sacrifice, and it is not without excitement. When he marched away to the way he left you, in the night on the march, a wife or a mother or a sister or a sweetheart. When the country called, these women put the guns in the hands of their soldier boys and bravely sent them away. After the fighting was over there was nothing for these women to do but go back and wait, wait wait. The excitement of battle was not for them. It was simply a season of anxiety and heart-rending activity. Some of them, unable to stay at home, followed their dear ones to the front as nurses. They watched over us in hospital tents, they oiled our dying pillows, they caught and remembered our last words and the last messages, and when it was all over, they breathed a prayer for the graveside. Then they sent their messages and the last words home. To the women who have never paid the debt of love, and light here and now for myself and the men who served under me, I want to acknowledge the gratitude we all owe to the noble army of women who were, in the best and truest sense, the home guard."

"When General Wheeler concluded he received another ovation."

CLOVER AND TIMOTHY.

The Comparative Value of These Grasses on the Farm.

Clover and timothy are two of the most important forage crops grown on the farm, especially in this country. They form the bulk of the food fed to our animals for the production of either milk, beef or pork. It is, therefore, important to determine which of the two forage crops is most valuable for the object in view, considering at the same time which is the cheapest to produce and how each affects the fertility of the soil; for it is high time that the farmer is looking into the problem of how best to keep up the fertility of his farm without having to resort to the use of commercial fertilizers.

Of all the food elements necessary for the growth of crops and that we are fed upon to support our bodies, phosphoric acid, and potash are most important; these are therefore, the one mainly to be considered in keeping up the soil's fertility. Some plants require a more liberal supply of these elements than do others; also, some plants have better facilities than others for gathering from remote sources their necessary amount of food. The latter forage crops upon the amount and nature of their root growth. Plants, such as clover, whose roots penetrate deeply into the soil, have an evident advantage, being able to draw food from a considerable depth; while shallow-rooted plants, such as timothy, must be satisfied with what available nourishment they find near the surface.

Now, whether you are feeding plants or animals, nitrogen is the most costly food element. About four-fifths of the bulk of the atmosphere is nitrogen in the free state, but it is as useless as food for either plants or animals. Clover belongs to a family of plants (leguminosae), other examples of which are the peas, beans and vetch, that have grown on their roots and in the soil, which, by virtue of micro-organisms contained in them have the power to appropriate the free nitrogen of the air and convert it into such a form that these plants can utilize it and feed themselves. Timothy has not this power of utilizing the free nitrogen of the atmosphere, but must obtain its supply wholly from the available nitrogen compounds already in the soil.

If a crop of timothy be grown and fed on the farm, and the manure carefully saved and applied, the soil will have neither lost nor gained in nitrogen. On the other hand, if a crop of clover be grown and likewise fed on the farm, and the manure carefully saved and applied, not only the nitrogen drawn from the air will be returned, but also a large quantity which the clover drew from the air will be left to the soil in a form available for plant food. Thus, in the case of the clover, the soil will have gained enough nitrogen to enable it to produce a good crop of corn, potatoes, wheat or other grain.

Clover being a deep feeder its roots penetrate deeply into the sub-soil and draw a large amount of phosphoric acid and potash from a depth that the roots of ordinary plants never reach. Thus, the clover crop draws out all of its phosphoric acid and potash from the surface soil. In this we can see, that if fed on the farm and the manure carefully saved and applied, the soil will be enriched by the amount of phosphoric acid and potash drawn from the sub-soil, while timothy has not this advantage.

If utilized on the farm, clover is unexcelled in keeping up the fertility of the land. Owing to its large development of roots, clover brings a great deal of organic matter to the surface, and in fact, it is estimated that the total growth is left in the soil as roots and stubble; it thus has no small effect in improving the tilth of soils naturally deficient in organic matter, making soft, easy, and more porous, and more retentive. From what has been said we may draw that clover is especially valuable as a permanent pasture, and as a source of organic matter and the large amount of organic matter it brings to the soil.

When compared on an even footing as food for a cow, a pound of clover is found to contain more food value than a pound of timothy, especially when fed in these substances which make beans and peas, they are generally considered to be a strong food for a working man. By the chemist these substances are called "albuminoids," or "protein." They contain practically all of the nitrogen in the plant, and are rich in food value. The remaining organic substances of the plant (viz., those that contain no nitrogen, such as starch, sugar and fat), are called "carbohydrates," and are valuable chiefly for keeping up the heat of the animal body. But, as all plants contain an abundance of these carbohydrates, it need not be considered in determining the value of forage crops. A food is considered rich in proportion to the amount of digestible albuminoids that it contains. In other words, the greater the proportion of digestible albuminoids to digestible non-albuminoids the more valuable will be the food. Clover hay, fed alone, is a well-balanced ration for a milk cow, or a beef animal, containing about one part of digestible albuminoids to six parts of digestible non-albuminoids; in other words, it has a nutritive ratio of about 1 to 6. Timothy hay is not so rich, having a nutritive ratio of only about 1 to 9. According to these figures two pounds of clover hay are worth three pounds of timothy hay. The manure resulting from the two forage crops, if made under the same conditions, will show a similar comparative value, two tons of that from the clover hay being worth three tons of that from timothy hay.

It is a lamentable fact that so many farmers have not yet learned how to make good clover hay; and until they do they will not be able to appreciate, by experience, its real value over timothy hay. A. T. Wheeler, at the East Sloane Farmers' Institute.

Four turkeys were confined in a pen and fed on mixed, boiled potatoes and oats. Four others of the same breed were at the same time confined in an other pen and fed daily on the same article, but with an admixture of very finely pulverized charcoal mixed with their feed—mixed meal and boiled potatoes. They had also a plentiful supply of broken charcoal in their pen. The eight were killed the same day, and there was a difference of one and a half pounds each, in favor of the turkeys which had been supplied with charcoal, they being much the fattest, and the meat being superior in point of tenderness and flavor.—Poultry Churn.

A Croup Cure

Is what many a mother is looking for; something absolutely safe and reliable, that will disarm her fears of that dread rattling, strident cough, so fearful to the mother, fatal to the child. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is a croup cure that can be relied on. Thousands say so.

Mrs. W. J. DICKSON ("Stanford Eveleth") writes from Truro, N.S.:

"That terror of mothers, the starting, croupy cough, never alarmed me so long as I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house."

"We have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in our family for years. Once when our boy had a severe attack of croup, we thought that he would die. But we broke up the attack by using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."

Sir—Please convey to your company my thanks for the very prompt payment of claim, caused by the death of my daughter, Ethel. She died on 5th inst., and claim was paid on the 7th. Yours truly, DANIEL HENNESSEY.

Police Court

The only case that came up before Magistrate Dumble yesterday morning was that of three small boys who were charged with stealing some tools which Mr. Wm. Aldridge left in a house on the corner of Stewart and Simcoe Sts. There were given more chance and at the same time told what they would get if they came up in Court again.

The Flooded Lands

The steamer, North Star took down to Hastings yesterday about 100 farmers and others who are interested in the lands along the Otonabee river and Rice Lake flooded by the raising of the water by the Hastings dam. Mr. Jos. Kennedy, M.P., and John, M.P. were among the present. The party had their meals served on board and a most delightful day was spent.

Exemption of Factories

In Toronto a movement has been started in favor of exempting manufacturers from taxation, not only on their plant and machinery, but on buildings also, leaving nothing but the land values of their factory premises to be taxed. The object of this extension of the exemption privilege is to lighten the tax burden of manufacturers in Toronto that manufacturing establishments in other towns of Ontario and will be moved to that city. It is safe to predict that if Toronto adopts this aggressive policy, factories will promptly follow suit, adopting the same policy as a means of self-protection. If Toronto can stand it, Peterboro can. Besides it might be interesting to try the experiment of the single tax on this limited scale, and watch the effects.

Letter on Timber

It was stated to-day that the lumbermen of the Ottawa Valley had decided to unite with the lumbermen of the Georgian Bay district regarding the export duty on logs; and that it had been decided to insist at the Quebec conference that the export duty be removed only on condition that the United States remove the duty on lumber. Upon inquiry it was learned that no such resolution had been decided upon by the Ottawa Valley lumbermen. Mr. L. Crannell stated to a Journal reporter that the Ottawa Valley lumbermen have always favored such an arrangement but that he knew of no such resolution embodying it having been decided upon recently. Mr. E. C. Whitney said that an agreement along the lines suggested would probably be satisfactory, as he had never heard lumbermen consider any other settlement than the one granting free logs for free lumber.

STILL IN TOWN

The Herald Square Opera Company Waiting for Funds—Miss Winter's Trouble

The ups and downs of theatrical life is plainly evinced by the visit to Peterboro of the new defunct Herald Square Opera Company.

The Company is an American concern with its home in Buffalo. The recent upheaval of affairs in the States owing to the recent war, the elections and various other matters has left the people across the lines in no shape for extending the many opera companies that take out an existence in that country. Owing to this state of affairs the Herald Square Opera Company concluded to try their luck in Canada, but experience has taught them their sorrow that there is no room for them in the theatrical world in this country. Some time ago the company ran aground at Guelph, when the manager skipped out and left the rest of the performers to get along as best they could. Miss Winter, the manager, up to the time of the recent collapse, who was one of the leading stars of the affair, undertook to manage the Company and in addition to what money she had of her own borrowed a considerable amount from friends in the States. Most elaborate costumes were got and the present outfit is valued at $2000 or a $1000.

Things ran along smooth for a while but the company finally began going behind and dissatisfaction began to extend among the members. The final blow came when the troop struck Peterboro where Miss Winter claims was owing to three members of the company who in disguise of friendship with her at the same time playing the part of a traitor. These three members of the company, the red claim issued a card against the prosperity of Miss Winter. Before the matter was put through, however, Miss Winter got on to the fact, and dismissed the rehearsal on Tuesday afternoon. Then she had the goods quietly shipped to Buffalo. The entertainment of course could not go on that evening owing to the costumes not being available. Then a panic ensued. Scarcely a member had a cent to help himself with and the entertainment on Wednesday night was scarcely enough to buy tickets for the party for their homes. Some of them claim to have private means while others admit being "dead broke."

The time spent the last day of sojourning for funds and a rather exciting time was the result of this yesterday morning. Miss Tolson, one of the troupe who had made a boast that she could get money whenever she wanted it justified this by showing a telegram that she received from a manager of a leading opera company in Buffalo stating that he had sent a letter with money in-losed.

When she went to the Postoffice yesterday for the letter which was to have been there sure, she was told that the letter had been given to a gentleman member of the company who had got the mail that morning. Miss Tolson carried the mail carrier of the company and was told there was no way for her. A lively time resulted and there is trouble in store for the same individual.

Altogether the members who are yet in town say they are having the best time since they started on the road. A good many of them left in the noon train yesterday, by the G. T. R. but a majority are waiting for funds to get them out of town.

CATHOLIC LITERARY SOCIETY.

Election of Officers for the ensuing year took place last night.

The annual election of officers of the Catholic Literary Society was held last night when a full attendance of members were present.

Ven. Archdeacon Casey occupied the chair and after some routine business had been disposed of the following officers were elected—President—T. J. Begoley, re-elected.
1st Vice-Pres.—Dr. Moher.
2nd Vice-Pres.—James McPherson.
Recording Secretary—John McCabe.
Financial Secretary—J. Hanrham.
Treasurer—J. B. McGraugh.

A committee was appointed to draft the different committees for the year and report at Monday night's meeting.

Mr. Begoley, who was elected to the position of President for the third time reluctantly consented to letting his name go before the meeting. The society is in a flourishing condition and the prospects are bright for a successful year.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Messrs. S. W. Clarke, L.D.S. and William Lang of Millbrook, were in town yesterday.

Mr. W. Sidney Crawford, formerly of New Orleans, now of Toronto, is on town on a visit to his uncle, Mr. T. O. Crawford. Mr. Crawford is a popular and rising young man. He speaks highly of Toronto, where he is successfully fighting the battle of life. The change of climate has been beneficial to his health, as borne out by his appearance. He used to think that the Cranes of the south might serve as an artist's ideal, but in point of beauty he now finds that they are not in it with the Toronto belles, and yet deep down in his heart he finds there is one in Peterboro that surpasses them all.

A Watchman's Story

For the past ten years John Crawford's still has been a fixture in the minds of the shantymen and hunters in the Haliburton district, and the product has been pronounced first-class by those competitive to judge native whisky. But at last Preventive Officer Floody, of Toronto, brought the industry to a sudden stop when he swooped down on Crawford, and in company with County Constable Short, of Lindsay, seized the whole outfit, consisting of a large copper still and worm capable of producing twenty gallons of clear, a barrel of whiskey, empty barrels, molasses barrels, stores, etc.

The building was situated in the woods near Buskong Lake, and being in a thicket, would not be observed by the ordinary hunter.

Not the Only One
The Herald Square Opera Co. is not the only concern of the kind that is having financial trouble as last night's Star contains the following account of the Nelson Lewis Opera Co. which played here a few weeks ago—
"J. H. Maxwell, a Toronto man, organized an opera company called the Nelson-Lewis Opera Company in New York last month, and came to Ontario on a tour of the towns. Last week in Oshawa the company did a particularly good business and on Sunday the Manager skipped out of town with the week's receipts. Three of the company, Charles Guthrie, Mary Bray and another woman followed Maxwell to Toronto, and to-day asked Police Court Clerk Ramsey for a warrant for Maxwell's arrest. Mr. Ramsey wrote a letter to Maxwell demanding an immediate settlement, else a summons would be issued for him."

MOLSONS BANK
Elsewhere appears a report of the forty-third annual general meeting of the Molsons Bank. It will be seen from a perusal of the figures that the affairs of the bank are in a flourishing condition. The net profit for the year, after deducting expenses of management, remuneration for interest accrued on deposits, exchange, and provision for bad and doubtful debts, is $250,191.27. Adding to this the balance of profit and loss account carried over from previous year, of $26,929.68, makes a total of $280,020.95. After paying two half-yearly dividends at the rate of 8 per cent., of $80,000 each, a bonus of 1 per cent. ($20,000) and $25,000 applied on bank premises recently acquired, there is a substantial balance brought forward of $180,020.95.

The President, as will be seen by reference to the report elsewhere, referred to the robbery of the branch at Winnipeg. As the readers of the Times already know, of the $62,000 stolen, there were five $5,000 notes, which could only pass from one branch to another, and $17,000 of legal tenders, of which several were in denominations of $1,000. This will reduce the probable loss very materially. The General Manager explained that it might fairly be believed that $10,000 of the $17,000 above referred to would prove worthless to the present holders. A $5,000 note, similar to the one stolen at Winnipeg, was passed around at the meeting, upon which are the words "This note is given only to a bank to which the Bank Act of Canada applies, and will be redeemed only when presented by one of such banks."

The financial statement, however, is a most gratifying one, and indicates that the bank's affairs are in most capable hands.

THE MOLSONS BANK.

Annual Meeting of the Shareholders Yesterday.

Good Showing for the Year—The Robbery of the Winnipeg Branch—Old Board of Directors Re-elected.

The forty-third annual general meeting of the shareholders of the Molsons Bank was held in the Board Room of that institution in Montreal, at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. The President, Mr. W. M. Macpherson (Quebec), occupied the chair, and among those present were: Messrs. S. H. Ewing, vice-president; Henry Archibald, H. Markland Molson; J. P. Cleghorn, S. Finley, W. M. Ramsey, F. W. Molson, James Wilson, Geo. G. Copeland, R. W. Shepherd, R. R. Watson, J. Try-Davies, George Dunford, Henry Harbison, J. W. Molon, Herbert Molson, Thomas Kerby and W. R. Miller.

The President having called the meeting to order requested Mr. James Elliot, the local manager, to act as secretary, and after the gentleman had read the advertisement convening the meeting, the President, named Messrs. J. Try-Davies and R. W. Sheppard to act as scrutineers.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS.

The general manager, Mr. F. Wolfertan Thomas, then read the annual report of the directors as follows:

Gentlemen,—The Directors beg to submit to the shareholders the forty-third annual report of the Bank for the year ending September, 30.

After making full provision for bad and doubtful debts the earnings for the year amount to $250,191.27 which have been applied to payment of the usual 8 per cent dividend, and 1 per cent bonus, $180,000; in deduction of bank premises account, $25,000; and balance added to Profit and Loss Account, which now stands at $180,020.95.

All branches of the Bank have been inspected once or often during the year.

In order to avail of the expansion of trade in our Northwest, now opening up, we have since last meeting established branches at Vancouver, Victoria and Revelstoke, in British Columbia and at Simoes in Ontario. The results so far have of necessity entailed a loss, but the Board were convinced of the need of establishing these branches not only to protect business at other points, but to afford employment for the bank's increasing resources. They have every reason to believe that their anticipations in both directions will be fully realized.

The motion was seconded by Mr. S. H. Ewing.

The General Manager explained that for the money stolen from the Winnipeg branch, $25,000 consisted of five $5,000 notes which could only pass from one bank to another; they were absolutely non-negotiable, and if a private individual was found in possession of such a note, it would render him liable to arrest, because on the face of it, it showed that it was simply for passing from one bank to another. In addition there were $17,000 of legal tenders, of which they were advised several were the value as the $5,000 note, but he did not like to say positively, as such a statement might be misleading. He thought, however, it might fairly be believed that $10,000 more would be of an irretrievable character, making the total amount to pass from one bank to another not more than $12,000. He thanked the president for the very kind communication with the accountant, who was acting manager of the branch at the time, the manager being away on a vacation; we are also close communication with the solicitors, and we feel satisfied that everything was done and that no time was lost in getting to work after the robbery was discovered. Mr. Dunford, the inspector, started within two or three hours after our receiving the advice of the robbery, and he is now in Winnipeg. The inspection of the branch took place a very few weeks before the robbery and everything was reported as satisfactory by our inspector. The money was at the time in the treasury. The manager, who was away for his holidays at the time of the theft, has returned, so that the robbery and everything is being done to trace the robbers. So soon as any trace of them is discovered, the bank fully intends to use every endeavor to sift the matter and when the culprits are found it is our full intention to punish them in the severest way possible. In the annual statement submitted to you to-day you will observe that it differs somewhat from those of former years as in compliance with the repeated requests of one of our esteemed shareholders, we have printed last year's statement parallel with the present one. I hope in doing so we have met the wishes of the shareholders. You will all be pleased to see the General Manager back among us. He was persuaded to take a holiday, which we all know he required; and it is now, to say how well it was earned after twenty years of hard work in the bank. We are glad to see him back, and hope he has come back in restored health, both for his own comfort and for the great benefit that we all know the bank will derive from it. Applause.

I will now move the adoption of the report.

The motion was seconded by Mr. S. H. Ewing.

The motion was seconded by Mr. S. H. Ewing.

The General Manager explained that for the money stolen from the Winnipeg branch, $25,000 consisted of five $5,000 notes which could only pass from one bank to another; they were absolutely non-negotiable, and if a private individual was found in possession of such a note, it would render him liable to arrest, because on the face of it, it showed that it was simply for passing from one bank to another. In addition there were $17,000 of legal tenders, of which they were advised several were the value as the $5,000 note, but he did not like to say positively, as such a statement might be misleading. He thought, however, it might fairly be believed that $10,000 more would be of an irretrievable character, making the total amount to pass from one bank to another not more than $12,000. He thanked the president for the very kind

Good People in a measure Answerable for the Rise of Dancing

Motion is universal, and man is endowed with capacity to appreciate its beauty and rhythm. Should we doubt, then, that the pleasure of motion is part of man's nature? How strong the effect of rhythm is upon the human mind is shown in man's own creations. Notice the irresistible effect of rhythm when aided by melody and harmony in the stirring strains of a military band; or of rhythm without music, as in the drum corps; who fail to keep step or how thrilling to bear the steady tramp, tramp of a large body of men! That nearly every nation and tribe upon the face of the earth has its dance is further evidenced by the innate love of the human race for rhythmical motion. In our own country, notwithstanding the condemnations and exhortations of many well-meaning people, repeated for years and still recurring, the dance or rhythmical motion, maintains its hold upon favor as one of the chief amusements of the young; so, no doubt, it will ever do. The instinct is so fully a part of our nature that even those who are averse to dancing, and who so strongly condemn this motion to music, may be seen swaying to and fro in exact rhythmical accord, and with evident satisfaction, while singing one of the good old tunes, such as "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," or "Sound the Loud Timbrel," thus proving in their own persons the irresistible power of this benign law.

Certainly, to make pleasant motions to good music cannot be sinful. It is, however, that dancing leads to many things that are sinful, which is often true; but these good people are in a measure answerable for this. They have blocked up nearly every road except the one leading to vice. Would it not be well, now, to open a few paths through this pleasure ground which would lead to virtue? It may be truthfully asserted that our young people of today are as virtuously and modestly inclined as those of any previous generation, and when these conditions of indecency in dancing are soon abandoned. Would it not, therefore, be more in accordance with sound wisdom for the elder ones to provide these where nature is to dance with propriety, and to keep the exercise of this pleasure, amid proper circumstances, and not compel them to seek it where they are too frequently surrounded by temptations destructive alike to health and morality?

What a noble suggestion would there be to every "Young Men's Christian Association," having weekly meetings for the enjoyment of this pleasure! In our public schools a daily lesson in dancing might be given as a reward to the pupils who have brought together all the courtesies of social intercourse could be inculcated upon, making politeness and consideration for others habitual. The lessons would afford exercising over the body, and the result might be made to feel from immediate practice how necessary and useful this is; and that in thus treating others with kindness and courtesy they truly fulfill the precepts of the golden rule. Surely, the daily practice of these social virtues would produce a better result than sending the children in the yard or playground for recreation, as it is called, which usually means romp and practice in rudeness, the strong abusing the weak, and all the kind of lawlessness, in tyranny, imposition and turbulence; the outcome of which is too often lawlessness in later life. The sight of two or three hundred young children enjoying themselves, under the influence of their better feelings, could not be otherwise than acceptable to a kind father, either on earth or in heaven.

To some persons the subject may seem too trivial to deserve serious attention; but such a view will probably in the long run give way to the growing artistic feeling of the age. Seeing that art is daily becoming more and more closely interwoven with the habits and surroundings of our existence, it seems scarcely too bold to predict that the future is not far distant when the eye will grow used to the sight of the art and the aesthetics of rhythmic motion shall receive some share of the cultivation now bestowed upon harmonious sound. Should this point ever be reached we may have reason to be grateful to dancing for having added one more to the number of artistic interests whereby we seek to make gracious our lives.

At the recent annual convention of the American National Association of Masters of Dancing of the United States and Canada, which was held in the city of Detroit, new dances for the season were exemplified and the stamp of approval placed upon them. The association is composed of ladies and gentlemen whose ability for teaching dancing is department and the "grace of man" stands upon the very highest pinnacle of fame; and therefore, whatever dance or manner of motion they set the seal of approval upon is official in the dancing world.

The "German" (or Cotillon, as it is sometimes called) is an ever popular form of amusement in the leading social circles of the United States. That it has not obtained a very great foothold here in Canada is due in a large measure to the enormous cost that usually attends the production. Think of spending $25,000 for cotillon favors! It sounds somewhat fantastic but it is true nevertheless. The trinkets that the really people of New York have recently decided upon as the right sort of souvenirs of the German are not to be purchased for a song. They cost all the way from $500 to $2,500 apiece, and when it is considered that a thousand or more is necessary to go around among the guests the total figure is enormous.

As an offset to this seemingly unnecessary expense a new and inexpensive German has been devised by Robert F. Thumer of Pittsburgh, and adopted by the A.N.A., entitled "A Trip Around the World in One Night." The writer of this article took part in it, and can truthfully say that it is the most charming and enjoyable conception of the kind that it has ever fallen to his lot to participate in. It consists of the start (new acquaintance) at a railway station, New York; all aboard; Mardi Gras festival and a German figure in Paris; Rome, visiting the Catacombs; the game of chance, Monte Carlo; the worship of Mecca; a Persian character; a souvenir of Bombay; a stop over at Calcutta, refreshments; a Chinese court; the Garden of Ebes; a visit to Rear Admiral Dewey; fun in Siberia; a Klondike wedding; digging for gold; San Francisco; across the plains; home again.

In one of the figures "confetti" are freely distributed. They are multi-color paper discs which, thrown by ladies and

Perfectly Cured

Weak and Low Spirited - Nervous Prostration - Appetite Poor and Could Not Rest.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Hood's Sarsaparilla to others. It has been the means of restoring my wife to good health. She was stricken down with an attack of nervous prostration. She suffered with headaches and her nerves were under severe strain. She became very low spirited and so weak she could only do a little work without resting. Her appetite was poor, and being so weak she could not get the proper rest at night. She decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, as we had heard it highly praised, and I am glad to state that Hood's Sarsaparilla has perfectly cured all her ailments." G. BELLMY, 221 Hannah St., West, Hamilton, Ontario.

gentlemen at each other in a general bombardment, clinging to the hair and eyebrows. The effect is dazzling and causes unlimited merriment. In another figure "serpentine," or rolls of various colored paper which unwind when thrown in the air, and produce very weird combinations of colors and designs, are propelled over the heads of the dancers while in motion.

A most amusing part is where the ladies are suddenly confronted by a band of Indians in costume. War-whoops are freely indulged in; each Indian captures a "squaw" and carries her off in a captivating two-step waltz. The favors consist of little gold nuggets, miniature ships, fans and many other inexpensive novelties in keeping with the trip around the world in one night.

The new round dances, or, more properly speaking, fancy figure dances, are "The Dewey," by Prof. Landrum, of Salt Lake City; "The Deceitful" (imbuert), by E. B. Gaynor, Chicago, Ill.; and "The Tarantula," by Prof. John F. Davis, of Toronto. They are very pretty conceptions. The Tarantula was the prime favorite with all the teachers. Partners stand facing the line of direction, side by side, the gentleman supporting the left hand of the lady with his right—move forward by stepping to the fourth position—close to third position—again to fourth position—two measures—repeat for two measures—extend to fourth position, front—same to fourth position, back—face partner in second position—return in like manner to starting point. Take waltz position and "Side Dip Waltz," 16 measures thus, side dip and waltz alternately.

The masters were very emphatic in their denunciation of the "vulgar position" assumed by dancers in round dances, which, in plain terms, means that hugging partners in the ballroom must cease. During the present season every legitimate effort will be put forth by the masters in their classes to suppress everything pertaining to vulgarity, and to cultivate the most becoming ladylike and gentlemanlike positions and attitudes in the waltz and two-step, etc.

It was decided to hold the next annual meeting at Niagara Falls next June.

Ten Years of Hgony!

Dyspepsia and Stomach Troubles the Cause.

Paine's Celery Compound Does a Marvelous Work

MR. RAINAUD SAYS: "I AM NOW COMPLETELY CURED"

Are you a miserable dyspeptic disappointed in the past with medicines you had hoped would have wrought a cure?

If you are still suffering, it is but right to assume that you have not yet given Paine's Celery Compound a trial. Thousands physically broken down by dyspepsia, indigestion and general stomach troubles have been made strong and vigorous after using the great compound.

We earnestly desire to give you a full assurance of a permanent and happy cure. Paine's Celery Compound is a guaranteed medicine far removed from the many deceptive mediums so freely advertised. It has thousands of the best Canadian testimonials that speak loudly in its favor.

Mr. H. Rainaud, Roxton Pond, Que., writes about his cure as follows:

"I desire to inform you what Paine's Celery Compound has done for me.

My troubles were a very bad form of dyspepsia and rheumatism of the stomach. For ten years I was very miserable and suffered much. I had used all kinds of medicines that were recommended to me, but they brought me no relief or cure. My wife brought me a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound which I used with wonderful results. I continued until I had used twelve bottles, and I am now completely cured. I cannot thank you so richly for the great good your Paine's Celery Compound has done for me."

Comments upon the clash of French and British interests at Fashoda, now that the blue book despatches have been given out, forms the major part of the foreign news. A general opinion prevails that the French Ministry will withdraw Major Marchand if given time to divert popular attention to other issues. It is a clash, they say, of opposing policies, but so commercial interests, and a permanent agreement would affect a friendly settlement if the press of the two countries would only cease to excite public opinion. The worst that can happen is the resignation of the French Ministry, and that is a small affair as things go in Paris.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

ANEMIA OR BLOODLESSNESS.

Is Victim are Pale in Color, Subject to Dizziness, Palpitation of the Heart and Other Distressing Symptoms.

From the Echo, Plattville, Ont.

Anemia, which literally means bloodlessness, is prevalent to an alarming extent among young girls and young women of the present day, and is a fruitful source of "decline" and consumption. The symptoms are pallor of the face, lips and gums, shortness of breath on slight exertion, dizziness, severe headaches, weakness of the vital organs, palpitation of the heart, and dropped eyelids of the limbs. The more of these symptoms shown, the greater the necessity for prompt treatment. Among those who have suffered from anemia and found a cure is Miss Emily Webb, a young lady residing near Wolverton, Ont. Miss Webb says: "My illness first came on when I was about sixteen years of age. My complexion was a pale waxy color, I was troubled with general weakness, dizziness and palpitation of the heart. I was placed under medical treatment, but the medicine prescribed by the doctor did not appear to do me the slightest good. As time went by I was slowly but surely growing worse. I was unable to do any work about the house, and my limbs would tremble each an instant at the slightest exertion that I could scarcely stand upon my feet. Then my stomach became so weak that I vomited almost everything I ate, I grew despondent and feared I would not recover. While in this condition a friend urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I followed the advice. After I had used two boxes I noticed an improvement and my heart was gladdened with the hope of renewed health. At the end of six boxes my appetite had fully returned, and with it strength, color to my cheeks, and brightness to the eyes. I still continued taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills until I had taken in all twelve boxes, and I can truthfully assert that I am healthier and stronger than I ever was before. I owe this to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I would urge all girls who suffer as I did to give them a fair trial."

NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

The Hartland, N. B. Advertiser, says: "Right in our own village is reported another of the remarkable cures that make Dr. Williams' Pink Pills so popular throughout the land. The case is that of Mrs. E. W. Miller. The Advertiser interviewed her husband, who was glad to relate the circumstances for publication that others might read and have a remedy put into their hands as it were. "For five years," said Mr. Miller, my wife was unable to walk without aid. One physician diagnosed her case as coming from a spinal affection. Other doctors called the malady nervous prostration. Whatever the trouble was, she was weak and nervous. Her limbs had no strength and could not support her body. There also was a terrible weakness in her back. Three months ago she could not walk, but as a last resort, after trying many medicines, she began to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Improvement was noted in a few days, and a few weeks has done wonders in restoring her health. To day she can walk without assistance. You can imagine her delight as well as my own. We owe her recovery to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I recommend them for any case of nervous weakness or general debility." Mr. Miller is part owner and manager of one of our lumber mills and is well known throughout the country.

A PERMANENT CURE.

Mr. M. Carroll, of Roland, Mass., writes: "While living at Sydney, N. S., I wrote you the other day that your Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had cured me of rheumatism of twenty-five years standing, after many other medicines had failed. I am pleased to again write you and say that the cure has been permanent, so after a lapse of several years, there has been no return of the trouble. I sincerely hope my experience will be the means of helping some other poor sufferer."

GENERAL WEAKNESS CURE.

Mr. Jas. Canavan, a well known resident of Maxville, Ont., says: "After having used your Pink Pills I am glad to recommend them to the world as a cure for extreme weakness and debility, and I am sure that if those who feel the first approach of such trouble will only take a box or two, such misery can be averted."

DYSPEPSIA CURED

Mr. Fred. A. Henry, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "I have suffered for years with dyspepsia, and although I am sure I tried a dozen remedies, I found no relief until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After eating I would be terribly distressed with pains in the stomach, and frequently only found relief by ejecting the food. This continued until my life was fairly miserable, but now, thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, I am fully restored."

CURED OF SCIATICA.

Mr. C. Thornton, Blenheim, Ont., says: "About seven years ago I rented my farm, and moved into this village, where I have since carried on business as a pumpmaker. In the fall of 1901 I was attacked with sciatica, and suffered intensely. I took medical treatment but it did not help me. Then a druggist advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills; under this treatment the sciatica was banished, and I have not since felt any return of it."

A BLACKSMITH'S TRIALS.

He Became so Run Down That Work Was Almost Impossible. His Whole Body Backed With Pain.

From the Bridge-water Enterprise.

Mr. Austin Fancey is a well known blacksmith living at Baker Settlement, a hamlet about ten miles from Bridge-water, N. S. Mr. Fancey is well known in the locality in which he lives. He is another of the legion whose restoration to health adds to the popularity of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mr. Fancey related his story of illness and renewed health to a reporter of the Enterprise as follows: "During the last winter, owing I suppose to overwork and impure blood, I became very much reduced in flesh, and had severe pains in the muscles all over my body. I felt tired all the time, had no appetite, and often felt so low spirited that I wished myself in another world. Some of the time necessity compelled me to undertake a little work in my blacksmith shop, but I was not fit for it, and after doing the job I would have to lie down six inches I often felt like fainting. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after using a couple of boxes, I felt a decided relief. The pains began to abate, and I felt again as though life was not all dreaminess. By the time I had used six boxes I was as well as ever, and able to do a hard day's work at the forge without fatigue, and those who know anything about a blacksmith's work, will know what this means. Those who are not well, will make it worth their while looking for health through the medium of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

COULD NOT DRESS ALONE.

A Nova Scotia Farmer Tells of his Intense Suffering from Rheumatism and How he Found Relief.

From the Bridge-water, N. S., Enterprise.

Such suffering as rheumatism causes the victim upon whom it fastens itself is almost unendurable. Only those who write under its pangs can imagine the joy of one who has been freed from its terrors. Mr. J. W. Folgerham, of New Etna, N. S., is one of those who have been released from pain, and who believes it his duty to let others know how a cure can be found. Mr. Folgerham is a farmer, and like all who follow this arduous but honorable calling, is subject to much exposure. It was this exposure that brought on his trouble and caused him so much suffering before he was rid of it. He says: "In the spring of 1897 I contracted rheumatism. Throughout the whole summer I suffered from it, and about the first of October it became so bad that I could not get out of the house. The pains were located in my hip and back, and what I suffered can hardly be expressed. I became so helpless I could not dress myself without aid. Eventually the trouble spread to my hands and arms, and at times I would lose all freedom and become useless. In November I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after taking four boxes began to improve. After using six boxes the pains and soreness had all gone and I was able to do a hard day's work. I intend using a few more more as a precautionary measure, and I would earnestly advise those suffering from this painful trouble to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and be made well."

GAINED TWENTY-THREE POUNDS.

Mr. Arthur Piper, Dixville, Que., says: "Last autumn I became very weak, my constitution seemed to be undermined, and I lost flesh rapidly. I had no appetite, the least exertion tired me, and the words 'felt miserable' will best describe my feelings. Having read so much concerning Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I determined to try them, and the results were most beneficial. At the end of six weeks I gained twenty-three pounds in three weeks, and I am now feeling as well as ever I did in my life. To those who feel as I did, I would say that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will speedily cure them."

HOW TO GET STRONG.

The greatest medicine in the world for building up and strengthening an enervated system is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

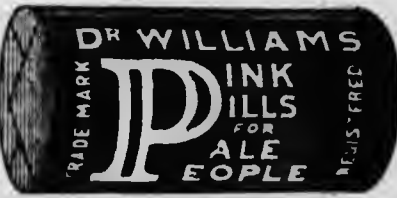

When the summer is over thousands feel worn out, easily tired, and to use a common expression, "miserable generally." The almost torrid heat of our Canadian summers is responsible for this. Those who are in this condition are unfitted to meet the sudden changes of autumn, and easily fall a prey to disease. In this condition Dr. Williams' Pink Pills prove a blessing to humanity.

The pills have no purgative action, and so do not further weaken the body. They build up the blood by supplying the elements which enrich it, and strengthen the nerves. But you must get the genuine

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

The "just the same" and "just as good" substitutes offered by some dealers never cured anyone — Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have cured thousands, some of them your neighbors.

The genuine boxes look just like this except that the wrapper is printed in red ink. Take nothing else.

PET NAMES FOR RAILWAYS

Patrons and Employees Find it Easier to Remember.

However they may differ in all other respects, railroads are very like human beings in that nearly all of them bear nicknames. Very few of them are dignified by their full titles either by railroad men or by the general public. So great has become the confusion resulting from this use of "pet" names, in fact, that a great press association recently found it necessary to instruct correspondents to use the corporate title of all railroads to which they might have occasion to refer.

Take the Chicago line for instance. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy is generally known either as the "Burlington" or the "Q." The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, nearly always is called the "St. Paul." The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific is known as the "Rock Island." The Chicago and North-western is known among financial men as the "North-west." (The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern is always called the "Lake Shore." The New York, Chicago and St. Lewis is always heard of as the "Nickel Plate." "Big Four" invariably designates the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis. The Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville is called the "Monon." The Indiana, Illinois and Iowa is called the "Three Ex's." The Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis is universally called the "Panhandle," and the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago the "Fort Wayne."

Some of the nicknames are exceedingly original, resulting from peculiar experiences of train hands or officials. Others are given simply as a matter of convenience, the long titles being extremely difficult to speak or write either in conversation or in business documents. It is a curious fact, too, that different nicknames for a number of roads are used by the officials and by the employees.

Newspaper readers will recall the great railway coup in which Senator Burke was interested some sixteen years ago by which the New York, Chicago and St. Louis was built, paralleling the New York Central for a part of its way. The line was built very rapidly, and the sale of it to the Vanderbilts attracted a large crowd of speculators. William H. Vanderbilt was grumbling about its price one day soon after the transfer to him had been made.

"Why, if the infernal thing was nickel plated it couldn't have cost any more," he said. And from that day the road has been known as the "Nickel Plate."

The Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie is called the "S. & M." an abbreviation of the latter name carrying the correct pronunciation. The "Big Four" cognomen came, not because of the four cities named in the corporate title, but from the consolidation of four different lines, the Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago, the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, the Indianapolis and St. Louis, and the Cairo, Vincennes and Chicago.

The Chicago, Great Western, another Chicago line, is commonly called the "Maple Leaf" because its main lines conform to the woody lines of the leaf of the tree named. The Toledo, St. Louis and Kansas City is called the "Clover Leaf" for the same reason.

The Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific is known everywhere as the "Queen and Crescent," taking its names from the titles of the two cities at its termini.

The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago is sometimes called by employees "Paddy Finnigan's Wife and Children," on account of the initials of the names in the corporate title. The New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio secured the title "Nypano," for the same reason. Likewise the Milwaukee, Kansas and Texas is generally called the "Katie."

"Brandy and Soda" is a name commonly attached to the Buffalo and South-western.

The St. Louis, Arkansas and Texas is known as the "Cotton Belt," name coming from the chief product of the region it penetrates. "Blue Grass" is the pretty title of the Kentucky Central, given for a like reason. The Southern Pacific is familiarly known as the "Sunset," and that name has been given by the officials themselves to the finest passenger train operated over its rails.

Among railroad men the use of initials to designate railroads is the rule, and it is noticed that this habit is growing on the public. The Baltimore and Ohio is known for years as the "B. & O." The Iowa Pacific seldom is called anything but the "I. P." The Delaware and Hudson even in the far west, is designated as the "D. & H."

Such examples, however, might be multiplied indefinitely. "We don't blame the public for nicknaming our railroads," said a passenger man. "The policy in naming roads seems to be to work in just as many titles of towns as possible. The result is that the cognomen is a cumbersome one, and it quickly is shortened to a convenient name. Unless the nickname has come from some peculiar event, it is generally started by railroad men, and from them it travels to the public. I have noticed, too, that few nicknames ever are dropped after they have once been in use. The habit of using these pet names grows, and among railroad men it is universal. Two employees of transportation companies will talk for hours without once mentioning the corporate name of a single road. Such names as the 'Nickel Plate,' 'Big Four,' and 'Clover Leaf,' are so commonly used that not one person in a hundred who uses them knows the corporate title of the roads to which they are given."

Owing to the discovery that Chicago scalpers have agents dressed as soldiers securing half-price tickets, east-bound and south-bound lines yesterday decided that hereafter no other tickets are to be made except upon presentation of an order signed by a regimental or departmental quartermaster, and giving full information regarding the individual for which the cheap transportation is desired. A similar regulation is being considered by the western passenger men.

General Freight Agent F. A. Winn, of the Chicago and Alton, indignantly denies the report that he has resigned his position on account of ill-health.

Western members of the American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents, who attend the annual meeting in Detroit, October 18, will be the guests of the Michigan Central. General Passenger Agent Ruggles has made elaborate arrangements for their entertainment.

Prospects for a good attendance at the proposed New York meeting for re-organization of the Trans-continental Passenger Association are not bright.

A number of western men have telegraphed that they cannot attend and it is not at all certain that the Canadian Pacific will be represented. The meeting was called for October 12. It is probable that it will be postponed.

L. L. Truitt has been appointed general passenger agent for the Chesapeake and Ohio road, with headquarters in New York.

An interesting and timely brochure has been issued by the passenger department of the Chicago and North-western road, entitled "The Hawaiian Islands." A graphic description of the group is given. It embraces all needed information concerning the topography, climate, productions, mineral resources, religion, educational facilities, population and commerce of the islands.

A meeting of the committee of the Western Passenger Association appointed to prepare a plan of re-organization is being held. It is not probable that it will be able to do more than report progress at the close. The next or is one of such importance, that many meetings will be required before the work of the committee is completed.

The St. Louis, Chicago and St. Paul again is in the hands of the United States court. Saturday the Mercantile Trust Company of New York filed a bill in the United States court at Springfield alleging that the road is behind in interest obligations, and at its request William H. Hale, of New York, was appointed receiver.

Orders for 5,000 freight cars have been placed within a week. The Chicago and North-western will take 3,000 of them, the Burlington 800 and the Northern Pacific 300. There were in addition several smaller lots ordered. This is one of the best evidences of increasing business.

President Purdy, of the Rock Island, says the business of that line keeps up remarkably well. West-bound traffic is picking up. September earnings will compare with a very large month of last year, but it is expected that an increase will be shown. President Miller, of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, says business in the west is excellent and money plenty. Grain and lumber traffic is heavy. Passenger traffic, alas, is reported as very poor.

HOW NICKEL WAS DISCOVERED

In Canada. The Peculiar Uses and Value of Nickel-Interesting Account.

Many of the greatest discoveries in the scientific world have been made by accident, as we know from the old and familiar stories of Watta and his kettle and Franklin and his kite, to the more modern instances connected with the telephone and the phonograph and other electrical inventions. It was Baron von Reichenow, a German naturalist, who wrote that "all the discoveries which can take rank among the nobler of their kind have been brought to light, not by small elaborations and extensions of art, but entirely by accident." The accidental findings of precious metals are no less interesting. The evidence of diamonds in South Africa, it is said, revealed quite by accident—a man discovering a strange glint and sparkle in a piece of earth. Even the half-breed who found gold on Klondike Creek, in the Yukon, in the summer of 1896, was as much surprised as delighted at the unexpected revelation of the yellow metal of which men dream and for which they strive. The first gold in California was detected while digging a raceway on a ranch.

was the finding of the rich nickel deposits in Canada in what is called the Sudbury district, two hundred miles east of Sault Ste. Marie. During the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway a deep cutting had to be made through a hill. Among the debris were pieces of rock that glistened in an unusual way in the sunlight. The workmen thought they had found pure silver, the contractors examined it and pronounced it copper. The first assay months after that the existence of nickel was proven—a metal comparatively rare and possessing qualities that made it of high value.

This was in 1822, Sir Henry Vivian, the proprietor of the great smelting works at Swansea, Wales, brought a piece of land in the neighborhood of the cutting, had shafts cut and machinery erected, and in course of time, "deep in the mines' dark mystery," were found great bodies of the ore. Others followed and soon the country had a nickel boom, with prospectors and brokers many and the town of Sudbury was born. To-day there are several nickel properties in this locality. The chief mine is known as the Copper Cliff, into which shafts have been sunk to a depth of nine hundred feet. This, and the other mine adjoining, are the chief producers of nickel and have extensive smelters and roasting beds for the extraction of the sulphur and other foreign substances in the rough ore. The work thus far done has revealed one of the few discovered storehouses of this metal, indeed much the largest, the next in extent being in New California, the French colony in the south seas. The nickel mines of the United States are few and small in extent, so that the Canadian mines are recognized as one of the world's principal supplies.

What is the peculiar value and quality of nickel? It is a chief use up to the present is as an alloy with steel, nickel giving toughness and hardness to its sister metal. In its alloy with steel the two make an armor plate for war vessels that is far superior to the ordinary mild-steel plates formerly used. The United States naval authorities were the first to adopt these nickel-steel armor plates, and their example was in turn followed by Germany, Russia and France, and, last of all, Great Britain has but recently come to the same conclusion after years of severe testing of the same amalgamation.

THE UNFORTUNATE MULE

The Spaniards owe the mule something, for it was a mule that fell gloriously at Mantanzas early in the war and gave the Spaniards a chance to repel his death as the sole damage done by the United States at the Battle of Mantanzas. The United States were the mule much for he has done his best to draw order out of chaos and make up for the deficiencies of men. It is cheering to know that the sufferings and sufferings of the mule are not to pass entirely unnoticed by those high in command in the United States army. Thus General Cuyler, in his report on the quantity and quality of the supplies furnished the army, says: "The quality of team mules furnished by the department was very good. The treatment they received in many instances was atrocious, untrained and often brutal treatment, serving under untrained regimental quartermasters, amid the Tampa campfires, under the burning sun, produced the result that might be naturally expected—dying and disabled mules."

Get More and You Get Less

Why is it every sarsaparilla which tries to sell itself, ranges itself against Ayer's as the standard? Why is it that all have to offer extra inducements—bigger bottles, fancy wrappers, cheaper price—anything, everything, but the one inducement of quality?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

has never been equaled by any cheap imitation of it, and quality tells, just as blood tells.

It is the Standard.

"I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla for more than twenty-five years, and have never heard anything but words of praise from my customers; not a single complaint has ever reached me. A preparation must possess great merit to maintain such a reputation. I believe your sarsaparilla to be the best blood purifier that has ever been introduced to the general public. I often hear other manufacturers say that this is 'as good as Ayer's,' but no one ever yet heard it said that Ayer's was 'as good' as any other kind. They always set Ayer's up as the standard of excellence."—J. F. Davis, Duluth, Minn.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

County Maps

There are only a few of these maps of the County of Peterborough left, and all who require one should procure it at once. In order to clear out the balance on hand they will be sold, hand-somely mounted, for $2 each, and on paper 50 cents each. Apply at Times Bookstore, Peterborough.

A Snap

We have just secured a very large number of stereoscopic views, which we will sell at five cents each. Our collection is the best shown anywhere. We invite intending purchasers to come early and make a selection while they can be had at such a low price. Times Bookstore, Peterborough.

Engage

Everything is in readiness for the game this afternoon between Upper Canada College and the Colts and if the weather proves favorable a big crowd will no doubt be on hand to cheer the local team on to victory. The boys will start to punch the pig-skins at 3 o'clock sharp, rain or shine and it is expected they "won't do a thing" to the Collegians from the Queen's city.

Final Fight: Moleing Fish

Symptoms—Moleing intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate and cause a big crowd of the Oldest steps the itching and burning, boils, ulcers, and in most cases remove the tumors. All drugs, ointments, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Wm. A. Ross, Philadelphia. Lyman Ross & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Postively refuse all substitutes.

Some Coal Contracts

Mr. J. A. McClellan, the hustling young manager of the People's Coal Company's agency here, is doing a rushing business these days. He has disposed of more coal already this season than he sold the whole of last year, and twenty car-loads more arrived the other day. He has just filled the contracts for the Customs House, Post Office and the town buildings.

Mr. McClellan does not confine himself to the Peterboro trade but attracts the attention of outside buyers by the Millbrook School Board being among them.

An Oshabee Woman in Trouble

Mary Crawley, a crazy woman was acting in a most disorderly manner around the Salvation Army Barracks on Thursday night. A telephone message brought officer McIntyre to the scene and the unfortunate woman unhesitatingly obeyed Charlie's company to the Police station.

It was learned that she belonged to Oshabee and the local authorities handed over the prisoner to County Constable Cochrane. The local officials are quite reticent about handling such characters belonging to other municipalities owing to the fact that the records at the end of the year would make the town appear worse than it really is.

TEACHERS' MEET

The Annual Convention of the Peterboro County Association

The village of Ashburnham is besieged by yellers of the birch rod, it being the annual convention of the Peterboro County Teachers' Association. The convention was opened at 9:30 o'clock when an hour was spent in the discussion.

A committee, consisting of Inspector Brown, Messrs. Wallace, Matchett and Snowell, was appointed to report upon the circular sent by the Ontario Educational Association to each County Association, in regard to many matters of interest to Public School teachers. The appointment of a nominating committee was deferred until the afternoon session.

Inspector Brown then gave a very instructive address on his recent trip to Halifax to attend the meeting of the Dominion Teachers' Association. He gave a graphic description of the sights to be seen along the way, and threw out some very helpful hints.

AFTERNOON.

The session began at 1:45 with the President, Mr. W. M. Matchett in the chair.

The first subject was "Regarding Socialism," by Mr. J. Hampden Burnham, M.A., who gave an excellent and interesting paper on this deep and difficult subject. At the close of this paper there was a good discussion carried on by Inspector Brown, Rev. H. Semonds, and the speaker Walker. The discussion was closed by Mr. Burnham, who was warmly applauded on resuming his seat.

The next subject was "Country Schools and Promotion examinations," taken by Mr. Robert Gillies, Principal of Hawlock Public School, who gave a very helpful paper. He referred to many advantages, as well as disadvantages, which the country school possesses over the village and city schools. He did not believe that we have too many subjects on the program, but we do not properly develop interest in these subjects, hence the difficulty in having them learned.

He suggested many ways of developing the powers of observation of the child, by a series of questions, the answers of which must be found by the pupils themselves.

Mr. Gillies also gave a few words on "Promotion Examinations," pointing out the desirability of having a uniform system of promotion of examinations.

Discussion followed, carried on by Mr. Chas. E. Munroe, Mr. J. J. Wallace, Mr. H. T. Lewis, Inspector Brown and Inspector Walker.

It was finally decided that Inspector Brown should appoint a committee of three to prepare a limit in respect to Mr. Sheriff Hall then took up Shakespeare's play of "Macbeth," and in a very pleasing manner gave many helpful points on this great play.

The roll-al closed a very successful afternoon's session.

Before dismissing, Inspector Brown, Mr. Semonds, and Miss Waters were appointed as a nominating committee, to report on Saturday morning.

THEIR ANNUAL CONCERT

The County Teachers' Association Gave an Entertainment Last Night

The annual concert of the Peterboro County Teachers' Association, was held in the Town Hall, Ashburnham last night, a fair sized audience being present.

The Hall was very prettily decorated for the occasion with flags and bunting while a large streamer with the word "Welcome" hung across the front of the stage.

School Inspector Brown occupied the chair, and in his address took occasion to refer to the feeling that at present existed between the United States and Britain.

He compared the sentiment in this country towards the United States at the present time, to what it was a year ago and said that this time a year ago when at a large meeting in Halifax which he was present, the Hon. Mr. Stittens who addressed the gathering called upon the audience to sing Yankee Doodle and no one responded, but now it was being sung heartily by Canadians and God Save the Queen was being sung throughout the whole of the country to the south.

The program was good and special mention should be made of Miss Aggie Patterson, who delighted the audience with her recitations. Mr. Warren presided at the piano and the following program was rendered—Chairman's address—Ins. Brown. Instrumental, piano—Miss Lizzie Scott.

Solo—Mr. James Brown. Recitation—Miss Aggie Patterson. Solo—Miss Bertha Parnell. Vocal Duet—Miss Bellegham and Mr. Brown.

Violin and Piano—Misses Bell and McCabe. Instrumental Duet—Misses S. Campbell and E. Hubbs.

Solo—Miss Clara Bellegham. Recitation—Miss Aggie Patterson. Solo—Mr. James Brown.

The meeting was then brought to a close by singing God Save the Queen. The decorations in the hall were the work of Messrs. J. J. Turner & Son.

LAKEFIELD CANOES

Strickland & Co's, Boats and a Wide Assortment at the Central

Strickland & Co. of Lakefield, the famous canoe builders, came with a wide variety of canoes to the Central Exhibition this year. They had a superb exhibition view. It consisted of samples of their canoes, skiffs and dingies, every one being an admirable sample of workmanship, and amongst those who visited the display was Hon. Mr. Tarte, who was highly pleased with the beauty, comfort and patterns of these small craft. The dingy is of basswood, with keel, center board and drop rudder. There was a specimen of the canoe used in the Klondike. It was built of cedar and in dimensions was twenty feet long, 48 inches wide and 20 inches deep. There were also to be seen three other kinds of canoes, a close ribbed basswood with metal points, an African mahogany and R. C. canoes with longitudinal strips, and a basswood canoe with longitudinal strips. The canoe also had on exhibition a tennis marker of their own invention and manufacture. It is a small but very effective wooden marker. There is a belt running around the wooden wheel and this receives whitening from a rowing stick at the rear, and as it moves along the wheels mark the grass very heavily.

CAPTURED A HORSE THIEF

Chief Constable Mac Mathew Edwards in Ash Knaping

Matthew Edwards, who hails from near Keene is in trouble, and will have his matter ventilated in the Police Court this morning.

It appears that Matthew borrowed a horse and cart from Mr. Joseph Larush who also lives in the neighborhood of Keene village, and started off to take in the Norwood fair. He was not long at the fair before he became intoxicated and forgot where he came from or who owned the horse and cart. However, he came to Peterboro next day and sold the outfit to a man named Cronan and Cronan disposed of it to Jack Clancy. Clancy then sold it to a man named O'Brien in Duro.

Mr. Larush got wind of the fate of his property and came to town last night in search of the same. Edwards was still in town and when Chief Constable Mac Mathew Edwards of the facts, soon had the horse thief in safe keeping at the Police Station. Mr. Clancy has the harness and cart but the horse is still grazing on the green fields of Duro and will be brought back to-day.

REFUSED A WARRANT

Miss Dolan Will Have to Get Another Ticket to Buffalo

Miss Dolan, a member of the defunct Herald Square Opera Company, applied to Magistrate Dumble for a warrant for the arrest of the member of the same company, who it was supposed had "pinched" her. Miss Dolan, containing a ticket to Buffalo and some money.

As mentioned in yesterday's Times the accused member went to the Post office and asked for the mail for the Company, and it is alleged was given a letter belonging to Miss Dolan. The letter was not given to the lady by the stranded artist, and he denied ever having received it from the post office.

The lady member threatened what she would do and what she wouldn't do, until the crooked individual left town. Then she came for a warrant. Mr. Dumble did not give her one on the ground that she should have kept quiet and came to him in the first place when the rascal would have been properly attended to, but he was not going to put the country to the expense of trying to capture him at that late date.

Prohibition

To The Editor of The Times. Sir,—After reading the reports of the different election trials that have taken place throughout the country I have come to the conclusion that there is something in the prohibition campaign, viz., that a prohibitory law sometimes did more harm than good. Certainly, if bribery were not prohibited there would not be so much amazing evidence given in the courts. The question, therefore, arises whether it would be better for the state to allow bribery and corruption to go on freely and have no election trials, or have a law prohibiting it and keep the election courts going. Which would do more harm to the youth of the country. HONEY-DEW.

Population

Editor Morning Times. Sir,—Your article a few weeks ago in regard to population is not quite right in its inferences. The people of Canada as a whole are better off now than when they numbered 2,000,000. In consequence of increased numbers they have advantages in the way of railways, mails, telegraphs, roads, newspapers, business and recreation which they did not have before. If prosperity is a thing of which the people are entitled to feel satisfied for the body, a small population may allow possibly as much prosperity as a matter of mental gratification as well as bodily satisfaction. One would fancy that below the limit at which over-crowding begins, the bigger the population the better for the average of the people. The Times is a progressive newspaper, and is nearly always right, but in this instance we think it is not as level-headed as usual.

PROGRESS.

Peterboro, Oct. 14.

Readers of the Times.

To The Editor of The Times. Sir,—I understand that in connection with the recent Rifle Association matches there has arisen a question which it is claimed is stirring the organization into two hostile camps. The match for the Cox Cup is decided by the highest aggregate score at two ranges, but provision is made for the interference of unfavorable weather; that is to say that if the firing in the second stage is interfered with from any cause the match is decided on the scores made at the first range. In the case in point the highest scores were 32's, the first in order of merit being that of F. C. Miller, who consequently is justly entitled to the Cox Cup without further ado—and at the time such an opinion was expressed I believed, by the range officer and other authorities. All in attendance left the range expecting that Mr. Miller had fairly won the Cox Cup, as he in reality had; but a day or two later his complexion is shown on the "marker" Range officer Mr. Penland, has looked him and after giving due consideration to the fact that his two leading opponents for the Cup are amateurs, thinks his chances for winning on a declaration for the Cox Cup favorable, suddenly changes his mind and without (if a particle of selfishness orders the alleged) tie shot off.

Are such petty tactics becoming of an institution-aided locally and by the Government—and organized for the purpose of enlarging marksmanship? I say no and moreover that it is this same spirit that has reduced the Peterboro Rifle Association to its present insignificant position. Years ago the P.A.A. were able to hold matches covering two and three days with hundreds of competitors present, and a most liberal prize list. At that time there were at least a score or more of first class shots in connection with the organization—Now you can count them on the fingers of one hand.

This state of affairs is manifestly wrong. The present clique who control and manipulate the affairs of the organization have by their own stupidity and narrow-mindedness run it to earth.

The Association should be entirely re-organized and the half-dozen alleged "ONERS" given a chance to "grout" on the outside.

Yours truly,
AN OLD TIMER.

FINE VEHICLES

Fitzgerald & Co., Brock St., Spring a Surpriser on the Public

Those who supposed that the day of home-manufacture in vehicles was past had the ill-luck to miss the Central Fair this year. Fitzgerald & Co. had a splendid display on view. It was a really first class lot of buggies, and other styles of conveyances, a dozen varieties in all that were seen. The construction of the carriages was perfect and durable, the finish bright and natty, none of the upstart being extra fine. Mr. Fitzgerald was in charge of the exhibit and was generously complimented by the hundreds who inspected the various vehicles. The wagons shown were constructed for wear and weight and impressed the farmers as being of the style that would be durable and yet not too heavy. All the work in hand made and Mr. Fitzgerald informed his visitors by a neat little card that his motto was "all hand made."

PETERBOROUGH, OCTOBER 17, 1898

TEMPERANCE REFORM

Rudyard Kipling has become a prohibitionist, although one would never think so from his writings. He states his position in his own peculiar way. He says he takes a drink occasionally and regards it as a very good thing, but so much harm comes from the public exposure of inebriates for sale, that he is willing to put up with a great deal of inconvenience in giving his own liquor, in order that the growing generation of boys and girls may be kept from acquiring drinking habits. Kipling has a remarkable faculty of getting to the bottom of things, and in thus drawing attention to the evil resulting from the acquiring of drinking habits by young people of both sexes, he sounds what ought to be the keynote of a new reform. The young lives that are being ruined by the drink habit are innumerable.

The tremendous setback, which prohibition received in the plebiscite, will be productive of an immense amount of good if it will convince social reformers of the necessity for greater activity in the field of moral suasion and of the folly of expending too much from legal enactment. In the other provinces the people are only too familiar with the destruction wrought among young people by intemperance. The history of every city and town shows how the positions of honor, trust and responsibility rarely remain in the same families for two generations, and the drink habit accounts for it. The sons and, too often in these later days, the daughters of prosperous citizens fall a prey to intemperance and the places which they ought to have filled in business, politics and society, are occupied by others. Instead of the results of successful industry, capacity and study being transmitted from one generation to another, they are lost through dissipation, and thus society is in a constant struggle against its own destructive influences.

FUTURE OF THE NILE

The thoughtless of the British advance upon the Danish capital at Omduhman and the care taken to make the repetition of the old revolt which swept the Egyptian Government out of the Sudan impossible, are well illustrated by the ease and rapidity with which troops can now be moved up the Nile from Cairo to the centre of the region lately controlled by the Mahdi and his successors.

When General Kitchener returned to Omdurman from his flying trip up the Nile to Khartoum, where he raised the Egyptian flag and reminded the French captain, Marchand, that France had no recognized rights there, now in the Nile Valley anywhere, he almost immediately started down the river to Cairo. That city is about 1,625 miles from Omdurman, following the bends of the Nile, but General Kitchener covered the distance in three days. His average rate of travel was nearly 500 miles a day, cutting out some of the bends in the Nile.

That is the result of British railway building and British steamships. Before the military railways which have played a great part in the reconquest of the Sudan were opened, it would have taken three weeks of hard riding to reach Cairo from the confluence of the Nile and the Blue Nile. That was about the period consumed by General Gordon when he made his last hurried journey up the Nile on his hopeless mission to Khartoum. Then the strongholds of the Mahdi were very remote and hard to get at from any point occupied by European troops. Now it is a comparatively short and easy railway journey to the upper reaches of the Nile, where there is no trouble in using steamers to cover the rest of the way to Omdurman and the ruins of Khartoum.

It is hardly necessary to say that the railways which England has built up the Nile mean the permanent occupation and control of Egypt and the whole Nile Valley. Such improvements of a military nature, primarily, are not made in any region which a great power expects to evacuate soon.

They seem to be still going against prohibition in Quebec.

Time will tell whether the plans for the proper punishment of Cuba will work. It seems the insurgents won't.

England issuing a blue book about Fashoda will give some color to its claims there.

No wonder the Tons are anxious to sell their gunboats in Cuban waters. A great deal of money has been sunk in such vessels there.

Now it appears that Cuban insurgents don't want to go to work. First they merely asked for limited rations and now they want an indefinite loaf.

In view of the events around Santiago using wines to christen American warships is doubly appropriate. They suggest something being tied up.

Zola's old table sold for more than enough to pay the judgment rendered against him for libel. Being a champion of the oppressed is not such a bad business in France after all.

It is said Salisbury burned his bridges behind him in that Fashoda matter. That's not much. With the navy that Britain's got bridges aren't essential for it to get over water.

Any old time the British lion is reported to be sneaking in the direction of the jungle with his tail half-mast, you may expect to see him return with a large slice of new territory in his jaws.

The Government has withdrawn from sale or lease of mineral rights upon a large number of lots in the Counties of Peterborough, Hastings, Hastings and Renfrew, as a result of the recent discoveries of corundum.

France can't go to war without ruining the prospects of the Paris Exhibition of 1900, and even now Salisbury decide to fight this week without giving the death blow to the Negro's Creek annual fall exhibition.

The projectors of the new hotel in Toronto are trying to arrange with the city for a special water rate and the other hotel men object. How can they make a profit if their competitor gets the chief ingredients in Toronto whisky at a reduced rate?

Having been firmly informed that England will not tolerate France in the Nile Valley, the French suddenly make up their minds that the Fashoda incident was a very trivial matter, anyway. The French are poor bluffers.

BY-LAW No.

A By-law to Aid the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company Limited

Passed the... day of... 1898.

WHEREAS The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, purpose and intend to enlarge their manufacturing establishment in the Town of Peterborough and for that purpose to erect a solid brick building as hereinafter mentioned in connection with their present manufacturing establishment and fit up and equip the same with fixed machinery at a total cost of not less than forty thousand dollars;

AND WHEREAS for the purpose of aiding the said company in the erection and equipment of such building and in the extension of their manufacturing establishment the Corporation of the Town of Peterborough have agreed, subject to this By-law receiving the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, to advance and loan to the said company the sum of thirty thousand dollars, upon the terms and subject to the conditions hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS it will be necessary to borrow the said sum and for that purpose to issue debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars payable as hereinafter set out;

AND WHEREAS there will require to be raised annually by special rate for paying the said debt and interest the sum of Two Thousand One Hundred and Ten Dollars and Eighty-four cents; AND WHEREAS the amount of the said rateable property of the Municipality according to the last revised Assessment Roll, is the sum of Four Million Three Hundred and Three Thousand Three Hundred Dollars;

AND WHEREAS the amount of the existing Debenture Debt of the Municipality is the sum of Two Hundred and Sixty Thousand One Hundred and Sixty-one Dollars and Ninety-six cents and there is no part of the principal or interest thereof in arrear.

THE CORPORATION OF THE TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH

By the Council thereof therefore enacts as follows—

1. This By-law shall be inoperative and of no effect unless and until the same shall have received the sanction of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.

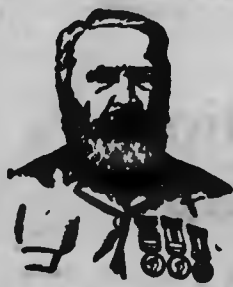

2. Subject to the provisions of the foregoing section this By-law shall take effect on the Thirty-first day of December, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Ninety-eight.

3. It shall and may be lawful for the Mayor and Treasurer to borrow the sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars and to issue debentures of the said Corporation for the said sum under the Corporate Seal and signed by the Mayor and Treasurer of the said Town and countersigned by the Secretary of the Commission of the Peterborough Town Trust, such debentures to be payable in twenty years from the date of the issue of such debentures and to bear interest at the rate of Three and a Half per centum per annum, payable in even portions, half-yearly on the Twentieth day of June and the Twentieth day of December in each year and to have coupons annexed for the payment of such interest, such principal and interest to be payable at the Office of the Commissioners of the Peterborough Town Trust in the Town of Peterborough.

4. The said Debentures shall be issued within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature.

5. The said sum of Thirty Thousand Dollars, realized from the sale of such debentures shall be paid to the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Limited, upon and only on the terms and conditions hereinafter contained.

6. The said Company shall, before becoming entitled to the said money for any part thereof, erect, furnish and equip with fixed machinery in connection with their present manufacturing establishment in the Town of Peterborough a solid brick building not less than one hundred feet by three hundred feet or a superficial area of not less than thirty thousand square feet, at a cost of not less than Forty Thousand Dollars, and have the same in running order in connection with their present manufacturing establishment within one year from the date on which this By-law shall receive the sanction of the Legislature, evidence of the facts aforesaid to be furnished by Statutory Declaration, and shall make, execute and register in form approved by the Council of the said Corporation, the Commission of the Peterborough Town Trust upon the said building and land occupied by the same and fixed machinery therein for securing payment to the said Commissioners, as Trustees for and on behalf of the Sergt. Major J. Kenny, 395 Queen W., Toronto
Sole Manufacturer and Proprietor. Beware of Imitations

TESTIMONIALS:

The following are a few from scores of testimonials the Sergt. Major has from people who have used this preparation:

I, Henry Thomas, Street Car Conductor, residing at 180 Sumner Street, Toronto, do hereby certify that my hair was falling out for eight to ten years until the top of my head was quite bald. I tried every hair preparation on the market and could get nothing to do me any good until I commenced to use Mr. Kenny's Hair Restorer. One bottle stopped the hair falling and started a new growth. I am now using the third One Dollar Bottle, and my hair is growing thick and vigorous all over my head. I can therefore recommend Kenny's Hair Restorer as the best known remedy for restoring the hair on bald heads. I am only using the Hair Restorer since 15th October last.

H. THOMAS, Toronto.

A MILITARY PLOT IS DISCOVERED IN FRANCE

Premier Not Surprised—M. Brisson and Several of His Colleagues Were Aware of the Conspiracy—Action Will be Taken

Paris, Oct. 14.—It is announced here this morning that a military plot against the Government has been discovered. The Rappet, Aurort, and Petite République Franchise publish almost identical stories on the subject. It appears that the plot was discovered by a general holding an important position. The plotters were to have taken action on Saturday, during the absence of the Minister of War, General Chanot. It further appears that when the Government was warned of the plot the Ministers were not surprised, having already obtained information regarding the conspiracy.

The Martin says the plot was not in favor of one of the pretender (the throne of France who has been talked about for some time, but was only for the purpose of changing some officials of the Government without touching the President.

The Premier, M. Brisson, was among those who were not surprised when notified of the plot. He promised to take action in the matter.

LOUIS BONAPARTE CONCERNED.
Paris, Oct. 14.—It is rumored this afternoon that the conspiracy involved Prince Louis Bonaparte, who is a Colonel of Russian Lancers and in whose favor the older brother, Prince Victor Bonaparte, recently resigned the leadership of the Imperialist party. It is added that certain political personages handed the Premier important documents, including a cipher despatch comprising certain military men. The Minister of War has cancelled his intended absence from Paris.

A CRITICAL SITUATION.
London, Oct. 14.—The situation in Paris is regarded in well-informed quarters here as being more serious than at any time since the Commune. The St. James Gazette this afternoon says—"A military revolution however, peaceful, which replaces the Brisson Cabinet with the nominees of the generals would imperil the relations between England and France almost to the breaking point. Even supposing Major Marchand is unconditionally withdrawn from Fashoda, the difficulties with France will in no way end. Behind it lies the whole question of the Bahr El Ghazal, the richest prize in the Soudan."

ZOLA WILL RETURN.

London, Oct. 14.—A Paris despatch to a news agency says it is announced there that M. Zola will return to Paris on Saturday.

WILL BE ANNEXED.

New York, Oct. 14.—A special cable from Paris to the World says—Senor Azaña, a member of the Spanish peace commission, was interviewed today.

"Has the United States demanded the whole Philippine group?" he was asked. "She has not so far," replied Senor Azaña, "and will I think, be content with the Ladrones or part of them, perhaps with Guam, which she has already taken. However, as to this I give only my impression."

"Has not the United States displayed great magnanimity in not demanding indemnity?" "Cuba is indemnity, according to our view. The commissions will not have to consider any question of money indemnity."

"Is there no claim for the Maine?" "That does not fall within the scope of the commissions."

"It is true that a serious hitch has arisen between the commissions and that a break in negotiations is possible?" "This rumor is a ridiculous exaggeration. No hitch has arisen."

"On what ground can Spain ask the United States to assume the Cuban debt?" "Cuba is the key to the Gulf of Mexico, and has long been necessary to the United States. For that reason alone she might take upon herself the Cuban debt."

"When the United States gets Cuba she will instantly secure control of the customs, which will enable her to effect a conversion of the debt and reduce the interest from 6 to 4 percent." "You imply that Spanish relinquishment of sovereignty means American annexation, not Cuban independence."

"Certainly, our relinquishment means the transfer of sovereignty to America with all its rights, therefore also its obligations."

"Does that apply equally to the Philippines and their debt?" "No. That case is absolutely opposite. America would be extremely unwise to start a policy of colonial expansion."

"Taking the Philippines would mean a colonial army, a colonial civil service and more ships."

"But the American people have fully counted the cost."

"They cannot have done so because they do not know. Of course if the United States were seeking to obtain large interests in the Far East the Philippines would be valuable. Such a policy, however, would entail constantly increasing sacrifices and involve international complications of the most onerous description."

THE UNFORTUNATE MULE

The Spaniards owe the mule something for it was a mule that fell gloriously at Mantanzas early in the war and gave the Spaniards a chance to report his death as the sole damage done by the United States at the Battle of Mantanzas. The United States owes the mule much for he has done his best to draw order out of chaos and make up for the deficiencies of men. It is cheering to know that the services and sufferings of the mule are not to pass entirely unnoticed by those in high command in the United States army. The General Oppinger, in his report on the quantity and quality of the supplies furnished the army, says—"The quality of team mules furnished by the department was very good. The treatment they received in many instances was atrocious. Untrained and often brutal teamsters, serving under untrained regimental quartermasters, and the Tampa scandal, under the burning sun, produced the result that might be naturally expected—dead, dying and disabled mules."

PET NAMES FOR RAILWAYS

Patrons and Employees Find It Easier to Use Nicknames

However they may differ in all other respects, railroads are very like human beings in that nearly all of them bear nicknames. Very few of them are dignified by their full titles either by railroad men or by the general public. So great has become the confusion resulting from this use of "pet" names, in fact, that a great press association recently found it necessary to instruct correspondents to use the corporate title of all railroads to which they might have occasion to refer.

Take the Chicago lines for instance. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy is generally known either as the "Burlington" or the "Q." The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, nearly always as the "St. Paul." The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific is known as the "Rock Island." The Chicago and Northwestern is known among financial men as the "North-west." (The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern is always called the "Lake Shore." The New York, Chicago and St. Lewis is always heard of as the "Nickel Plate." "Big Four" invariably designates the Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis. The Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville is called the "Monon." The Indiana, Illinois and Iowa is called the "Three Ps." The Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis is universally called the "Punchline," and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago the "Fort Wayne."

Some of the nicknames are exceedingly original, resulting from peculiar experiences of train hands or officials. Others are given simply as a matter of convenience, the long titles being extremely difficult to speak or write either in conversation or in business documents. It is a curious fact, too, that different nicknames for a number of roads are used by the officials and by the employees.

Newspaper readers will recall the great railway camp in which Senator Bristow was interested some sixteen years ago by which the New York, Chicago and St. Louis was built, paralleling the New York Central for a part of its way. The line was built very rapidly, and the sale of it to the Vanderbilts netted a large profit to the contractors. William H. Vanderbilt was grumbling about its price one day soon after the transfer to him had been made.

"Why, if the 'infernal thing' was nickel plated it couldn't have cost any more," he said. And from that day forward it has been known as the "Nickel Plate."

The Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie is called the "So," an abbreviation of the latter name carrying the correct pronunciation. The "Big Four" nickname came, not because of the four cities named in the corporate title, but from the four consolidation of four different lines, the Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago, the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, the Indianapolis and St. Louis, and the Cairo, Vincennes and Chicago.

The Chicago, Great Western, another Chicago line, is commonly called the "Maple Leaf" because its main lines conform to the woody lines of the leaf of the tree named. The Toledo, St. Louis and Kansas City is called the "Clover Leaf" for the same reason.

The Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific is known everywhere as the "Queen and Greenback," taking its names from the titles of the two cities at its termini.

The Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago is sometimes called by employees "Paddy Finnigan's Wife and Children," on account of the initial letters of the names in the corporate title. The New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio secured the title "Nypno" for the same reason. Likewise the Missouri, Kansas and Texas is generally called the "Katie."

"Brandy and Soda" is a name commonly attached to the Buffalo and Southwestern.

The St. Louis, Arkansas and Texas is known as the "Cotton Belt," the name coming from the chief product of the region it penetrates. "Rise Grass" is the pretty title of the Kentucky Central, given for a like reason. The Southern Pacific is familiarly known as the "Sunset," and that name has been given by the officials themselves to the finest passenger train operated over its rails.

Among railroad men the use of initials to designate railroads is the rule, and it is noticed that this habit is growing on the public. The Baltimore and Ohio has been known for years as the "B. & O." The Union Pacific seldom is called anything but the "U. P." The Delaware and Hudson even in the far west, is designated as the "D. & H." Such examples, however, might be multiplied indefinitely. "We don't blame the public for nicknaming our railroads," said a passenger man. "The policy in naming roads seems to be to work in just as many titles of towns as possible. The result is that the cognomen is a cumbersome one, and it quickly is shortened for convenience. Unless the nickname has come from some peculiar event, it is generally started by railroad men, and from them it travels to the public. I have noticed, too, that few nicknames ever are dropped after they have once been in use. The habit of using these pet names grows and among railroad men it is universal. Two employees of transportation companies will talk for hours without once mentioning the corporate name of a single road. Such names as the 'Nickel Plate,' 'Big Four,' and 'Clover Leaf,' are so commonly used that no one conversing in a hundred who uses them knows the corporate title of the roads to which they are given."

Owing to the discovery that Chicago dealers were securing half-rate tickets, eastward and southern lines yesterday decided that hereafter no soldier rate is to be made except upon presentation of an order signed by a regimental or departmental quartermaster, and giving full information regarding the individual for which the cheap transportation is desired. A similar regulation is being considered by the western passenger men.

General Freight Agent F. A. Wann, of the Chicago and Alton, indignantly denies the report that he has resigned his position on account of ill-health.

Western members of the American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents, who attend the annual meeting in Detroit, October 18, will be the guests of the Michigan Central. General Passenger Agent Ruggles has made elaborate arrangements for their entertainment.

Prospects for a good attendance at the proposed New York meeting for reorganization of the Transcontinental Passenger Association are not bright. A number of western men have telegraphed that they cannot attend and it is not at all certain that the Canadian Pacific will be represented. The meeting was called for October 12. It is probable that it will be postponed.

L. L. Trust has been appointed general passenger agent for the Chesapeake and Ohio road, with headquarters in New York.

An interesting and timely brochure has been issued by the passenger department of the Chicago and Northwestern road, entitled "The Hawaiian Islands." A graphic description of the group is given. It embraces all needed information concerning the topography, climate, productions, mineral resources, religion, educational facilities, population and commerce of the islands.

A meeting of the committee of the Western Passenger Association, appointed to prepare a plan of reorganization is being held. It is not probable it will be able to do more than report progress at the close. The matter is one of such importance that many meetings will be required before the work of the committee is completed.

The St. Louis, Chicago and St. Paul again is in the hands of the United States court. Saturday the Mercantile Trust Company of New York filed a bill in the United States court at Springfield alleging that the road is behind in interest obligations, and at its request William H. Male, of New York, was appointed receiver.

Orders for 5,000 freight cars have been placed within a week. The Chicago and Northwestern will take 3,200 of them, the Burlington 800 and the Northern Pacific 300. There were in addition several smaller lots ordered. This is one of the best evidences of increasing business.

President Burdy of the Rock Island, says the business of that line keeps up remarkably well. Westbound traffic is picking up. September earnings will compare with a very large month of last year, but it is expected that an increase will be shown. President Miller, of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, says business in the west is excellent and money plenty. Grain and lumber traffic is heavy. Passenger traffic, also, is reported as very good.

IN ALSACE.

Salome stood on the bridge which spanned the foaming stream, and gazed dreamily at the mountains beyond, and then at the moon. Salome's room was dimly lit, and she was alone in the pasture she could see her sister, Frederika, making the hay. The girl was not lazy, only dreamy. Presently she was by her sister's side. She caught the look of a bird of prey and carried it to their father's outhouse, for old Dominic was the forester.

The girls worked on, when Salome's uncle of hay was seized and carried off. The girl turned surprised and then was Maria, the young forester. She knew he had come for her father had expected him. Dominic was to teach him forest ways.

"I thought it was Cousin Joseph," said Salome, with a smile, and then Frederika laughed. "We were expecting Joseph for you know he shut for weeks in his factory. Joseph cares less for the grand forest and its wild beauty than he does for gardens and their flowers."

"I do not admire his tastes," answered Maria.

Then home went the two girls, and the man of forest, and as they passed the window of the little house, there was the old mother, and Salome kissed her. Then she stood a little in the background. She now turned back and caught a new bundle of hay. Then she ran after Frederika and took her bundle and carried it for her.

Then the father joined the three young people. Now Frederika, who was the practical sister, went into the house to prepare the evening meal.

"Come along, Morand," said the old forester, "the soup will get cold, and we must milk the cows before we go."

Morand looked in despair; he had never milked a cow in his life. "I have much to learn," he said, pleadingly.

"Supper is ready," said Frederika. As they hastened on, Salome noticed that Morand had stuck in his button-hole a bunch of flowers. They were roses.

"I like roses," Morand said. "I thought you did, Morand," he said.

For a time Morand lived with the forester. The harvest was gathered and there was a good stock of potatoes. The winter was coming along, and a cold one, but the family were prepared to face it. Salome's mother required the girls' constant attention.

Morand watched Frederika from morning till night, engaged in her household cares.

"You will come," he said, softly, to himself.

One night the moon shone in through the frosty windows. Salome sat at the foot of the bed, watching her sleeping mother.

"She looks less pale than yesterday," thought Salome. "Perhaps father is right; she will recover in the spring."

Morand and Frederika were laughing together—sometimes even her father, too—but Salome only sat and watched her mother.

"Take care, my child, take care," the mother feebly murmured as the lights less hand dropped, and over the beloved features came a solemn, terrible beauty. Salome uttered a sharp cry and lost consciousness.

When she came to herself she was beside the kitchen. Morand alone sitting near her.

"Thank God, my child, your mother was not alone when she died," she heard her father say.

Morand at once found the means of sending the sad news to Joseph and Joseph came at once. It was a bitter cold day when the mother was buried in the village graveyard. It was terrible work making their way through the deep snow. It was Joseph who gave Frederika his hand and Morand supported Salome.

"Why, why?" Salome said to herself a thousand times, "all my poor mother and I, 'take care'!"

Father Dominic seemed to take no interest in passing events. His wife was dead.

Then an unusual thing happened. Dominic wrote a letter, and Morand went to the village to post it. In a week afterward Morand had a letter and he read that he had been appointed as forester in another part of the country—or should he prefer it, he said, he remained as Dominic's assistant.

Morand hesitated. The old forester who had guided the contents of the letter had turned aside.

Salome watched both with evident anxiety. Frederika, busy preparing dinner, was the only one who took no heed.

Morand met Salome's inquiring eyes. "I am appointed forester to a place fairly well paid, but a long way from here."

"A long way from here," repeated the old man. "I begged that favor. I wanted to keep you here. I am not the man I once was, my strength does not come back with the spring. I think she must have taken it away with her, all my courage and all my hope."

His daughters tried to comfort him, but he shook his head without replying. Morand precipitately escaped from the room.

When the young man came back his dinner had been laid for him only. But Frederika had taken care that all should be quite comfortable for him, even more so than usual; and she was in the kitchen alone. Morand seized her hands.

"If I go to that far-off place, will you go with me?"

"Wherever you like," said she, simply.

She had hitherto been too busy to think of love. But when Morand took her in his arms a deep joy took possession of poor Frederika.

When later the father came home Frederika simply said to him: "Morand loves me; he wishes me to be his wife."

"God bless you both," said Dominic, and then he asked: "Do you stay or go?"

The father then thought for a moment and added: "Yes, we must expect that you will want a home of your own. That is right. You know pretty well what are the duties of a forester. It is hard for me to part with both of you, but it is better so."

ONLY A LITTLE SHARP THORN.

I am only a little sharp thorn, Hidden beneath the rose. Only a thorn, But the rose is a thorn. Of half the pleasure it gives to those Who pluck it forgetting me.

I was born, just that little sharp thorn— To hide here, under the rose, Only a thorn, But quite forlorn, For my heart-ache nobody knows, And the world can never see.

Do they think that I chose my part? We couldn't each one be a rose, But in sudden smart, From hidden dark, I repay the world for my woes: For I'm only a thorn, you see— And the world is cruel to me.

A SHAKER MAID.

To say that the two occupants of the room entirely corresponded with the room is much better description than merely to say that they were aged Shakers, with hair as white as the whitest silver; that the Shaker elder was tall and vigorous, with keen gray eyes under shaggy brows; that the Shaker maid had gray eyes, illumined by a soul of exalted piety and softened by many sorrows.

The elder's voice, though full and deep, had a hard judicial tone as he spoke.

"Hannah, thou hast been called by Mother Ann to fill a most exalted position. Heretofore thou hast been most exemplary in thy conduct, instructing, admonishing and encouraging. I have no fault to find with thee save in this instance."

He arose in displeasure and regarded her sternly.

Sister Hannah, the leader of the women in the village, as Elder Charles was of the men, was more a mother to them than an elder. Her patient face could be very stern, and her soft voice was sometimes very authoritative.

She sat by her open window, her hands folded in her lap.

"How canst thou?" Elder Charles continued, "find it compatible with thy vows to renounce the vanities and follies of the world, and to add others in so doing, and yet allow the little maid to wear that gay and worldly ribbon?"

A soft knock interrupted them. The door swung open and the little maid in question stepped into the room.

Sister Hannah, in her perplexity, averted her face, while Elder Charles looked uncomprehending.

The girl looked in doubt from one to the other. She had never before come to either of them when they had not welcomed her, always, indeed, in their unemotional style, but with none the less pleasure.

"I fear I intrude upon thee; thou wert speak of those things which I might not hear," she ventured timidly.

"No, my child," replied the elder. "Thou wert the subject of our talk, or rather that worldly ornament that thou worest."

Has Elder Charles been rebuking thee, Sister Hannah? she cried impetuously. "and because of me? See, rather than have one word of blame rest on thee—"

She untied the glossy blue ribbon, smoothed it slowly through her fingers, trying to keep the loose back while she folded it neatly, and laid it in the elder's outstretched hand, then stood with hands folded over her breast and eyes cast down, the meekest of Shaker maidens.

For a moment a look of gratification shone on the old man's face. "Now I see that thou wert only thoughtless, and not vain, as I had feared. Hadst thou an errand with Hannah?"

"Only to tell her that my work is done, and to ask permission to go into the garden."

A grave bow dismissed her and she retired, closing the door behind her.

She paused a moment in the corridor. There was no one to see. The sisters were in their rooms at that hour, and the men were occupied with their work. She was only human and hardly past seventeen. She glanced around to be sure the door was shut, then ran lightly down the length of the corridor and back again and again, then down the stone steps and out on the smooth lawn. She jumped up and down, swinging her arms in perfect abandonment, then sank breathless on the cool green bank.

"There! I feel better," she ejaculated. "I do not think I was meant for a Shaker." Her restless kitten came purring around her. She snatched it up and tied its ears and its tail with bows of ribbon grass. She gathered its long fur into Topsy-turvy knots and tied each with the stripes I green.

"There, my gay and worldly cat, thou art now far too wicked to mingle with the decorous cats of the village. Thou must go with me into the apple tree."

She climbed lightly to her seat on a low limb, too busily engaged to notice Sister Hannah, who stood for a moment in the open door.

Sister Hannah smiled, then sighed and turned quickly back.

"Poor little maid," she murmured, "poor little maid! The battle will be strong with her. She has not been like other maidens since her mother first gave her to my care. Oh, that I may have of thy wisdom, Mother Ann, to guide safely into Household of Faith this child of my dear—"

She paused a moment, then continued her prayer:

"That I may teach her to subdue all carnal desires within her and to live wholly without thought of worldly pleasures and without lust of gain."

Her lips moved in prayer again, and over her face spread a calm, so holy and so beautiful the martyr's might have envied.

Once more she went to the door, and this time she called the little maid:

"Sarah, wouldst thou like to bring the mail? The stage from Lebanon has long ago arrived."

Sarah swung herself from the tree promptly.

"Thou art kind to me," she said, carelessly. "I crave thy pardon if I offended thee."

"Nay, child, I am not offended. I am deeply troubled lest my instructions be not what thou art in need of, and that, through my inability, thou wilt fall to the true faith at last."

Her eyes fell to the cat which Sarah unconsciously still held in her arms, and she smiled involuntarily.

The little maid, blushing confusedly, with one sweep of her hand removed the few grass knots which the cat had allowed to remain. The Maids jumped to the ground and Sarah turned to the street.

"I am wicked," she said slowly, nodding her head emphatically at each word, and her eyes filled with tears of vexation. Her path lay along the maple shaded street connecting the three villages of the settlement.

THIS WONDERFUL YEAR

Whoever concerns himself with history in the making takes all the world for his province, and seldom has there come a year more wonderful than this.

Seen every state in Europe, except Scandinavia and the such communities, face to face with war or internal dissolution—some of them within measurable distance of both. Yet the greatest effects have not been in Europe; 1898 has seen the United States forced, not by any greed of power, but, by its humanitarian ideals, to take its part in European relations. Next in importance to this accession comes a falling off; China has been thrown like a quarry to the armed States of Europe, and the face of the Far East must be strangely altered within the next few years. These two main facts—the rise in the international significance of America and the collapse of China—have brought a host of quick-following consequences. They led directly to the ruin of Spain or it may better be regeneration, but if so, to a salvation as by fire. They have, according to some politicians, made Russia arbitress of the world's destinies, now that she has free right to extend her dominion to the open waters of the Pacific, and enlist the innumerable yellow race. (They have certainly led to the establishment of Germany as a naval power, and they cannot be separated from the boldest attempt yet made to challenge England's naval supremacy—a challenge so promptly answered by Mr. Goshen's supplementary estimates. This, too, has born its fruit, for who shall say how much this naked revelation of the war which is being waged in time of peace a grand coup d'argent—by a desperate contest of expenditure—inspired the czar's unforeseen Rescript, urging disarmament upon Europe. Lastly, the events in America and the events in China, taken together and seen in all their bearings, show themselves likely to be parents of a power that may transform the world—a league of the English-speaking races.

It is for the sake of these far-reaching movements begun in it that we would claim for 1898 to sound a title as "the wonderful year," but in a smaller sense of the word, it has also been a year of sensational events. January opened with rumors of trouble from China, and with all the sudden jealousies aroused by Germany's pounce upon a fragment of the prey. Within the first week of the month Kiaochow was definitely ceded, Russia and France were known to be stirring, and a fortnight later Sir Michael Hicks-Beach inflamed public opinion in this country by a discourse in which he spoke of British interests that must be defended. "If necessary?"

Early in the same month began the first act in the French drama which has been ever since progressing, and has not yet reached its last scene. M. Zola was prosecuted for his savage attack upon the Bretonnais in Crete, when he accused of conspiracy to fix guilt upon an innocent man, Dreyfus. Europe listened in breathless interest to the proceedings, but only saw a court verdict, in defiance of common sense, and the irreversible character of a single decision, and it saw the driving force in French affairs revealed when a whole posse of generals trooped into court—as we know now, at the suggestion of Col. Henry—no denounce Dreyfus, and that the honor of the army was up with the maintenance of the judges. Meanwhile, it was known in England were playing a serious game of bluff in West Africa. It came with a surprise to the House of Commons that when Mr. Chamberlain announced that troops had endeavored to expel from two "Nations"—Wa and— in our hinterland, and had ordered the Union Jack to be hoisted. This was published in a Saturday paper, and the insult to the flag roused the fighting spirit. On the following Monday, Feb. 21, we further learned that the French had moved the Niger into the territories of Sokoto. Was seemed inevitable, and even when M. Hanotaux disavowed the proceeding there was little assurance of peace. The best pacificator was the Chinese Ambassador, which diverted men's minds from the West African business. Among all these excitements an attempt to assassinate the King of Greece, which in any other year would have filled the papers for a week, was merely a secondary item of intelligence. March was even more perturbed than February; the Times' correspondent at Pekin continued to fling bombs, in the shape of telegrams announcing the designs of Russia and the defeat of British policy. Russia's demand for Port Arthur and Tientsin was published on March 12; the West African affair was no nearer settlement; America was arming fast, though the world still doubted of her willingness to abandon the old policy, till the explosion which sent the Maine put an end to all hesitation. And, while all her nations were preparing for a fight, this country was as usual active—dragged in war. The Sirdar's army, lying up the right bank of the Nile, within striking distance of the desert advanced force, and on Good Friday the battle of the Bara was fought. But the habit of success had a kind of indifference here to one more victory over Orientals or Africans, and that battle, though a famous one, was less than any undertaken this year, except its successor at Omdurman, did not rouse half the interest felt over the American war.

The rush for news in the first few days, the wild placarding of triumph because some tramp steamer had been ordered to leave, showed the tension of public curiosity about a modern naval war. Admiral Dewey's destruction of the Spanish fleet at Manila gratified the desire for picturesque detail, and foreshadowed the end. It was a type of the unequal contest between skill and resources against incompetence and bankruptcy. May was crowded with events. A revolution in Italy, taking the shape of bread riots at Milan, Genoa, and Turin, threatened to unsettle the existing order, and showed to the world one more Latin community tottering. In Austria-Hungary, Germans and Slavs were scarcely held from each others' throats, Spain was haunted with a fear of a Carlist rising, and the general preference shown by Europe to the Spanish side, so marked in contrast to the enthusiasm of this country, filled the air with talk of an Anglo-Saxon Alliance. Yet in the height of all this a great man died, and for a week England put aside all other thoughts to show honor to the body of Gladstone. Through June and July Spain and America held the stage, and thrilling news was now wanting. One day it was General Shafter's rash advance upon Santiago, tactically carried through by his troops, next was the amazing and imbecile rush of Admiral Cervera to his destruction. This had at least the effect of checking excitement; the war was evidently over; but there was no falling off in the supply of fresh surprises.

Mr. Hooley's bankruptcy opened a window here that should have made a trifle more reticent about the soiled linen of our neighbors. Then came the horrible story of the wreck of La Bourguigne, where men hacked at drowning women. August began with more sensational telegrams from China about Russia's interference with the Niu-Chwang concession, and for the twentieth time this year Government was urged to show fight. Death was busy, too, and Bismarck followed Gladstone. This was after the Parliament ceased to sit; yet there was hardly time to speculate upon the blank that such a man would leave, for events crowded thicker than ever. On August 24 the least preparation of the public mind, and France was shaken by the news. Czar issued his rescript without delay. On August 30 Col. Henry admitted that "soo in pajo jorum w pajo pjo qj demnation of Dreyfus, and committed suicide. On Sept. 2 the Khalifa's power was finally crushed in the great battle at Omdurman. And in the middle of all this the Pall Mall Gazette announced with considerable detail the existence of an Anglo-German agreement. Since then have come pell-mell on one another M. Carnegie's resignation, a fresh outbreak in Crete, the new outbreak in Cuba, and the assassination of the Empress—an event which may involve Switzerland in considerable trouble.—London Spectator.

PET NAMES FOR RAILWAYS

Patrons and Employees Find It Easier to Use Nicknames

However they may differ in all other respects, railroads are very like human beings in that nearly all of them bear nicknames. Very few of them are dignified by their full titles either by railroad men or by the general public. So great has become the confusion resulting from this use of "pet" names, in fact, that a great press association recently found it necessary to instruct correspondents to use the corporate title of all railroads to which they might have occasion to refer.

Take the Chicago lines for instance. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy is generally known either as the "Burlington" or the "Q." The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, nearly always is called the "St. Paul." The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific is known as the "Rock Island." The Chicago and Northwestern is known among financial men as the "North-west." The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern is always called the "Lake Shore." The New York, Chicago and St. Louis is always heard of as the "Nickel Plate." "Big Four" invariably designates the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis. The Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville is called the "Monon." The Indiana, Illinois and Iowa is called the "Three Ps." The Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis is universally called the "Pittsburgher," and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago the "Fort Wayne."

Some of the nicknames are exceedingly original, resulting from peculiar experiences of train hands or officials. Others are given simply as a matter of convenience, the long titles being extremely difficult to speak or write either in conversation or in business documents. It is a curious fact, too, that different nicknames for a number of roads are used by the officials and by the employees.

Acute Rheumatism

Pains in the Foot and Limb—A Complete Cure Accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"For a number of years I was afflicted with acute rheumatism in my left side and all the way down my limb into my foot. I live five blocks from my work and had to stop and rest several times in going and coming. I could get no relief from my trouble and was on the point of giving up my job when I happened to hear of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I purchased a bottle of this medicine and a trial of Hood's Pills and began taking them. Before I had half finished them I was relieved and it was not long before I was completely cured. I never lost an opportunity to praise Hood's Sarsaparilla, for my cure meant a great deal to me as I have a family and must always be at my post." Newspaper readers will recall the great railway coup in which Senator Bruce was interested some sixteen years ago by which the New York, Chicago and St. Louis was built, paralleling the New York Central for a part of its way. The line was built very rapidly, and the sale of it to the Vanderbilts netted a large profit to the constructors. William H. Vanderbilt was grumbling about its price one day soon after the transfer to him had been made.

"Why, if the infernal thing was nickel plated it couldn't have cost any more," he said. And from that day the road has been known as the "Nickel Plate."

The Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie is called the "So." an abbreviation of the latter name carrying the correct pronunciation. The "Big Four" nickname came, not because of the four cities named in the corporate title, but from the consolidation of four different lines, the Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago, the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, the Indianapolis and St. Louis, and the Cairo, Vincennes and Chicago.

The Chicago, Great Western, and another Chicago line, is commonly called the "Maple Leaf," because its main lines conform to the woody lines of the leaf of the tree named. The Toledo, St. Louis and Kansas City is called the "Clover Leaf" for the same reason.

The Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific is known everywhere as the "Queen and Crescent," taking its names from the titles of the two cities at its terminal.

The Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago is sometimes called by employees "Paddy Finnigan's Wife and Children," on account of the initial letters of the names in the corporate title. The New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio secured the title "Nypno," for the same reason. Likewise the Missouri, Kansas and Texas is generally called the "Katie."

"Brandy and Sala" is a name commonly attached to the Buffalo and Northwestern.

The St. Louis, Arkansas and Texas is known as the "Cotton Belt," the name coming from the chief product of the region it penetrates. "Blue Grass" is the pretty title of the Kentucky Central, given for a like reason. The Southern Pacific is familiarly known as the "Sunset," and that name has been given by the officials themselves to the finest passenger train operating over its rails.

Among railroad men the use of initials to designate railroads is the rule, and it is noticed that this habit is growing on the public. The Baltimore and Ohio has been known for years as the "B. & O." The Union Pacific seldom is called anything but the "U. P." The Delaware and Hudson in the far west is designated as the "D. & H." Such examples, however, might be multiplied indefinitely. "We don't blame the public for nicknaming our railroads," said a passenger man. "The policy in naming roads seems to be to work in just as many titles of towns as possible. The result is that the cognomen is a cumbersome one, and it quickly is shortened for convenience. Unless the nickname has come from some peculiar event, it is generally started by railroad men, and it then travels to the public. I have noticed, too, that few nicknames ever are dropped after they have once been in use. The habit of using these pet names grows, and among railroad men it is universal. Two employees of a transportation company will talk for hours without once mentioning the corporate name of a single road. Such names as the 'Nickel Plate,' 'Big Four,' and 'Clover Leaf,' are so commonly used that not one person in a hundred who uses them knows the corporate title of the roads by which they are given."

Due to the discovery that Chicago swappers have agents dressed as soldiers securing half-rate tickets, eastern and southern lines yesterday decided. Let hereafter no soldier rate is to be made except upon presentation of an order signed by a regimental or departmental quartermaster, and giving full information regarding the individual for which the cheap transportation is desired. A similar regulation is being considered by the western passenger men.

General Freight Agent F. A. Winn, of the Chicago and Alton, indignantly denies the report that he has resigned his position on account of ill-health. Western members of the American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents, who attend the annual meeting in Detroit, October 18, will be the guests of the Michigan Central. General Passenger Agent Ruggles has made elaborate arrangements for their entertainment.

Properly a good attendance at the proposed New York meeting for re-organization of the Transcontinental Passenger Association are not bright. A number of western men have telegraphed that they cannot attend and it is not all certain that the Canadian Pacific will be represented. The meeting was called for October 12. It is probable that it will be postponed. C. L. Truitt has been appointed gen-

Dandruff is Dangerous

When dandruff appears it is usually regarded as an annoyance. It should be regarded as a disease. Its presence indicates an unhealthy condition of the scalp, which, if neglected, leads to baldness. Dandruff should be cured at once. The most effective means for the cure is found in AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. It promotes the growth of the hair, restores it when gray or faded to its original color, and keeps the scalp clean and healthy.

NORWOOD FOR GOOD BUTTER

A Movement to Start a Butter Factory in the Village

In the general uprising for good butter that is taking place throughout the country, the people in the vicinity of Norwood are taking part.

The patrons of the Cheese factory in that place, held a meeting in the town hall on Saturday night for the purpose of discussing the advisability of putting in butter making machinery in the local cheese factory.

Mr. J. L. Squires occupied the chair and there was a good attendance of patrons.

The subjects that engaged the attention of those present were, the understanding as to the cost of making the cost of shipping and the market to be supplied. It was finally agreed that the managers should be allowed 3 1-2 cents per pound for making, and F. O. B. cars. This is a little higher than some places, but will after the factory is thoroughly established be considerably lowered.

Mr. Jas. MacAdam, of the R. A. Leister Co., Montreal, arrived off the evening train and was introduced to those present by the chairman, Mr. Squires.

Mr. MacAdam first discussed the most important points regarding the butter industry and showed the advisability of patronizing advanced systems of dairying. He dwelt at considerable length upon the importance of the care of that important domestic animal, the cow.

The care particularly in the feeding and the manner in which it should be fed was fully explained. The question was asked as to the effect of feeding turnips to the cow, and it was explained that turnips were fed very successfully in other parts of the globe, and with care could be fed here, but not in such large quantities as some feed them at present. It more depends on how the turnips should be fed, and they should be fed with something else.

Some of the dairy authorities remark that turnips contain 85 per cent of water and 5 per cent cotton butter, but Mr. MacAdam's idea is that this water is not well water but a liquid that contains milk, sugar and mineral matter. As a proof of this, bullocks have been fattened on oat straw and turnips alone. The speaker dwelt at length on the benefit of the clover and urged upon farmers to give this more attention, as his opinion is that there are more poor cow feeders, than poor cows.

He quoted from cables received from England, that we are nearly upon the same level with the British goods and to march along in the procession of advancement in the butter business as we have in the cheese, Canadian goods are destined to lead in the English market.

IT WAS DISMISSED

The Case of Baptie vs. Brown Came Up Again on Saturday

The case of Baptie v. Brown, came up at the Police Court Saturday afternoon and was dismissed by Magistrate Dumble.

It will be remembered that this case arose out of Mr. Brown's refusal to have his meat weighed under the provisions of the town by-law, when ordered by Mr. Baptie, the town clerk. The case was enlarged until Saturday, and a good number of farmers and others interested in the decision were present when the case was called.

Mr. E. B. Edwards appeared for the town and R. M. Dennison for Mr. Brown.

Among the witnesses who were called were, John Baptie, W. H. Green, Thos. Brown, James Rush, Andrew Fairgn, John Shannessy and R. H. Nesbitt. They all gave evidence as to the injustice done to the meat men and favored some less troublesome way of protecting the buyer.

Mr. Dumble carefully took down the evidence and will forward the same to the town council and dismissed the case. The following is the Magistrate's letter to the Mayor and Council.

In this case the defendant refused to comply with the market by-law requiring him to weigh his meat and the present case was brought by the market clerk to test the law.

After hearing the evidence I felt it would be wrong to make a conviction as it is impossible under the present conditions to comply with the requirements of the by-law.

I append the evidence taken, that the council may reconsider the by-law with the advantage of the knowledge of the facts set out.

I am satisfied the council want to do what is right for both buyer and seller and that all the difficulties were not before the council or the by-law would be not as it is.

I would suggest that it should not be compulsory to have meat weighed unless the purchaser required it, and that in case where the market trade may be satisfied that there was an attempt to defraud in the weight, there should be power to seize the meat, and fine, as in the by-law. All of which is respectfully submitted.

D. W. DUMBLE.
October 15th, 1898.

OMEMEE HAPPENINGS

Epitome of the News From That Romantic Little Bore

Farmers are very busy taking up their roots and are delighted with the abundant crops, excepting potatoes, the latter article is scarce but some shipping in such quantities to spare to the fine Peterboro market.

—Mr. Wm. Bradburn, merchant, and Mr. Sison, of Bethany, are enjoying a hunt down Pigeon River, under the direction of their guide, Joe Sherwood, who is open for correspondence and business with all sporting people.

—The city butcher store has the finest display of cabbages and other vegetables ever seen, and many say exceeds anything seen at the Agricultural exhibit.

—Messrs. Arthur McCrea, the new proprietor of our furniture store, Ed. Adams, merchant, and D. Stinson, store dealer, are offering great inducement to young people contemplating matrimony.

—A number of four citizens attended the fruit social at Fowler's Corners, Smith, got up by the Presbyterians.

—Thos. Sherwood, an old Omemee boy, is reported having one of the most valuable mines in the Yukon, having been there before the discoveries were made.

—Our Mechanic's Institute is well patronized by the young people, which is one of the best supplied in the country, with the best material, and proves quite an advantage to our High School students.

U.O.O. TEAM WON

They Defeated the Local Colts by a Score of 16 to 0

The Rugby season was formally opened in Peterboro' on Saturday, when the local colts fell easy victims to the big burly fellows from Upper Canada College, by a score of 16 to 0.

The day was rather raw and chilly, and no doubt prevented many from turning out to witness the game. As it was a goodly number of admirers of the game, including not a few of the fair sex, were on hand to cheer the boys along.

A glance at the two teams easily showed that the Collegians had greatly the advantage in weight, which told effectually against the local boys and was to a great extent accountable for the Waterloo that was meted out to them.

The machinery was put in motion by Referee Rev. Mr. Huxell, at 2:30 o'clock when the teams lined up as follows—

UPPER CANADA COLLEGE.

Back—Morrison.
Halves—Jackson, Morrison, Waldie.
Quarter—Foster.
Scrimmages—Boyd, Billings, Treloar.
Wings—Moffat, Wallace, Leacock.
Martin, Stitt, Rutter and Britton.

COLTS.

Back—Geo. Burnham.
Halves—Norman Bell, Garnet Bell, Fred McGrath.
Quarter—A. McClellan.
Scrimmages—Boyd, F. Burnham and Brummette.

Wings—Robt. and Alex. Collins, Charlie Mathias, Harry Morgan, Stanley Brad, E. Maybee, and "Wally" Robinson.

The game was fast at times and occasionally a good exhibition of the game was displayed. At half time the score was 9 to 0 in favor of the visitors and although the local men went in with a determination to even things up, the college boys kept rolling up the points until time was called when the score was 16 to 0 in favor of Upper Canada.

The local men need not feel discouraged as they showed up remarkably well and with a few more matches like Saturday's will be in condition to beat the most of them.

Upper Canada left on the 4:25 C.P.R. for Toronto.

THE CONVENTION CLOSED

Robert Gillies of Havelock is Elected President. A Successful Fair

The Saturday afternoon session of the Peterboro County Teachers' Association opened at 1:30 the President, Mr. W. M. Macdonald, in the chair.

Mr. W. Scott, B. A., of Toronto Normal School, gave a very helpful and interesting address on "Some points in School Management," in the course of which he solved many of the difficulties rising in school management.

We cannot in a printed report do justice to Mr. Scott. His admirable and impressive style of delivery has a great effect on his audience. Besides he knows whereof he speaks, and there is no one who can help the teachers more than Mr. Scott. This is his first visit to Peterboro County Convention, but all expressed the hope that it would not be his last.

The circular from the Ontario Educational Association was discussed and voted on clause by clause. Nearly every clause was sanctioned.

Mr. Scott conducted the question drawer in an able manner. C. Committees were appointed to arrange a limit of work in each subject on the program. These committees will meet as soon as possible and report to the inspector in time to have the limit ready before January, 1899.

The nominating committee reported as follows—

President—Mr. R. Gillies.
Vice-pres—Miss Brighty.
Secretary—Mr. Kindred.
Executive Committee—Mr. Breckenridge, Mr. H. Breckenridge, Miss A. Fraser, Miss A. Nicholl, Miss Ethel Dawson.

Auditors—Messrs. Munroe and Macdonald.

Delegates to O.E.A.—Messrs. Macdonald and Scott.

The hearty thanks of the convention were tendered to Mr. Scott and to all others who had assisted in the convention an din the concert.

After roll-call, "God Save the Queen" was sung and one of the most successful conventions in this county came to a close.

Prevent Pneumonia

Prevention is always better than cure, even when cure is possible. But so many times pneumonia is not cured that prevention becomes the natural act of that instinct of self-preservation which is "the first law of nature." Pneumonia can be prevented and is often cured by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"Some years ago I had a severe cold and was threatened with pneumonia. I could neither eat nor sleep, and was in a wretched condition. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and took it according to the directions, and at the end of fifteen days as well and sound as before the attack. I have recommended it in many cases of pneumonia since, and have never known it to fail in effecting a cure."

JOHN HENRY, St. Joseph, La.

"I was attacked with a cold that settled on my lungs, and defied the skill of my physicians so that they considered me incurable. At last I began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and was entirely cured after having taken two bottles."

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

A Bad Fall

Mr. Peter Thompson, who has been working on the new Ackerman building is lying at the Nicholls hospital suffering from a fractured leg.

He was working, standing on a plank a considerable distance from the floor, when he lost his balance and fell to the cellar. He is now recovering from his accident which was not a more serious one.

An Accomplished Organist

Mr. Rogers, organist, who officiated at both services at St. John's church, Sunday, in the absence of Mr. Owens, discharged the duties imposed upon him in a highly satisfactory manner. His rendition of the various numbers was most creditable and deserving of the highest praise. A touching and touching nature, notwithstanding its unexpectedness, was much appreciated.

A Great Strain of Luck

It is said the publishers of the "Family Herald and Weekly Star," Montreal, have secured for the subscribers to the "Family Herald" that wonderful picture "The Thin Red Line." This is Great Britain's most celebrated battle picture. If the "Family Herald and Weekly Star" has secured this picture it is a wonderful piece of good luck, for the picture is a gem unequalled in point of merit in the world to-day.

Laid at Rest

The funeral of the late Frederick Yelland, fifth son of ex-Mayor Yelland, took place yesterday afternoon and was attended by a large concourse of friends and relatives.

The deceased who was 37 years of age had been an invalid for many years but was throughout his sickness a cheerful sufferer. The deepest sympathy is expressed for the bereaved family in their sad affliction.

AN OCTOBER WEDDING

Miss Nellie Muncester and Mr. A. M. Smith Voted in Marriage, Yesterday

An event of more than ordinary interest, took place at St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday morning when Miss Nellie Muncester, of Charlottetown, S. Carolina, and grand daughter of Mr. John Delaney, of town, was united in marriage to Mr. Arthur Milton Smith, of the Sadler Leather Belt Company Montreal.

The Rev. Father O'Sullivan was the officiating clergyman, and the bride was assisted by Miss Delaney, while Mr. Sydney Smith, of the Bank of Montreal, head office, acted in a like capacity for the groom.

The bride who was charmingly attired in a pattern of Cuban blue broadcloth, beautifully gotten up with trimmings to match, was given away by her father, who came all the way from South Carolina to witness the event.

Afterwards the wedding party, consisting only of relatives of the bride and groom, repaired to the residence of Mr. John Delaney, where a sumptuous wedding dinner was served.

The happy couple left on the noon train for Montreal where they will in future reside.

THE TIRELESS GOUGHS

Their Splendid Exhibit at the Central Fair—Up-to-date as usual

In noticing the special exhibit made by Gough Bros. at the Central Fair, we might say that these two institutions go hand-in-hand. They are never apart and both thrive, because they give the people plenty for their money. And that's what the average man and woman want in this age. This enterprising clothing firm had the main building to themselves as far as displays of clothing were concerned. The exhibit was remarkably excellent. Some fine suits and overcoats, caught the eye of those who stopped to inspect the display and there were very few who did not. For Gough is as attractive as the strongest magnet. The advances made in the quality of ready-made clothing is remarkable and now a man can dress himself in a suit that looks stylish, fits well, and wears as long as any ordered suit, for a good deal less than half price. Clothing is a big account in a year when clothing such as that shown by Gough Bros. can be purchased at a popular price, the trade must go to them and it does. Gough's name wears and so does his clothing.

MR. FITZGERALD'S RETURN

He Had Great Luck Shooting in the Western Frontier

Mr. Tob Fitzgerald arrived home yesterday from the Northwest, where he had been on the display of wild fowl that he had on exhibition in front of his office yesterday afternoon, he had abundance of luck in the shooting line.

On the sidewalk in front of Mr. Fitzgerald's display almost every species of birds that inhabit the western provinces. Forty-four wild geese excellent examples of this feathered bird were viewed by a large number of people. In addition to this he has prairie chickens, magpies, mud hens, wild ducks and other birds which he brought home to have mounted.

Mr. Fitzgerald left here on the 13th September and spent most of the time around Log Lake, and Buffalo Lake, near Regina.

Mr. P. Morgan, circulation manager of the Syracuse Journal, is in town for a few days visiting his brother-in-law, Mr. Harry Strickland.

Miss Bryson a graduate of the Nipissing Hospital Training School for Nurses, has secured a position in one large New York hospital.

Mr. Will. Turnbull, son of Mr. J. C. Turnbull has just returned from a trip to the Northwest for three months duration. Mr. Turnbull is most favourably impressed with the Territories and will in all likelihood return there in the spring to take up ranching.

Rev. C. B. Kendra, rector of St. Mark's church, Port Hope formerly of Peterborough, is expected home about the middle of November. The reverend gentleman is at present in Baden-Baden, Germany, a celebrated health resort. Until the beginning of this month he was at Ragad, Switzerland. Mr. Kendra's friends will be glad to hear that as a result of the medical treatment he has been receiving at these places under the advice of Sir Douglas Powell M. D., of London, Eng., his health is slowly improving and it is confidently anticipated that when he returns to Peterboro he will be able to take up his work with renewed vigor.

A SPLENDID EXHIBIT

The Peter Hamilton Mfg. Co. Make a Splendid Exhibit at the Fair

A splendid exhibit of agricultural implements and machinery at the Norwood Fair on Wednesday and it attracted much attention among the farmers. Machinery plays such an important part in the work and success of agriculture to-day that the up-to-date farmer must keep his eye on the improvements made. The Peter Hamilton Co. by their large exhibit at the exhibition gave the farmers an opportunity of inspecting the latest and most improved machinery, for the company is abreast of the times. This year they met a Hamilton light steel binder; a new leader seeder; an Elastic spring cultivator, which has six sections with one lever operating the whole machine; a patent hay rake; Rival mower, reaper cut new No. 5 mower which can lift to raise or lower, which gives the driver full control of the knives with his feet; No. 5 Enslage cutter capable of cutting a ton in ten minutes; No. 4 Enslage cutter, capable of cutting and elevating a ton in ten minutes; No. 4 Enslage cutter, No. 6 hand straw cutter with concave knife and adjustable feed roller; No. 4 pulper and silencer combined; No. 3 pulper with six knives and capable of cutting a bushel and a half a minute; a Corn sheller, a garden plow, a turn drill, seven different styles of walking plow and a Star gang plow, a set of spring tooth harrows and a set of diamond tooth harrows. The machines all bore evidence of the excellent workmanship and finish which the Peter Hamilton Co. put on all their machines. They keep up to date in improvements, use nothing but the best materials and have the skilled labor to give workmanship and finish.

LADY BURNED TO DEATH

While Trying to Save Her Valuables

ANOTHER FATALLY BURNED

A Disastrous Fire in Cornwall Caused by a Defective Chimney

The House was Occupied by Mrs. William McDonald Some Exciting Scenes Were Witnessed

Cornwall, Oct. 18.—The residence of Mrs. Wm. McDonald, at the corner of Pitt and Fourth streets, was totally destroyed by fire this morning, and one of the occupants, Miss Annie McHamish McDonald, lost her life, while another, Wm. Williamson, received terrible injuries, and will probably die. The fire is supposed to have started from a detective chimney, with an open fireplace in the parlor. The falling of pictures in the parlor aroused Mrs. McDonald about 2.30 a.m., and she and her daughter got up, thinking some one had broken into the house. When they discovered that the house was on fire they took Miss Annie McDonald then went back upstairs and aroused her two nephews, J. McPhail, of St. Andrew's, and Wm. Williamson, and her brother-in-law, A. McDonald.

By this time the whole downstairs was on fire and in making her escape she was badly burned about the face and arms. McPhail and A. A. McDonald escaped unhurt, but Williamson must have lost her way, and when he finally came through the fire he was so badly burned about the head, body and limbs that his recovery is doubtful.

Meanwhile the old lady, Miss Annie McDonald, disappeared, and although the fire brigade were making heroic efforts, it was some time before any one could get into the upper part of the house, where they finally found her body. It appears that being left alone at the front door she went back back upstairs to save her valuables. She must have opened them and started

He must have leaved them and started out, but missed her way in the smoke, and was suffocated for her body, along with the worth $10 in money, and a deposit receipt for $1200, her life savings, were found in another room. The house, which was formerly

A Disastrous Fire in Cornwall Caused by a Defective Chimney

The House Was Occupied by Mrs. William

Cornwall, Oct. 18.—The residence of Mrs. Wm. McDonald, at the corner of Pitt and Fourth streets, was totally destroyed by fire this morning, and one of the occupants, Miss Annie McHamish McDonald, lost her life, while another, Wm. William on, received terrible injuries and will probably die.

The fire is supposed to have started from a defective chimney, with an open fireplace in the parlor. The falling of pictures in the parlor aroused Mrs. McDonald about 2:30 a.m., and she and her daughter got up, thinking some one had broken into the house. When they discovered that the house was on fire they took Miss Annie McDonald then went back upstairs and aroused her two nephews, J. McPhail, of St.

By this time the whole downstairs was on fire and in making her escape she was badly burned about the face and arms. McPhail and A. A. McDonald escaped unburnt but Williamson and escaped unhurt, but the woman must have lost her way, and when he finally came through the fire he was so badly burned about the head, body and limbs that his recovery is doubtful. (

Meanwhile the old lady, Miss Annie

McDonald, disappeared, and although the fire brigade were making heroic efforts, it was some time before any one could get into the upper part of the house, where they finally found her body. It appears that being left alone, she fought her way out back was educated in Glasgow University, and Hanover College, Indiana, where he graduated with the highest honors. He was ordained in Jersey City in 1858. In 1862 he accepted a call to Zion church in Brantford, where his untiring labors, energy and wide popularity built up a large congregation, whose love and confidence he always enjoyed. And his activity covered not only his pastoral work. For fourteen years he was clerk of was clerk of Paris Presbytery. For 25 years he has been clerk of the synod of Hamilton and London, and for about the same period convener of the Home Mission Committee of the church. He always took a deep interest in every worthy public object. He was president of the Merchants' Institute, and was once president of the

There is universal sorrow at the unexpected and terribly sudden termination of an active and useful life. His death leaves a blank in the church, and especially in the city and congrega-

J. L. HAYCOCK HAS A NEW IDEA

At a meeting of the Ontario Grassland Board, Mr. Haycock, late leader of the Grassland party in the Ontario Legislature, spoke at some length on the magnitude of the grass industry. He said that at election time so much is said of the great manufacturing industries, that the grass industry is almost entirely forgotten. He said that the export of grass is more than double that of all other industries combined.
While tariffs are being framed to foster trade industries, grass has been brought to its present high mark without the slightest protection. The duty is simply nominal one, while the duties on raw material entering in the manufacture of these are very heavy.

The grass industry, he asserted, stands out as a monument of a business conducted on business principles.
It has been built up solely on its merits.

Mr. Haycock remarked that in one of the countries of Western Ontario farmers were going extensively into hog raising for the bacon trade. The Canadian bacon industry, he said, was becoming a most important one, and he wondered if the trade could not be promoted in just the same way as the bacon trade. That is the farmers to kill their hogs at certain days and to have them cured at factories on their own account. He thought that the pig-raisers might be benefited in this way and the suggestion was forced on him from the fact that the price of hogs had decreased in Canada 20 per cent. during the past few months, whereas in Great Britain the price of hogs had only fallen 5 per cent.

WHY PROHIBITION IS IMPRAC- TICABLE

The seizure of a private still in Harbourton County, together with a large quantity of its product, was recorded in the Times a few days ago. The business was carried on in a thick grove, and had so far escaped observation. It is BLACKBIRD'S GRAVE.

LAST RESTING PLACE OF THE FA-MOUS INDIAN CHIEF.

On a Bluff That Is Now Inside the City of Omaha—On Its Summit the Chief Watched For His White Friends—No more of the Omaha-Ponca Feud.

Omaha has within her city limits an unknown and uncared for historic spot which in a few decades will be looked upon with far more interest than it has in the past or is now, for the distance of historical places grows with the distance in time from the events which made them historic. This spot, which is in Omaha, and yet has been forgotten and neglected by the city, is the grave of the famous Omaha chief, Blackbird, who was a Washington Irving thought worthy of a place in his writings. This chief lived in the latter part of the last century, dying in 1798. In those days, according to Irving, the Omahas looked upon themselves as the most powerful and perfect of human beings, and considered all created things as made for their peculiar use and benefit. The leader of this tribe, Blackbird, or Wash-ing-gub-sh-be, was a warrior of the highest class. Early in life he had been taken a prisoner by the Sioux, where he had his metal tested. Under his leadership the Omahas then sent out his son among the other tribes, and he never had possessed before. The Pawnee having inflicted an insult upon an Omaha brave, Blackbird led his men against their town and slaughtered many of the inhabitants and burned it to the ground. He also waged a severe war against the Otomuni until peace was effected by the interference of the whites.

Yet, notwithstanding his fiery disposition, he fell a victim to Cupid's dart. The Poncas had ruled the Omaha tribe and carried off many of their women and children. Blackbird took the field with his sworn determination of saving up his enemy. So fiercely did the battle rage that the Poncas began to sue for mercy. A herald was sent out with the pipe of peace, but he was shot down by Blackbird. A second herald was sent, but he also was killed. Blackbird then sent out his daughter, arrayed in all her glory and bearing the calumet of peace. Her charms conquered. A treaty was made, and Blackbird married the herald. She became his favorite wife, yet nevertheless in one of his unmanageable fits of rage he killed her with a single blow of his knife.

No sooner did he see her lying dead at his feet than his anger left him, and for three days he sat by her corpse—silent, motionless and fasting on food. On the third day his people began to fear that he intended to starve himself to death and entreated him to be comforted. He paid no attention to their entreaties, and at last a warrior brought a little child into his presence and placed it beneath the chief's foot. This appeal brought him to himself, and, arising, he made a speech to his followers and sent them to bury his wife as easily as he had taken her on. In 1798 the smallpox swept over Nebraska, and Blackbird was one of its victims. The following description of his death and burial is quoted from Washington Irving's
"Astoria":

"When the general horror and dismay were at their height, Blackbird himself was struck down with the maledy. The poor savages gathered around his bed and forgot their own miseries. His dominant spirit and love for the white men were manifested in his last moments. He resisted his people's efforts to bury him, and, when he was finally carried to his grave, he was laid on a hill or promontory of 400 feet high, overlooking a great extent of the Missouri river, from whence he had been accustomed to watch for the boats of the white men. The Missouri washed the base of the promontory, and after winding and doubling in many loops and mazes in the plain below returned to within 900 yards of its starting point, so that for 80 miles navigating with sail and oar the voyager finds himself continually near to this singular promontory as if spellbound.

It was the dying command of Blackbird that his tomb should be on the summit of this hill, in which he should be interred, seated on his favorite horse, that he might overlook his ancient domain and rehearse the tale of the white men as they came up the river or across the prairie.
His dying orders were faithfully obeyed.
His corpse was placed astride of his war steed and a mound raised over them on the summit of the hill. On the top of the mound was erected a staff from which floated the banner of the Omaha and the scalp that he had taken in battle. When the expedition under Mr. Hunt visited that part of the country (1802), the staff still remained, with the fragments of the banner, and the superstitious rite of placing food from time to time upon the mound for the use of the deceased was still observed by the Omahas.

"That promontory is now within the city limits of Omaha," says Dr. Mercey,
"and I located the grave 80 years ago.
When I came to Omaha 80 years ago, the river wound around in the shape of an S, and this promontory upon which I found the grave exactly answers to the description given by Irving. It is in the south part of the city, and Williams street would run through it if extended to the river. Just east of it, and under the bluff is a brickyard, the roof of which reaches nearly up to the top of the hill.

"The Omaha camp was located in the bottom beneath the bluff and a little to the north. This point was Blackbird's favorite place for sitting to watch for the coming of the traders with whom he was very friendly. No doubt, he came here to greet them most friendly, made them open up their goods and selected what he wanted himself. Then he called in his tribe and compelled them to trade. The whites made up for their gifts to him by the extra charge they put upon the goods sold, and not an Indian dared kick. The chief had got his bribe and his people had to pay for it.

"There is another story about the old fellow. He was an extraordinary man, and would run upon supernatural things. When he posed as a kind of god, but after while some of his people grew skeptical of his superhuman power and refused to obey him. This difficulty he consulted his friend, the white trader, and they told him to prophesy the death of all who disobeyed him. He did so, announcing according to instructions that all who were disobedient would die a mysterious death upon a certain day. When that day came, he invited the whole tribe in to dine with him, and put a dose of arsenic in the bowl of each man whom he wished to serve as an example of his godlike power.
Of course they died. From that time on his power was never questioned, and the people who put him up to the trick and slandered the spirit died a more horrible death than those who had been warned.

SINCE THE TROLLEY'S COME TO TOWN.

Ring out the loud romance and do the job up brown. For at last we have a trolley running through the town. The farmers stop their haying and wonder at the sight. For the way the mass go scooting is a revelation quite. Their clanging and their bumping all other noises drown. For they make an awful racket a-running through the town.

The old town doesn't seem the same. It's mighty bright and gay. And every one can celebrate its resurrection day. 'Twas buried many years ago, and buried good and deep. But now it has awakened from its Rip Van Winkle sleep. And every hour of the day the cars run up and down. And every one is tickled now the trolley's come to town.

There's two new bells a-going up, excite and everywhere. And a mild form of paroxysm seems to permeate the air. The benefits to be derived have surely taken root. While real estate has risen to fifteen cents a foot. And all the wimmin folks have bought a brand new muslin gown. For they're bound to cut a figure now the trolley's come to town.

AN EERIE EPISODE.

It was at a masquerade at Galinier's studio in one of the old Roman palaces. There were music, the tripping sound of dancing feet, laughter and the unintelligible hum of conversation mingled in a gay medley.

Carson, an American, a new arrival in the city and a stranger to that colony of sculptors and painters, had been accidentally separated from the friend who brought him in the crowd shortly after his entrance to the ballroom.

He was wandering listlessly among the merry makers, quite regardless of their gibes and laughter at his expense. Tired at length of his aimless peregrinations, he turned aside from the glaring lights and heat to the shade and coolness of the balcony.

The wide casements at the end of the room were open and gave an unobstructed view of the kaleidoscopic scene within. A divan near the balustrade offered a place for repose, but it was not until he was seated that he was aware of the presence of a lady. She occupied the farther end of the divan and was partially concealed by the drooping tree ferns and palms with which the balcony was decorated. She moved slightly in her nest of tricolored cushions, and her fan fell with a slight clatter upon the stone floor.

Carson picked it up and gave it to her with a courteous bow. She thanked him, speaking in English, with just the slightest Italian accent.

"I fear that I am intruding, signora," he said.

"Not so. The balcony is free to all who come. There can be no intrusion." She reached up her hand as she spoke and pushed aside the feathery branches that swayed between them. Then he saw that she was young and very fair to look upon.

Her face was decidedly English. She wore an indescribable swathing garment of soft texture that was gathered up closely about her neck and fell to her feet in long, clinging folds—strongly suggestive of a Bernhardt costume. Two beautifully shaped arms were bare to the shoulder, and the small hands that lay in her lap looked as though they had been modeled in wax.

She leaned back, resting her head upon the stuccoed pillar, her fan waving languidly to and fro.

"Permit me," said the American, taking the dainty lace and ivory trifle from her hand and fanning her gently. She smiled a gracious assent, and then began talking.

It was so warm in the ballroom and one grew so tired dancing, she said. Did the gentleman dance? Perhaps he was not acquainted with many ladies—a stranger in Rome? Was he an artist or a sculptor?

"Neither, signora. I am an attaché."

"From what country—England?"

"No—America."

"America! Ah, that marvelous land!" She chatted on in an open, friendly manner until a bevy of tired dancers invaded their retreat. Among them was his friend Tarro.

"Great heavens, Carson! Where have you been? I have looked everywhere for you. Everybody is unmasking, and it is time for supper. No doubt you are starving. Come, I have secured a table, and you are to meet some charming women. What have you been doing here all alone? It was exceedingly stupid in me to get separated."

"I have not been alone," replied Mr. Carson. He glanced around, but the lady was gone.

"Not alone? Why, who was with you?"

"The lady. Did you not see her when you came?"

"A cousin, my dear boy. I saw no lady. No, you sat there moaning, staring in a most sentimental manner at that Moorish lantern hanging over there. Come along. They are waiting for us."

They lingered long over their supper. There were merry, high pitched talking and much laughter, but Carson was not in a state of hilarity. His restless, bored glance wandered over the assembly, and once he started and turned sharply in his chair at the low voice of a woman who, with her escort, passed close beside him.

Tarro tried to rally him on his abstraction, but his brow contracted fretfully, and he nervously fingered a spray of flowers that lay by his plate. He was not sorry when the ball was over and he found himself on the pavement outside of the palace.

A cab was waiting, but without knowing why he declined to accompany his friend, saying he preferred to walk to his hotel. He sauntered along slowly, with bowed head, absently staring at the dim shadows cast by the waning moon. As he was passing across the Piazza de Farnese he heard a low voice speaking:

"So we meet again!"

He halted. She, his new acquaintance, was beside him.

"Signora! You here at this hour and alone? Where are your friends?"

She smiled. "You will walk with me to the street below, will you not?"

"Certainly. But your friends—their carelessness is criminal."

They walked through the square and down several streets almost in silence. Presently she stopped before the entrance of a house.

"Here, signor!" she said.

Almost simultaneously she swayed forward and caught his arm, at the same time uttering a smothered cry.

"You are hurt!" he exclaimed anxiously. "You have twisted your ankle on those wretched stones."

"I fear so." She pressed her hand upon her bosom and looked into his eyes with mute appeal.

"You cannot walk." He stooped and gathered her up into his arms. "I will carry you. Which floor?"

"The fourth," she replied, her face flushing as the light of the early day fell upon it.

A drowsy janitor answered his ring. He ascended the first flight of stairs without pausing, carrying her as a nurse might a child, happy at the delicious touch of her bare arms against his neck as she clasped him.

On the second flight ascent was not so easy. Her weight grew heavier, and the head that had now fallen on his shoulder pressed like a ball of iron, her arms were relaxing their clasp and lay against his neck with startling coldness. She seemed to be letting herself go, and at each step grew heavier in proportion.

He was no longer carrying a limber maiden, but something burdensome and horrible—something that was bearing him down and suffocating him with a sensation as though his chest was bursting.

On the third landing he felt her slipping.

"Signora," he faltered.

He sought to renew his hold, but the burden, now a dead weight, slid from his arms, and she fell with a heavy thud to the floor.

"What noise is this?" called a masculine voice in Italian.

Carson began a hasty explanation to the man, whose head protruded from a partially open door.

The man came forward and bent over her.

"She does not belong here," he said. "She is a stranger. She is pale as death. Unfasten her clothing. She must have fainted. Where is the janitor? The fool! He never is here when he is needed. Call him, signor, and send for a physician." His hasty hand broke the knot of ribbon that confined her bodice.

With a wild exclamation he instantly loosened his hold on her dress and started backward. The full throat and white bust were exposed. There were deep bluish purple lands around the throat and a gaping dagger wound, dark with coagulated blood, on the snowy bosom.

Their cries aroused the janitor, who hastened to call the police. Presently he returned, panting up the stairs, accompanied by an officer. Carson drew aside the curtain, and the bright light of day fell upon the body.

"Holy Virgin!" cried the policeman as he saw the dead woman.

"Can you identify her?" asked Carson.

"Yes," returned the man. "She is the woman who was found murdered on the Corso night before last. How came she here?"—M. M. Halm in Argos.

His Wife Was.

A Georgia man, who was unpopular in his community, insured his life for $2,000. He took the policy home to his wife and said:

"Maria, here's a life insurance document for $2,000."

"Thank you, dear," said his wife. "How are you feeling today?"

"Not well," he replied, "and I don't think I am long for this world. I want to say to you that when I die it is my wish that you devote $1,000 of the money to defraying my funeral expenses."

"Mercy on me," exclaimed the wife, "why do you want such an expensive funeral?"

"I'll explain. I'm perfectly satisfied that nobody will attend my funeral, and I want to hire people to go as much as a head. I'm going out today and see what arrangements I can make for attendants on that forthcoming melancholy occasion. If they won't come gratis, why—I'll just hire 'em on a give 'em an order on you for the money."

He went forth and at nightfall returned with a dejected look.

"Maria," he said, "it's no use. You can have the whole $2,000. Just go to my funeral yourself."—Atlanta Constitution.

De Leogre Station.

M. Fromet has finished the head of the enormous statue of the late Comte Ferdinand de Leogre which is to be placed at the entry of the Suez canal. The canal project is to be represented standing, covered with an Arab burnoose, and pointing toward the new waterway opened up to navigation. On one of the sides of the pedestal—which is to have a granite foundation—will be a medallion containing the portraits of the khedives who patronized the canal.

Seeing One'sself.

Next to the power of standing outside oneself and looking at me as other folks see me the most remarkable is this (of by the insight of genius and imagination) becoming you. The first makes one sometimes only too reasonable, the second warms the heart and enriches the soul, for it gives the charm of selfhood to beings not ourselves.—Jean Ingelow.

ONLY A LITTLE SHARP THORN.

I am only a little sharp thorn. Hidden beneath the rose. Only a thorn. But the rose is short. Of half the pleasure it gives to those Who pluck it forgetting me.

I was born, just this little sharp thorn—To hide here, under the rose. Only a thorn. But quite forlorn. For my heart-ache nobly knows, And the world can never see.

Do they think that I chase my part? We couldn't each one be a rose. But in sudden snarl, From hidden dart, I repay the world for my woes: For I'm only a thorn, you see—And the world is cruel to me.

A SHAKER MAID.

To say that the two occupants of the room entirely corresponded with the room is much better description than merely to say that they were aged Shakers, with hair as white as the whitest silver; that the Shaker elder was tall and vigorous, with keen gray eyes under shaggy brows; that the Shaker maid had gray eyes, illumined by a soul of exalted piety and softened by many sorrows.

The elder's voice, though full and deep, had a hard judicial tone as he spoke.

"Hannah, thou hast been called by Mother Ann to fill a most exalted position. Heretofore thou hast been most exemplary in thy conduct, instructing, admonishing and encouraging. I have no fault to find with thee save in this instance."

He arose in displeasure and regarded her sternly.

Sister Hannah, the leader of the women in the village, as Elder Charles was of the men, was more a mother to them than an elderess. Her patient face could be very stern, and her soft voice was sometimes very authoritative.

She sat by her open window, her hands folded in her lap.

"How canst thou?" Elder Charles continued, "find it compatible with thy vows to renounce the vanities and follies of the world, and to add others in so doing, and yet allow the little maid to wear that gay and worldly ribbon?"

The door swung open and the little maid in question stepped into the room.

Sister Hannah, in her perplexity, averted her face, while Elder Charles looked uncomprehending.

The girl looked in doubt from one to the other. She had never before come to either of these when they had not worn, of hair, always, in their traditional, unchangeable style, but with none the less pleasure.

"I fear I intrude upon thee; thou wert speaking of those things which I might not hear," she ventured timidly.

"No; nay, child," replied the elder. "Thou wert the subject of our talk, or rather that worldly ornament that thou worest."

"Has Elder Charles been rebuking thee, Sister Hannah?" she cried impetuously. "And because of me? See, rather than have one word of blame rest on thee—"

She untied the glossy blue ribbon, smoothed it slowly through her fingers, trying to keep the ends back while she folded it neatly, and laid it in the elder's outstretched hand, then stood with hands folded over her breast, and eyes cast down, the meekest of Shaker maidens.

For a moment a look of gratification shone on the old man's face. "Now I see that thou wert only thoughtless, and not vain, as I had feared. Hadst thou an errand with Hannah?"

"Only to tell her that my work is done, and to ask permission to go into the garden."

A grave bow dismissed her, and she retired, closing the door behind her.

She paused a moment in the corridor. There was no one to see. The sisters were in their rooms at that hour, and the men were occupied with their work. She was only human and hardly past seventeen. She glanced around to be sure the door was shut, then ran lightly down the length of the corridor and back again and again, then down the stone steps and out on the smooth lawn. She jumped up and down, swinging her arms in perfect abandonment, then sank breathless on the cool green bank.

"There! I feel better," she ejaculated. "I do not think I was meant for a Shaker."

Her restless kitten came purring around her. She snatched it up and tied its ears and its tail with bows of ribbon grace. She gathered its long fur into tupeyish knots and tied each with the striped grass.

"There, my gay and worldly cat, thou art now far too wicked to mingle with the decorous cats of the village. Thou must go with me into the apple tree."

She climbed lightly to her seat on a low limb, too busily engaged to notice Sister Hannah, as she stood for a moment in the open door.

Sister Hannah smiled, then sighed and turned quickly back.

"Poor little maid! The battle will be strong with her. She has not been like other maidens since her mother first gave her to my care. Oh, that I may have of thy wisdom, Mother Ann, to guide safely into Household of Faith this child of my dear—"

She paused a moment, then continued her prayer.

"—that I may teach her to subdue all carnal desires within her and to live wholly without thought of worldly pleasures and without lust of gain."

Her lips moved in prayer again, and over her face spread a calm, so holy and so beautiful the martyr might have envied.

Once more she went to the door, and this time she called the little maid.

"Sarah, wouldst thou like to bring the mail? The stage from Lebanon has long ago arrived."

Sarah swung herself from the tree promptly.

"Thou art kind to me," she said, carelessly, "I crave thy pardon if I offended thee."

Her eyes fell to the cat which Sarah unconsciously still held in her arms, and she smiled involuntarily.

The little maid, blushing confusedly, with one sweep of her hand removed the few green knots which the cat had allowed to remain. The Maids jumped to the ground and Sarah turned to the street.

"I am wicked," she said slowly, nodding her head emphatically at each word, and her eyes filled with tears of vexation.

Her path lay along the maple shaded street connecting the three villages of the settlement.

Scrofula is Snake-Like

In its subtlety. It lies hidden for years in the ambush of the blood, and when it strikes it voids its venom alike on strength and beauty, disfiguring the one and undermining the other.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is a specific for scrofula in its worst and most malignant forms. Scrofula is a blood disease. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a blood purifying medicine. Mineral medicines only drive scrofula below the surface. Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a vegetable remedy and it eradicates the disease. There is no remedy for scrofula equal to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"I was cured of a long-standing case of scrofula by Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The disease first manifested itself when I was a child, by breaking out in red blotches all over my body. I was not free from the trouble until I took several bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. That effected a permanent cure."—Mrs. B. H. SUTHER, Lehigh, Pa.

—General Superintendent McGuigan of the G. T. R. is going over the northern division of the system, accompanied by Divisional Freight Agent A. White and Northern Superintendentiffin.

—A party of surveyors are going over the route of the proposed extension of the Bancroft & Ironside R.R., which will run eastward through Hastings, Northern Frontenac and Lanark, to Owen's Ferry at Brockville, over the St. Lawrence by the new bridge being built there, and on to New York.

Our Butter Market

We are informed from good authority that Mr. James McAdam, who has been in town for some time in the interests of the R. A. Leister Co., of Montreal, has made arrangements with his father, who has been long connected with the Glasgow Bazaar, Scotland, the leading cheese and butter market of that country, for the shipment of unlimited quantities of fine creamery butter to that market. This company have also a large West Indian trade established and handle enormous quantities of this line of goods. A Times reporter had a conversation with Mr. McAdam and that gentleman states that he expects to establish a very large trade for Canadian produce through this channel, and will make Peterboro his headquarters for this season, 1898.

This will certainly prove a boon to the farmers of this locality who make dairying a leading feature of their farming pursuits. Mr. McAdam is well known in the channels of dairying in Canada, and has won the laurels in this line for many years with honors, and is highly endorsed by the best authorities in this country.

THE BY-LAW CARRIED

The Wm. Hamilton Company have the People of Peterborough With Them. As was expected the by-law to loan the Wm. Hamilton Co. $30,000 for the erection of a new plant, etc., has been carried by a good majority.

The vote polled was not a very large one but the number of votes polled against the by-law was exceptionally small, being only 42, as against 491 in favor of the loan.

The vote was as follows—

	For	Against
Ward No. 1	123	23
Ward No. 2	102	5
Ward No. 3	158	7
Ward No. 4	108	7
Total	491	42

Majority, 449. Out of a possible 1500 votes, 533 were polled. This was 182 votes more than was polled on the last money by-law, when the ratepayers decided in favor of raising money for bridges and a steam roller. On that occasion only 341 voters exercised their franchise. The by-law was carried by a majority of 95.

The result of yesterday's voting proves conclusively that the people of Peterboro are willing to assist their manufacturing industries when called upon to do so, and the Wm. Hamilton Co. can feel satisfied that the people of Peterboro appreciate their enterprise.

HOME FROM SANTIAGO

Mr. J. K. Hunter, of Otonabee, Back From the War.

Mr. J. K. Hunter, son of the late Wm. Hunter, of Otonabee, returned to the Times office the other day and gave us a brief account of the exciting scenes he had passed through during the past few months.

Mr. Hunter left his home in Otonabee some ten years ago and took up his abode in San Francisco. When the war broke out he being a naturalized citizen of the United States, enlisted for a term of two years, in Company E, 33rd Infantry, and in a few days his corps was moved to Camp Alger near Washington from which point they were embarked for Cuba when they arrived on June 27th, landing at San Juan, 14 miles from Santiago. The regiment to which Mr. Hunter belonged was sergeant of his Company. He landed on Monday and engaged in the following Friday, engaged in a fierce battle, and was in all the fighting until peace was declared.

Mr. Hunter says that the troops were without shelter during the wet season, when rain was descending every day in torrents, and the food was unbearable. Hundreds of sick and wounded soldiers were without proper nourishment and shelter. Yellow fever, that terrible scourge of the South, was carrying off its victims daily.

On September 4th, Mr. Hunter and his comrades set sail for home, where they arrived in due course. They were the boldest lot of men that could possibly be gathered together, being completely worn out, and in rags.

EDWARDS FOUND GUILTY

He Was Committed to Stand His Trial at the Next Assizes.

Matthew Edwards, who is loved a horse and cart from Mr. Larush and Keene to take in the morning, and who came to Peterboro the same night and wild the outfit, was yesterday morning committed to stand his trial at the next spring assizes.

Matthew, although not possessed with an abundance of legal talent, conducted his own defense. It was very weak, however, and the case for the prosecution a very strong one.

Mr. Larush told of having lent the horse on Thursday to the prisoner, who was to have returned it the same evening, but the next time he saw his animal was on Saturday on the farm of Mr. O'Brien's in Duro.

Mr. Cronan told how he bought the horse, cart and harness from Edwards for seven dollars and produced a receipt signed by the prisoner, to substantiate his statement. Shortly afterwards he sold the outfit to Jack Clancy for $10.00. Clancy then gave evidence as to his having sold the horse to O'Brien for $15.

Edwards had very little to say in defence, but will no doubt have his brief carefully prepared after spending a while in the county jail waiting until the next assizes.

A Nervous Toronto Woman Walked the Floor During the Night for Hours at a Time—She Makes a Statement.

TORONTO, ONT.—"I was troubled with nervousness. It was impossible for me to keep still and if the spells came over me during the night I had to get up and walk the floor for hours at a time. My blood was very poor and I was subject to bilious attacks. My feet would swell and I was not able to do my own housework. I treated with two of the best physicians here but only received relief for a time. I became discouraged. One day a friend called and advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I laughed at the advice but I was prevailed upon and procured one bottle. Before I used it all I began to feel better. I took several bottles and also several boxes of Hood's Pills. Now I can eat and drink heartily and sleep soundly. Hood's Sarsaparilla has entirely cured me and also strengthened me so that I now do all my own work. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all sufferers from nervousness, weakness or general debility." Mrs. H. F. PARK, Degraw Street.
